PREFACE.

THE main object which I have proposed to myself in this volume is to collect, translate, and illustrate the principal passages in the different Indian books of the greatest antiquity, as well as in others of comparatively modern composition, which describe the creation of mankind and the origin of classes, or which tend to throw light upon the manner in which the caste system may have arisen.

I have not, however, hesitated to admit, when they fell in my way, such passages explanatory of the cosmogonic or mythological conceptions of the Indians as possess a general interest, although not immediately connected with the chief subject of the book.

Since the first edition appeared my materials have so much increased that the volume has now swelled to more than twice its original bulk. The second and third chapters are almost entirely new.¹ The fourteenth and fifteenth sections of the fourth chapter are entirely so. Even those parts of the book of which the substance remains the same have been so generally expanded that comparatively little continues without some alteration of greater or less importance.

In order that the reader may learn at once what he may expect to find in the following pages, I shall supply here a fuller and more connected summary of their contents than is furnished by the table which follows this preface.

The Introduction (pp. 1-6) contains a very rapid survey of the sources from which our information on the subject of caste is to be derived, viz. the Vedic hymns, the Brāhmaṇas, the Epic poems, and the Purāṇas, in which the chronological order and the general characteristics of these works are stated.

The first chapter (pp. 1-160) comprehends the mythical accounts of the creation of man and of the origin of castes which are to be found in the Vedic hymns, in the Brāhmaṇas and their appendages, in the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, and the Purāṇas. The first section (pp. 7-15) contains a translation of the celebrated hymn called Puruṣa Sūkta, which appears to be the oldest extant authority for attributing a separate origin to the four castes, and a discussion of the question whether the creation there described was intended by its author to convey a literal or an allegorical sense. The second, third, and fourth sections (pp. 15-34) adduce a series of passages from the works standing next in chronological order to the hymns of the Rig-veda, which differ more or less widely from the account of the creation given in the Puruṣa Sūkta, and therefore justify the conclusion that in the Vedic age no uniform orthodox and authoritative doctrine existed in regard to the origin of castes. In the fifth section (pp. 35–42) the different passages in Manu's Institutes which bear upon the subject are quoted, and shewn to be not altogether in harmony with each other. The sixth section (pp. 43–49) describes the system of great mundane periods called Yugas, Manvantaras, and Kalpas, as explained in the Purāṇas, and shews that no traces of these periods are to be found in the hymns of the Rig-veda, and but few in the Brāhmaṇas (compare p. 215 f.). Sections seventh and eighth (pp. 49–107) contain the accounts of the different creations, including that of the castes, and of the primeval state of mankind, which are given in the Viṣṇu, Vāyu, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, together with references (see pp. 52 ff., 68 ff.) to passages in the Brāhmaṇas, which appear to have furnished some of the germs of the various Puranic representations, and a comparison of the details of the latter with each other which proves that in some respects they are mutually irreconcilable (see pp. 65 ff., 102 ff.). The ninth section (pp. 107–114) adduces the accounts of Brahmā's passion for his daughter, which are given in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Matsya Purāṇa. In the tenth section (pp. 114–122) are embraced such notices connected with the subject of this volume as I have observed in the Rāmāyaṇa. In one of the passages men of all the four castes are said to be the offspring of Manu, a female, the daughter of Dakṣa, and wife of Kaśyapa. The eleventh section contains a collection of texts from the Mahābhārata and its appendage the Harivañśa, in which various and discrepant explanations are given of the existing diversity of castes, one of them representing all the four classes as descendants of Manu Vaivasvata (p. 126), others attributing the distinction of classes to an original and separate creation of each, which, however, is not always described as occurring in the same manner (pp. 128 ff. and 153); whilst others, again, more reasonably, declare the distinction to have arisen out of differences of character and action. This section, as well as the one which precedes it, also embraces accounts of the perfection which prevailed in the first yugas, and of the gradually increasing degeneracy which ensued in those that followed. The twelfth section (pp. 155–158) contains extracts from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, which coincide for the most part with those drawn from the other authorities. One text, however, describes mankind as the offspring of Aryaman and Mātṛikā; and another distinctly declares that there was originally but one caste. The thirteenth section (pp. 159 f.) sums up the results of the entire chapter, and asserts the conclusion that the sacred books of the Hindus contain no uniform or consistent theory of the origin of caste; but, on the contrary, offer a great variety of explanations, mythical, mystical, and rationalistic, to account for this social phenomenon.

The second chapter (pp. 160–238) treats of the tradition of the descent of the Indian nation from Manu. The first section (pp. 162–181) contains a series of texts from the Rig-veda, which speak of Manu as the progenitor of the race to which the authors of the hymns belonged, and as the first institutor of religious rites; and adverts to certain terms employed in the hymns, either to denote mankind in general or to signify certain tribal divisions. The second section (pp. 181–196) adduces a number of legends and notices regarding Manu from the Brāhmaṇas and other works next in order of antiquity to the hymns of the Rig-veda. The most interesting and important of these legends is that of the deluge, as given in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, which is afterwards (pp. 216 ff.) compared with the later versions of the same story found in the Mahābhārata and the Matsya, Bhāgavata and Agni Purāṇas, which are extracted in the third section (pp. 196–220). Some remarks of M. Burnouf and Professor Weber, on the question whether the legend of a deluge was indigenous in India, or derived from a Semitic source, are noticed in pp. 215 f. The fourth section adduces the legendary accounts of the rise of castes among the descendants of Manu and Atri, which are found in the Purāṇas; and quotes a story given in the Mahābhārata about king Vitāhavya, a Kshattriya, being transformed into a Brāhman by the mere word of the sage Bhṛigu.

In the third chapter (pp. 239–295) I have endeavoured to shew what light is thrown by a study of the hymns of the Rig- and Atharva-vedas upon the mutual relations of the different classes of Indian society at the time when those hymns were composed. In the first section (pp. 240–265) the various texts of the Rig-veda in which the words brāhmān and brāhmaṇa occur are cited, and an attempt is made to determine the senses in which those words are there employed. The result of this examination is that in none of the hymns of the Rig-veda, except the Purusha Sūkta, is there any distinct reference to a recognized system of four castes, although the occasional use of the word Brāhmaṇa, which is apparently equivalent to Brāhmā-putra, or “the son of a priest,” and other indications seem to justify the conclusion that the priesthood had already become a profession, although it did not yet form an exclusive caste (see pp. 258 f., 263 ff.). The second section (pp. 265–280) is made up of quotations from the hymns of the Rig-veda and various other later works, adduced to shew that persons who according to ancient Indian tradition were not of priestly families were in many instances reputed to be authors of Vedic hymns, and in two cases, at least, are even said to have exercised priestly functions. These two cases are those (1) of Devāpi (pp. 269ff.), and (2) of Viśvāmitra, which is afterwards treated at great length in the fourth chapter. This section concludes with a passage from the Matsya Purāṇa, which not only speaks of the Kshattriyas Manu, Iḍa, and Purūravas, as “utterers of Vedic hymns” (mantra-vādinah); but also names three Vaiśyas, Bhalanda, Vandya, and Sankīrtti, as “composers of hymns” (mantra-kṛitah). The third section (pp. 280–289) shews by quotations from the Atharva-veda that at the period when those portions of that collection which are later than the greater part of the Rig-veda were composed, the pretensions of the Brāhmans had been considerably developed. The fourth section (pp. 289–295) gives an account of the opinions expressed by Professor

R. Roth and Dr. M. Haug regarding the origin of castes.

The fourth chapter (pp. 296-479) contains a series of legendary illustrations derived from the Rāmāyana, the Mahābhārata, and the Purāṇas, of the struggle which appears to have occurred in the early ages of Indian history between the Brāhmans and the Kshattriyas, after the former had begun to constitute an exclusive sacerdotal class, but before their rights had become accurately defined by long prescription, and when the members of the ruling caste were still indisposed to admit their pretensions. I need not here state in detail the contents of the first five sections (pp. 296-317) which record various legends descriptive of the ruin which is said to have overtaken different princes by whom the Brāhmans were slighted and their claims resisted. The sixth and following sections down to the thirteenth (pp. 317-426) contain, first, such references to the two renowned rivals, Vasisṭha and Viśvāmitra as are found in the hymns of the Rig-veda, and which represent them both as Vedic rishis; secondly, such notices of them as occur in the Brāhmaṇas, and shew that Viśvāmitra, as well as Vasisṭha, had officiated as a priest; and, thirdly, a series of legends from the Rāmāyana and Mahābhārata which describe the repeated struggles for superiority in which they were engaged, and attempt, by a variety of fictions, involving miraculous elements, to explain the manner in which Viśvāmitra became a Brāhman, and to account for the fact which was so distinctly certified by tradition (see pp. 361 ff.), but appeared so unaccountable in later ages (see pp. 265 f., 364 ff.), that that famous personage, although notoriously a Kshattriya by birth, had nevertheless exercised sacerdotal functions.² The fourteenth section (pp. 426–430) contains a story from the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa about king Janaka, a Rājanya, renowned for his stoical temperament and religious knowledge, who communicated theological instruction to some eminent Brāhmans, and became a member of their class. In the fifteenth section (pp. 431–436) two other instances are adduced from the same Brāhmaṇa and from two of the Upanishads, of Kshattriyas who were in possession of truths unknown to the Brāhmans, and who, contrary to the usual rule, became the teachers of the latter. The sixteenth section (pp. 436–440) contains an extract from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa regarding king Viśvantara who, after at first attempting to prevent the Syāparṇa Brāhmans from officiating at his sacrifice, became at length convinced by one of their number of their superior knowledge, and accepted their services. In the seventeenth section (pp. 440–442) a story is told of Matanga, the spurious offspring of a Brāhman woman by a man of inferior caste, who failed, in spite of his severe and protracted austerities, to elevate himself (as Viśvāmitra had done) to the rank of a Brāhman. The eighteenth section (pp. 442–479) contains a series of legends, chiefly from the Mahābhārata, regarding the repeated exterminations of the Kshattriyas by the warlike Brāhman Paraśurāma of the race of Bhṛigu, and the ultimate restoration of the warrior tribe, and a variety of extravagant illustrations of the supernatural power of the Brāhmans, related by the god Vāyu to king Arjuna, who began by denying the superiority of the priests, but was at length compelled to succumb to the overwhelming evidence adduced by his aerial monitor.

² As I have omitted in the body of the work to say anything of the views of Signor Angelo de Gubernatis about the purport of the Vedic texts relating to Vasishṭha and Visvāmitra, I may state here that this young Italian Sanskritist, in his Essay, entitled “Fonti Vediche dell’Epoica” (see the Rivista Orientale, vol. i. pp. 409 ff., 478 ff.), combats the opinion of Professor Roth that these passages refer to two historical personages, and to real events in which they played a part; and objects that Roth “took no account of the possibility that a legend of the heavens may have been based upon a human foundation” (p. 409). Signor de Gubernatis further observes that the 33rd and 53rd hymns of the third Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda “may perhaps have been recited at a later period in connection with some battle which really occurred, but that the fact which they celebrate seems to be much more ancient, and to be lost in a very remote myth” (p. 410). Visvāmitra, he considers, is one of the appellations of the sun, and as both the person who bears this name, and Indra are the sons of Kuśika, they must be brothers (p. 412. See, however, the remarks in p. 347 f. of this volume on the epithet Kausika as applied to Indra). Sudās, according to Signor de Gubernatis (p. 413), denotes the horse of the sun, or the sun himself, while Vasishṭha is the greatest of the Vasus, and denotes Agni, the solar fire, and means, like Visvāmitra, the sun (p. 483). Signor de Gubernatis is further of opinion (pp. 414, 478, 479, and 483) that both the 33rd and 53rd hymns of the third, and the 18th hymn of the seventh Maṇḍala are comparatively modern; that the names of Kuśikas and Visvāmitras claimed by the authors of the two former, are fraudulently assumed; while the last (the 18th hymn of the seventh Maṇḍala) was composed by a sacerdotal family who claimed Vasishṭha as its founder. I will only remark that the theory of Signor de Gubernatis appears to me to be an improbable one. But the only point of much importance for my own special purpose is that ancient Indian tradition represents both Vasishṭha and Visvāmitra as real personages, the one of either directly divine, or of sacerdotal descent, and the other of royal lineage. They may, however, have been nothing more than legendary creations, the fictitious eponyms of the families which bore the same name.

In the fifth chapter (pp. 480–488) I have given some account of the opinions entertained by Manu, and the authors of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, regarding the origin of the tribes dwelling within, or adjacent to, the boundaries of Hindustan, but not comprehended in the Indian caste-system.

The sixth and concluding chapter (pp. 489–504) contains the Puranic accounts of the parts of the earth exterior to Bhāratavarsha, or India, embracing first, the other eight Varshas or divisions of Jambudvīpa, the central continent ; secondly, the circular seas and continents (dvīpas) by which Jambudvīpa is surrounded ; and, thirdly, the remoter portions of the mundane system.

The Appendix (pp. 505–515) contains some supplementary notes.

As in the previous edition, I have been careful to acknowledge in the text and notes of this volume the assistance which I have derived from the writings of the different Sanskrit Scholars who have treated of the same subjects. It will, however, be well to specify here the various publications to which I have been indebted for materials. In 1858, I wrote thus : “ It will be seen at once that my greatest obligations are due to Professor H. H. Wilson, whose translation of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, with abundant and valuable notes, derived chiefly from the other Purāṇas, was almost indispensable to the successful completion of such an attempt as the present.” In this second edition also I have had constant occasion to recur to Wilson’s important work, now improved and enriched by the additional notes of the editor Dr. Fitz-edward Hall. It is to his edition, so far as it has yet appeared, that my references have been made. I acknowledged at the same time the aid which I had received from M. Langlois' French translation of the Harivaṁśa, and from M. Burnouf's French translation of the first nine books of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, which opened up an easy access to the contents of the original works. A large amount of materials has also been supplied to me, either formerly or for the preparation of the present edition, by Mr. Colebrooke's Miscellaneous Essays; by Professor C. Lassen's Indian Antiquities; Professor Rudolph Roth's Dissertations on the Literature and History of the Vedas, and contributions to the Journal of the German Oriental Society, and to Weber's Indische Studien, etc.; Professor Weber's numerous articles in the same Journals, and his History of Indian Literature; Professor Max Müller's History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, Chips from a German Workshop, article on the Funeral rites of the Brāhmins, etc.; Professor Benfey's Glossary of the Sāma Veda, and translations of Vedic hymns; Dr. Haug's text and translation of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa: while much valuable aid has been derived from the written communications with which I have been favoured by Professor Aufrecht, as well as from his Catalogue of the Bodleian Sanskrit MSS. I am also indebted to Professor Müller for pointing out two texts which will be found in the Appendix, and to Professor Goldstücker for copying for me two passages of Kumārila Bhaṭṭa's Mīmamsā-vārttika, which are printed in the same place, and for making some corrections in my translations of them.

I formerly observed that at the same time my own researches had “enabled me to collect a good many texts which I had not found elsewhere adduced ;” and the same remark applies to a considerable portion of the new matter which has been adduced in the present edition.

INTRODUCTION

CONTAINING A PRELIMINARY SURVEY OF THE SOURCES OF INFORMATION.

I PROPOSE in the present volume to give some account of the traditions, legends, and mythical narratives which the different classes of ancient Indian writings contain regarding the origin of mankind, and the classes or castes into which the Hindus have long been distributed. In order to ascertain whether the opinions which have prevailed in India on these subjects have continued fixed and uniform from the earliest period, or whether they have varied from age to age, and if so, what modifications they have undergone, it is necessary that we should first of all determine the chronological order of the various works from which our information is to be drawn. This task of classification can, as far as regards its great outlines, be easily accomplished. Although we cannot discover sufficient grounds for fixing with any precision the dates of these different books, we are perfectly able to settle the order in which the most important of those which are to form the basis of this investigation were composed. From a comparison of these several literary records, it will be found that the Hindus, like all other civilized nations, have passed through various stages of development,—social, moral, religious, and intellectual. The ideas and beliefs which are exhibited in their oldest documents, are not the same as those which we encounter in their later writings.

The principal books to which we must look for information on the subjects of our enquiry are the Vedas, including the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads, the Sūtras, the Institutes of Manu, and the Itihāsas and Purāṇas. Of these different classes of works, the Vedas are allowed by all competent enquirers to be by far the most ancient.

There are, as every student of Indian literature is aware, four Vedas,—the Rig-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Yajur-veda, and the Atharva-veda. Each of the collections of works known as a Veda consists of two parts, which are called its mantra and its brāhmaṇa.¹ The Mantras are either metrical hymns, or prose forms of prayer. The Rig-veda and the Sāmaveda consist only of mantras of the former description. The Brāhmaṇas contain regulations regarding the employment of the mantras, and the celebration of the various rites of sacrifice, and also embrace certain treatises called Āraṇyakas, and others called Upanishads or Vedāntas (so called from their being the concluding portions of each Veda), which expound the mystical sense of some of the ceremonies, and discuss the nature of the godhead, and the means of acquiring religious knowledge with a view to final liberation.

The part of each Veda which contains the mantras, or hymns, is called its Sanhitā.² Thus the Rig-veda Sanhitā means the collection of hymns belonging to the Rig-veda. Of the four collections of hymns, that belonging to the last-mentioned Veda, which contains no less than 1,017 of these compositions, is by far the most important for historical purposes. Next in value must be reckoned those hymns of the Atharva-veda, which are peculiar to that collection, another portion of which, however, is borrowed, in most cases, verbatim, from the Rig-veda.³

³ For further information on the Vedas, reference may be made to Professor Max Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature, passim, and also to vols. ii. iii. and iv. of the present work.

From this succinct account of the contents of the Vedas, it is clear that the Mantras must constitute their most ancient portions, since the Brāhmanas, which regulate the employment of the hymns, of necessity pre-suppose the earlier existence of the latter. On this subject the commentator on the Taittirīya, or Black Yajur-veda, Sanhitā thus expresses himself (p. 9 of the Calcutta edition):—

Yadyapi mantrabrāhmaṇātmake vedas tathāpi brāhmaṇasya mantravyākṛhāna-rūpatvād mantrā evādaṁ samāmnātāḥ | “Although the Veda is formed both of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa, yet as the Brāhmaṇa consists of an explanation of the Mantras, it is the latter which were at first recorded.”⁴

The priority of the hymns to the Brāhmanas is accordingly attested by the constant quotations from the former which are found in the latter.⁵ Another proof that the hymns are far older than any other portion of Indian literature is to be found in the character of their language. They are composed in an ancient dialect of the Sanskrit, containing many words of which the sense was no longer known with certainty in the age of Yāska, the author of the Nirukta,⁶ and many grammatical forms which had become obsolete in the time of the great grammarian Pāṇini, who refers to them as peculiar to the hymns (chhandas).⁷ A third argument in favour of the greater antiquity of the mantras is supplied by the fact that the gods whom they represent as the most prominent objects of adoration, such as Indra and Varuṇa, occupy but a subordinate position in the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, whilst others, viz., Viṣṇu and Rudra, though by no means the most important deities of the hymns, are exalted to the first rank, and assume a different character, in the Puranic pantheon.⁸

On all these grounds it may be confidently concluded that the mantras, or hymns, of the Rig-veda are by far the most ancient remains of Indian literature. The hymns themselves are of different periods, some being older, and some more recent. This is shown not only by the nature of the case,—as it is not to be supposed that the whole of the contents of such a large national collection as the Rig-veda Saṃhitā should have been composed by the men of one, or even two, generations,—but also by the frequent references which occur in the mantras themselves to older rishis, or poets, and to older hymns.⁹ It is, therefore, quite possible that a period of several centuries may have intervened between the composition of the oldest and that of the most recent of these poems. But if so, it is also quite conceivable that in this interval considerable changes may have taken place in the religious ideas and ceremonies, and in the social and ecclesiastical institutions of the people among whom these hymns were produced, and that some traces of these changes may be visible on comparing the different hymns with each other.

No sufficient data exist for determining with exactness the period at which the hymns were composed. Professor Müller divides them into two classes, the Mantras or more recent hymns, which he supposes may have been produced between 1000 and 800 years,—and the older hymns, to which he applies the name of Chhandas, and which he conceives may have been composed between 1200 and 1000 years,—before the Christian era. Other scholars are of opinion that they may be even older (see Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 572, and the Preface to the 4th Vol. of the same author's edition of the Rig-veda, pp. iv.-xiii). This view is shared by Dr. Haug, who thus writes in his introduction to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, p. 47: "We do not hesitate, therefore, to assign the composition of the bulk of the Brāhmaṇas to the years 1400-1200 B.C.; for the Saṃhitā we require a period of at least 500-600 years, with an interval of about two hundred years between the end of the proper Brāhmaṇa period. Thus we obtain for the bulk of Saṃhitā the space from 1400-2000; the oldest hymns and sacrificial formulas may be a few hundred years more ancient still, so that we would fix the very commencement of Vedic literature between 2000-2400 B.C."

⁹ See vol. ii. of this work, pp. 206 ff., and vol. iii. pp. 116 ff., 121 ff.

Next in order of time to the most recent of the hymns come, of course, the Brāhmaṇas. Of these (1) the Aitareya and Sāṅkhāyana are connected with the Rig-veda; (2) the Tāṇḍya, the Panchaviṃśa and the Chhāndogya with the Sāma-veda; (3) the Taittirīya with the Taittirīya or Black Yajur-veda; (4) the Satapatha with the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā or White Yajur-veda; and (5) the Gopatha with the Atharva-veda.¹⁰ These works, written in prose, prescribe, as I have already intimated, the manner in which the Mantras are to be used and the various rites of sacrifice to be celebrated. They also expound the mystical signification of some of the ceremonies, and adduce a variety of legends to illustrate the origin and efficacy of some of the ritual prescriptions. That in order of age the Brāhmaṇas stand next to the Mantras is proved by their simple, antiquated, and tautological style, as well as by the character of their language, which, though approaching more nearly than that of the hymns, to classical or Pāṇinean Sanskrit, is yet distinguished by certain archaisms both of vocabulary and of grammatical form which are unknown to the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.¹¹ The most recent portions of the Brāhmaṇas are the Aranyakas and Upanishads, of which the character and contents have been already summarily indicated. The remaining works which form the basis of our investigations come under the designation of Smṛiti, as distinguished from that of Śruti, which is applied to the Mantras, Brāhmaṇas, Aranyakas, and Upanishads.

The term Smṛiti includes (1) the Vedāṅgas, such as the Nirukta of Yāska, (2) the Sūtras or aphorisms, śrauta and grihya, or sacrificial and domestic, etc., (3) the Institutes of Manu, (4) the Itihāsas and Purāṇas. To the class of Itihāsas belong (1) the Rāmāyaṇa (said to be the work of Valmīki), which contains an account in great part, at least, fabulous, of the adventures of Rāma, and the Mahābhārata, which describes the wars and adventures of the Kurus and Pāndus, and embraces also a great variety of episodes and numerous mythological narratives, as well as religious, philosophical, and political discussions, which are interwoven with, or interpolated in, the framework of the poem. This work is said to be the production of Vyāsa, but its great bulk, its almost encyclopædic character, and the discrepancies in doctrine which are observable between its different parts, lead inevitably to the conclusion that it is not the composition of a single author, but has received large additions from a succession of writers, who wished to obtain currency and authority for their several opinions by introducing them into this great and venerated repository of national tradition.¹²

The Purāṇas are commonly said to be eighteen in number, in addition to certain inferior works of the same description called Upapurāṇas. For an account of these books and a summary of their contents, I must refer to the late Professor H. H. Wilson's introduction to his translation of the Vishṇu Purāṇa.¹³

In treating the several topics which are to be handled in this volume, I propose in each case to adduce, first, any texts bearing upon it which may be found in the hymns of the R̥g-veda; next, those in the Brāhmaṇas and their appendages; and, lastly, those occurring in any of the different classes of works coming under the designation of Smṛiti. By this means we shall learn what conceptions or opinions were entertained on each subject by the oldest Indian authors, and what were the various modifications to which these ideas were subjected by their successors.

CHAPTER I.

MYTHICAL ACCOUNTS OF THE CREATION OF MAN, AND OF THE ORIGIN OF THE FOUR CASTES.

It will be seen from the different texts to be adduced in this chapter, that from a very early period the Indian writers have propounded a great variety of speculations regarding the origin of mankind, and of the classes or castes into which they found their own community divided. The most commonly received of these explanations is the fable which represents the Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, to have been separately created from the head, the breast or arms, the thighs, and the feet of the Creator. Of this mythical account no trace is to be found in any of the hymns of the Rig-veda, except one, the Purusha Sūkta.

Although for reasons which will be presently stated, I esteem it probable that this hymn belongs to the most recent portion of the Rig-veda, it will be convenient to adduce and to discuss it first, along with certain other texts from the Brāhmaṇas, Itihāsas, and Purāṇas, which professedly treat of the origin of mankind and of caste, before we proceed to examine the older parts of the hymn-collection, with the view of ascertaining what opinion the authors of them appear to have entertained in regard to the earliest history of their race, and to the grounds of those relations which they found subsisting between the different classes of society contemporary with themselves.

SECT. I.—90th Hymn of the 10th Book of the Rig-veda Saṁhitā, called Purusha Sūkta, or the hymn to Purusha.

This celebrated hymn contains, as far as we know, the oldest extant passage which makes mention of the fourfold origin of the Hindu race.

In order to appreciate the character of this passage, we must consider it in connection with its context. I therefore quote the whole of the hymn :¹⁴

R. V. x. 90. 1. Sahasra-śīrshā Puruṣaḥ sahasrākṣaḥ sahasrapāt | sa bhūmim viśvato vṛitrā atyatiśṭhad daśāṅgulam | 2. Puruṣaḥ credaṁ sarraṁ yad bhūtaṁ yachcha bhāryam | utāmrītatrasyeśāno yad annenātirohati | 3. Etārān asya mahimā ato jyāyāmscha Pūruṣaḥ | pādo 'sya viśvā bhūtāni tripād asyāmrītaṁ divi | 4. Tripād ūrdhva ud ait Pūruṣaḥ pādo 'syachābharat punaḥ | tato viśvān vyakrūmat sāśanānaśane abhi | 5. tasmād Vīrāḥ ajāyata Vīrājo adhi Pūruṣaḥ | sa jāto aty arichyata paśchād bhūmim atho puraḥ | 6. Yat Puruṣeṇa haviṣhā devāḥ yajnam atanrata | vasanto asyāsīt ājyam grīṣhmaḥ idhmaḥ śarad haviḥ | 7. Tuṁ yajnam barhishi praukshan Puruṣaṁ jātam agrataḥ | tena devāḥ ayajanta sādhyāḥ ṛishayaś cha ye | 8. Tasmād yajnāt sarvakutaḥ sambhṛitam pṛishadājyam | paśūn tāms chakre vāyavyān āranyān grāmyāś cha ye | 9. Tasmād yajnāt sarvakutaḥ ṛichaḥ sāmāni jajñire | chhandāmsi jajñire tasmād yajus tasmād ajāyata | 10. Tasmād āsvā ajāyanta ye ke cha ubhayādataḥ | gāvo ha jajñire tasmāt tasmāj jātāḥ ajārayaḥ | 11. Yat Puruṣaṁ vi adadhuh katidhā vi akalpayan | mukham kim asya kau bāhū kū ūrū pādū uchyete | 12. Brāhmaṇo 'sya mukham āsīt bāhū rājanyaḥ kṛitāḥ | ūrū tad asya yad vaiśyaḥ padbhyāṁ śūdro ajāyata | 13. chandramāḥ manaso jātāś chakṣhoḥ sūryo ajāyata | mukhād Indrāś cha Agniś cha prāṇād Vāyur ajāyata | 14. Nābhyāḥ āsīt antarikṣham śīrshoḥ dyauḥ samavarttata | padbhyām bhūmir diśaḥ śrotrāt tathā lokān akalpayan | 15. Saptāsyāsan paridhayaś triḥ sapta samidhaḥ kṛitāḥ | devāḥ yad yajnam tanvānāḥ abadhnan Puruṣam paśum | 16. Yajneṇa yajnaṁ ayajanta devāś tāni dhurmāni pratha-

māni āsan | te ha nākam mahimānaḥ sachanta yatra pūrve sādhyāḥ santi devāḥ |

"1. Purusha has a thousand heads,¹⁵ a thousand eyes, a thousand feet. On every side enveloping¹⁶ the earth, he overpassed¹⁷ (it) by a space of ten fingers. 2. Purusha himself is this whole (universe), whatever has been and whatever shall be. He is also the lord of immortality, since (or, when) by food he expands.¹⁸ 3. Such is his greatness, and Purusha is superior to this. All existences are a quarter of him; and three-fourths of him are that which is immortal in the sky.¹⁹ 4. With three quarters Purusha mounted upwards. A quarter of him was again produced here. He was then diffused everywhere over things which eat and things which do not eat. 5. From him was born Virāj, and from Virāj, Purusha.²⁰ When born, he extended beyond the earth, both behind and before. 6. When the gods performed a sacrifice with Purusha as the oblation, the spring was its butter, the summer its fuel, and the autumn its (accompanying) offering. 7. This victim, Purusha, born in the beginning, they immolated on

¹⁶ For epitrū in the R. V. the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 31. 1, reads spritrū, which seems to mean nearly the same.

the sacrificial grass. With him the gods, the Sādhyas,²¹ and the rishis sacrificed. 8. From that universal sacrifice were provided curds and butter. It formed those aerial ²² (creatures) and animals both wild and tame. 9. From that universal sacrifice sprang the rich and sāmān-verses, the metres, and the yajush. 10. From it sprang horses, and all animals with two rows of teeth; kine sprang from it; from it goats and sheep. 11. When (the gods) divided Purusha, into how many parts did they cut him up? what was his mouth? what arms (had he)? what (two objects) are said (to have been) his thighs and feet? 12. The Brāhman was his mouth;²³ the Rājanya was made his arms; the being (called) the Vaiśya, he was his thighs;²⁴ the Sūdra sprang from his feet. 13. The moon sprang from his soul (manas), the sun from his eye, Indra and Agni from his mouth, and Vāyu from his breath.²⁵ 14. From his navel arose the air, from his head the sky, from his feet the earth, from his ear the (four) quarters: in this manner (the gods) formed the worlds. 15. When the gods, performing sacrifice, bound Purusha as a victim, there were seven sticks (stuck up) for it

²³ Compare the Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa Upanishad, ii. 9: atha paurṇamāsyām pūrastūch chandramasam dṛṣyamūnam upatishṭheta etayā eva ūrīlā "somo rājāsi vichakshano pancha mukho'si prajāpatiḥ | brāhmaṇas te ekam mukham | tena mukhena rājno'tsi | tena mukhena mām annādam kuru | rājā te ekam mukham | tena mukhena viśo'tsi | tena mukhena mām annādam kuru | śyenas te ekam mukham "ityādi | which is thus translated by Mr. Cowell: "Next on the day of the full moon let him in this same way adore the moon when it is seen in front of him (saying), 'thou art Soma, the brilliant, the wise, the five-mouthed, the lord of creatures. The Brāhman is one mouth of thine, with that mouth thou eatest kings, with that mouth make me to eat food. The king is one mouth of thine, with that mouth thou eatest common men, with that mouth make me to eat food. The hawk is one mouth of thine,' etc. The fourth mouth is fire, and the fifth is in the moon itself. I should prefer to render the words somo rājā'si, "thou art king Soma,"—"king" being a frequent designation of this god in the Brāhmaṇas. See also M. Bh. iii. 12, 962, where Viṣṇu is introduced as saying in the same mystical way: Brahma vaktram bhujau kshatram urū me saṁsthitāḥ viśaḥ | pādaḥ sūdrāḥ bhavanti vikramena kramena cha | "The Brahman is my mouth; the Kshattra is my arms; the Viśas are my thighs; these Sūdras with their vigour and rapidity are my feet."

(around the fire), and thrice seven pieces of fuel were made. 16. With sacrifice the gods performed the sacrifice. These were the earliest rites. These great powers have sought the sky, where are the former Sādhyas, gods."²⁶

I have above (p. 7) intimated an opinion that this hymn does not belong to the most ancient portion of the Rig-veda. This view is, however, controverted by Dr. Haug, who, in his tract on "the origin of Brāhmanism" (published at Poona in 1863), p. 5, writes as follows: "The few scholars who have been engaged in the study of the Vedas unanimously regard this hymn as a very late production of Vedic poetry; but there is no sufficient evidence to prove that. On the contrary, reasons might be adduced to shew that it is even old. The mystical character of the hymn is no proof at all of its late origin. Such allegorical hymns are to be met with in every book of the collection of the mantras, which goes by the name of Rig-veda samhitā. The Rishis, who were the authors of these hymns, delighted in such speculations. They chiefly were suggested to them by the sacrificial rites, which they daily were performing. According to the position which is assigned to it in the Yajur-veda (where it is found among the formulas referring to the human sacrifice), the hymn appears to have been used at the human sacrifices. That, at the earliest period of the Vedic time, human sacrifices were quite common with the Brahmins, can be proved beyond any doubt. But the more eminent and distinguished among their leaders soon abandoned the practice as revolting to human feelings. The form of the sacrifice, however, seems to have been kept for a long time; for the ritual required at that occasion is actually in the Yajur-veda; but they only tied men of different castes and classes to the sacrificial posts, and released them afterwards, sacrificing animals instead of them."

If it could be satisfactorily shewn that this hymn, in the same form as we now possess it, existed contemporaneously with the barbarous practice of human sacrifices which Dr. Haug believes to have at one time prevailed in India, we should, no doubt, have in this circumstance a strong proof of its antiquity. But if it was merely adopted as a part of the ceremonial at a later period, when the immolation of human beings had ceased to be otherwise than formal and nominal, and animals were substituted as the actual victims, the evidence of its remote antiquity is greatly weakened.

If we now compare the Purusha Sūkta with the two hymns (162 and 163) of the first Mandala of the Rig-veda, it will, I think, be apparent that the first is not adapted to be used at a literal human sacrifice in the same manner as the last two are to be employed at the immolation of a horse. There are, no doubt, some mystical passages in the second of these two hymns, as in verse 3, where the horse is identified with Yama, Āditya, and Trita; and “in the last section of the Taittirīya Yajurveda the various parts of the horse’s body are described as divisions of time and portions of the universe: ‘morning is his head; the sun his eye; the air his breath; the moon his ear,’” etc. (Colebrooke’s Essays, i. 62).²⁷ But the persons who officiate at the sacrifice, as referred to in these hymns, are ordinary priests of the ancient Indian ritual,—the hotṛi, adhvaryu, āvayaj, etc. (i. 162, 5); and details are given of the actual slaughter of the animal (i. 162, 11). The Purusha Sūkta, however does not contain the same indications of the literal immolation of a human victim. In it the sacrifice is not offered to the gods, but by the gods (verses 6, 7, 15, 16); no human priests are mentioned; the division of the victim (v. 11) must be regarded, like its slaughter (v. 7), as the work of the deities only. And the Purusha mentioned in the hymn could not well have been regarded as an ordinary man, as he is identified with the universe (v. 2), and he himself, or his immolation, is represented as the source of the creation (vv. 8, 10, 13, 14), and of the Vedas (v. 9).

As compared with by far the largest part of the hymns of the Rig-veda, the Purusha Sūkta has every character of modernness both in its diction and ideas. I have already observed that the hymns which we find in this collection are of very different periods. This, I believe, is not disputed.²⁸ The authors themselves, as we have seen, speak of newer and older hymns. So many as a thousand compositions of this description could scarcely have been produced within a very short space of time, and there is no reason to suppose that the literary activity of the ancient Hindus was confined to the period immediately preceding the collection of the hymns. But if we are to recognize any difference of age, what hymns can we more reasonably suppose to be the oldest than those which are at once archaic in language and style, and naive and simple in the character of their conceptions? and, on the other hand, what compositions can more properly be set down as the most recent than those which manifest an advance in speculative ideas, while their language approaches to the modern Sanskrit? These latter conditions seem to be fulfilled in the Purusha Sūkta, as well as in hymns x. 71 and 72, x. 81 and 82, x. 121, and x. 129.

On this subject Mr. Colebrooke states his opinion as follows (Miscellaneous Essays i. 309, note): "That remarkable hymn (the Purusha Sūkta) is in language, metre, and style, very different from the rest of the prayers with which it is associated. It has a decidedly more modern tone; and must have been composed after the Sanscrit language had been refined, and its grammar and rhythm perfected. The internal evidence which it furnishes serves to demonstrate the important fact that the compilation of the Vedas, in their present arrangement, took place after the Sanscrit tongue had advanced from the rustic and irregular dialect in which the multitude of hymns and prayers of the Veda was composed, to the polished and sonorous language in which the mythological poems, sacred and prophane (purānas and cāryas), have been written."

Professor Max Müller expresses himself in a similar sense (Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 570 f.): "There can be little doubt, for instance, that the 90th hymn of the 10th book . . . is modern both in its character and in its diction. It is full of allusions to the sacrificial ceremonials, it uses technical philosophical terms, it mentions the three seasons in the order of Vasanta, spring; Grīshma, summer; and S'arad, autumn; it contains the only passage in the Rig-veda where the four castes are enumerated. The evidence of language for the modern date of this composition is equally strong. Grīshma, for instance, the name for the hot season, does not occur in any other hymn of the Rig-veda; and Vasanta also, the name of spring, does not belong to the earliest vocabulary of the Vedic poets. It occurs but once more in the Rig-veda (x. 161. 4), in a passage where the three seasons are mentioned in the order of S'arad, autumn; Hemanta, winter; and Vasanta, spring."

Professor Weber (Indische Studien, ix. 3) concurs in this view. He observes: "That the Purusha Sūkta, considered as a hymn of the Rig-veda, is among the latest portions of that collection, is clearly perceptible from its contents. The fact that the Sāma-sanhitā has not adopted any verse from it, is not without importance (compare what I have remarked in my Academical Prelections, p. 63). The Naigeya school, indeed, appears (although it is not quite certain),²⁹ to have extracted the first five verses in the seventh prapāthaka of the first Archika, which is peculiar to it."

We shall see in the following chapter that the word brāhmaṇa occurs but rarely in the Rig-veda Sanhitā, while brahman, "a priest," from which the former is derived, is of constant occurrence. From this circumstance also, it may be reasonably concluded that the hymns in which the derivative occurs are among the latest. The same remark may be made of the word vaiśya, as compared with viś.³⁰

Mr. Colebrooke's opinion of the character of the Purusha Sūkta is given in the following passage of his "Miscellaneous Essays" (vol. i. p. 161, note; or p. 105 of Williams & Norgate's ed. of 1858); "I think it unnecessary to quote from the commentary the explanation of this curious passage of the Vedas as it is there given, because it does not really elucidate the sense; the allegory is for the most part sufficiently obvious.

In his tract on "on the origin of Brahmanism," p. 4, Dr. Haug thus remarks on verses 11 and 12: "Now, according to this passage, which is the most ancient and authoritative we have on the origin of Brahmanism, and caste in general, the Brahman has not come from the mouth of this primary being, the Purusha, but the mouth of the latter became the Brahmanical caste, that is to say, was transformed into it. The passage has, no doubt, an allegorical sense. Mouth is the seat of speech. The allegory thus points out that the Brahmins are teachers and instructors of mankind. The arms are the seat of strength. If the two arms of the Purusha are said to have been made a Kshattriya (warrior), that means, then, that the Kshattriyas have to carry arms to defend the empire. That the thighs of the Purusha were transformed into the Vaiśya means that, as the lower parts of the body are the principal repository of food taken, the Vaiśya caste is destined to provide food for the others. The creation of the Shudra from the feet of the Purusha, indicates that he is destined to be a servant to the others, just as the foot serves the other parts of the body as a firm support."

But whether the writer of the hymn intended it to be understood allegorically or not, it conveys no distinct idea of the manner in which he supposed the four castes to have originated. It is, indeed, said that the Sūdra sprang from Purusha's feet; but as regards the three superior castes and the members with which they are respectively connected, it is not quite clear which (i.e., the castes or the members) are to be taken as the subjects and which as the predicates, and consequently, whether we are to suppose verse 12 to declare that the three castes were the three members, or, conversely, that the three members were, or became, the three castes.

But whatever may be the sense of the passage, it is impossible to receive it as enunciating any fixed doctrine of the writers of what is called the Vedic age in regard to the origin of the four castes; since we find, if not in the mantras or hymns, at least in the Brāhmaṇas (which, as we have seen in page 2, are esteemed by orthodox Indian writers as being equally with the hymns a part of the Veda), not only (1) texts which agree with the Purusha Sūkta, but also (2) various other and discrepant accounts of the manner in which these classes were separately formed, as well as (3) third a class of narratives of the creation, in which the production of the human race is described without allusion to any primordial distinction of castes.

To the first of these classes (viz., that of texts which coincide more or less exactly with the Purusha Sūkta) belongs the following passage from the Taittirīya Saṁhitā.

SECT. II.—Quotation from the Taittirīya Saṁhitā, vii. 1. 1. 4 ff.

"Prajāpati desired, 'may I propagate.' He formed the Trivṛit (stoma) from his mouth. After it were produced the deity Agni, the metre Gāyatrī, the Sāman (called) Rathantara, of men the Brāhmaṇ, of beasts the goats. Hence they are the chief (mukhyāḥ), because they were created from the mouth (mukhataḥ). From (his) breast, from (his) arms, he formed the Panchadaśa (stoma). After it were created the god Indra, the Trishṭubh metre, the Sāman (called) Bṛihat, of men the Rājanya, of beasts the sheep. Hence they are vigorous, because they were created from vigour. From (his) middle he formed the Saptadaśa (stoma). After it were created the gods (called) the Viśvedevas, the Jagatī metre, the Sāman called the Vairūpa, of men the Vaiśya, of beasts kine. Hence they are to be eaten, because they were created from the receptacle of food. Wherefore they are more numerous than others, for the most numerous deities were created after (the Saptadaśa). From his foot he formed the Ekaviṁśa (stoma). After it were created the Anusṭubh metre, the Sāman called Vairāja, of men the Śūdra, of beasts the horse. Hence these two, both the horse and the Śūdra, are transporters of (other) creatures. Hence (too) the Śūdra is incapacitated for sacrifice, because no deities were created after (the Ekaviṁśa). Hence (too) these two subsist by their feet, for they were created from the foot."

SECT. III.—Citations from the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, and the Atharva-veda.

The following texts belong to the second class—i.e., that of those which recognize a distinct origination of the castes, but describe their creation differently from the Purusha Sūkta :

S. P. Br. ii. 1, 4, 11 ff.—“Bhūr” iti vai Prajāpatir imām ajanayata “bhuraḥ” ity antariksham “sva” iti divam | etāvad vai idam sarvaṁ yāvad ime lokāḥ | sarveṇa eva ādhīyate | “bhūr” iti vai Prajāpatir brahma ajanayata “bhuvaḥ” iti kshattram “sva” iti viśam | etāvad vai idam sarvaṁ yāvad brahma kshattram viṣ | sarveṇa eva ādhīyate | “bhūr” iti vai Prajāpatir ātmānam ajanayata “bhuvaḥ” iti prajāṁ “sva” iti paśūn | etāvad vai idam sarvaṁ yāvad ātmā prajāḥ paśavaḥ | sarveṇa eva ādhīyate | ८१

“(Uttering) ‘bhūḥ,’ Prajāpati generated this earth. (Uttering) ‘bhuvaḥ,’ he generated the air, and (uttering) ‘svaḥ,’ he generated the sky. This universe is co-extensive with these worlds. (The fire) is placed with the whole. Saying ‘bhūḥ,’ Prajāpati generated the Brahman; (saying) ‘bhuvaḥ,’ he generated the Kshattria; (and saying) ‘svaḥ,’ he generated the Viś. All this world is so much as the Brahman, Kshattria, and Viś. The fire is placed with the whole. (Saying) ‘bhūḥ,’ Prajāpati generated himself; (saying) ‘bhuvaḥ,’ he generated offspring; (saying) ‘svaḥ,’ he generated animals. This world is so much as self, offspring, and animals. (The fire) is placed with the whole.”

Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 9, 2 — Sarvaṁ hedam brahmaṇā haiva śriṣṭam | ṛigbhyo jātam vaiśyam varṇam āhuḥ | yajurvedam kshattriāsyāhur yonim | sāmavedo brāhmaṇānām prasūtiḥ | pūrve pūrvebhyo vaca etad āchuḥ |

“This entire (universe) has been created by Brahma. Men say that the Vaiśya class was produced from ṛich-verses. They say that the Yajur-veda is the womb from which the Kshattriya was born. The Sāma-veda is the source from which the Brāhmans sprang. This word the ancients declared to the ancients.”

To complete his account of the derivation of the castes from the Vedas, the author had only to add that the Sūdras had sprung from the Atharvāṅgirasas (the Atharva-veda); but he perhaps considered that to assign such an origin to the servile order would have been to do it too great an honour.

He lauded with thirty-one: living beings were created: The first and second halves of the month³¹ were the rulers. He lauded with thirty-one: existing things were tranquillized: Prajāpati Parameshthīn was the ruler." This passage is explained in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa viii. 4, 3, 1 ff.

The following text is of a somewhat mystical description; but appears to intimate a distinction in nature between the different castes corresponding to that of the gods with whom they are associated:

S. P. Br. xiv. 4, 2, 23 (= Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad, i. 4, 11 ff. ³¹ The Taittirīya Sanhitā reads yāvāḥ and ayāvāḥ (instead of yāvāḥ and ayāvāḥ as in the Vūjasaneyi Sanhitā) and in another passage, v. 3, 4, 5 (as I learn from Prof. Aufrecht), explains these terms to mean respectively months and half months (māsā vai yāvāḥ ardhmāsāḥ ayāvāḥ), whilst the commentator on the V. S. understands them to mean the first and second halves of the month, in accordance with the S'P. B. viii. 4, 3, 18, and viii. 4, 2, 11 (pūrvapakṣā vai yāvāḥ aparapakṣa ayāvāḥ | te hi idaṁ sarvaṁ yuvate chāyuvate cha) | Prof. Aufrecht also points out that yūva is explained in Kūtyayana's Ś'rūta Sūtras, iv. 11, 8, as equivalent to yavamayam apūpam, "a cake of barley."

23. "Brahma (here, according to the commentator, existing in the form of Agni, and representing the Brāhman caste³²) was formerly this (universe), one only. Being one, it did not develope. It energetically created an excellent form, the Kshattrā, viz., those among the gods who are powers (kshattrāni), Indra, Varuṇa, Soma, Rudra, Parjanya, Yama, Mṛityu, Īśāna. Hence nothing is superior to the Kshattrā. Therefore the Brāhman sits below the Kshattriya at the rājasūya-sacrifice; he confers that glory on the Kshattrā (the royal power).³³ This, the Brahma, is the source of the Kshattrā. Hence, although the king attains supremacy, he at the end resorts to the Brahma as his source. Whoever destroys him (the Brāhman) destroys his own source. He becomes most miserable, as one who has injured a superior. 24. He did not develope. He created the Viś—viz., those classes of gods who are designated by troops, Vasus, Rudras, Ādityas, Viśvedevas, Maruts. 25. He did not develope. He created the Sūdra class, Pūshan. This earth is Pūshan: for she nourishes all that exists. 26. He did not develope. He energetically created an excellent form, Justice (Dharma). This is the ruler (kshattrā) of the ruler (kshattrā), namely, Justice. Hence nothing is superior to justice. Therefore the weaker seeks (to overcome) the stronger by justice, as by a king. This justice is truth. In consequence they say of a man who speaks truth, 'he speaks justice;’ or of a man who is uttering justice, ‘he speaks truth.’ For this is both of these. 27. This is the Brahma, Kshattria, Viś, and Sūdra. Through Agni it became Brahma among the gods, the Brāhman among men, through the (divine) Kshattriya a (human) Kshattriya, through the (divine) Vaiśya a (human) Vaiśya, through the (divine) Sūdra a (human) Sūdra. Wherefore it is in Agni among the gods and in a Brāhman among men, that they seek after an abode.”

him at his will milk out with a wooden dish. But let not a milk it out. For this Sūdra has sprung from non-existence. They say that that which a Sūdra milks out is no oblation. Let not a Sūdra milk out the Agnihotra. For they do not purify that. When that passes beyond the filter, then it is an oblation.”

Atharva-veda, iv. 6, 1.—Brāhmaṇo jajne prathamō daśaśiršo dasāyāḥ | sa somam prathamāḥ papau sa chakārūrasaṁ visham | “The Brāhman was born the first, with ten heads and ten faces. He first drank the soma; he made poison powerless.”

As the description (which is, perhaps, a fragment of a longer account), stops short here, we are left in the dark as to the author’s ideas about the creation of the other castes. It would have interested us to know how many heads and faces he would have assigned to the other three castes. The student of Indian poetry is aware that the giant Ravana is represented in the Rāmāyaṇa both as a Brāhman and as having ten heads.

As implying a separate origination of the Rājanya caste, the following text also may find a place here:

Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 4, 13, 1.—Devā vai rājanyāj jūyamānād abibhayuḥ | tam antar eva santaṁ dāmnā ’paumbhan | sa vai esho ’pobdho jūyate yad rājanyo | yad vai esho ’napobdho jūyeta vrittrān ghaṁś charet | yaṁ kūmayeta rājanyam “anapobdho jūyeta vrittrān ghaṁś chared” iti tasmai elam aindrā-bṛhaspatyaṁ charuṁ nirvacet | aindro vai rājanyo

brahma Bṛihaspatiḥ | brahmaṇā eva enaṁ dāmno 'pombhanād muñchati | hiraṇmayaṁ dāma dakṣiṇā sūkṣhād eva enaṁ dāmno 'pombhanād muñchati | "The gods were afraid of the Rājanya when he was in the womb. They bound him with bonds when he was in the womb. Consequently this Rājanya is born bound. If he were born unbound he would go on slaying his enemies. In regard to whatever Rājanya any one desires that he should be born unbound, and should go on slaying his enemies, let him offer for him this Aindra-Bārhaspatya oblation. A Rājanya has the character of Indra, and a Brahman is Bṛihaspati. It is through the Brahman that anyone releases the Rājanya from his bond. The golden bond, a gift, manifestly releases from the bond that fetters him."

In the following text of the Atharva-veda, xv. 8, 1, a new account is given of the origin of the Rājanyas:

So 'rajyata tato rājanyo 'jāyata |

"He (the Vrātya) became filled with passion: thence sprang the Rājanya."

And in the following paragraph (A. V. xv. 9, 1 ff) we have the same origin ascribed to the Brāhman also:

Tadyasya evaṁ vidvān vrātyo rājno 'tithir grihān āgachhet śreyāṁsam enam ātmano mānayet | tathā kshattrāya nāvṛiśchate tathā rāshṭrāya nāvṛiśchate | ato vai brahma cha kshattram cha udatiṣṭhatām | te abratām "kam praviśāva" iti |

"Let the king to whose house the Vrātya who knows this, comes as a guest, cause him to be respected as superior to himself. So doing he does no injury to his royal rank, or to his realm. From him arose the Brahman (Brāhman) and the Kshattrā (Kshattriya). They said, 'Into whom shall we enter,' etc."

The following passages belong to the third of the classes above adverted to, as in the descriptions they give of the creation, while they refer to the formation of men, they are silent on the subject of any separate origination of castes:

"Prajāpati was formerly this (universe), one only. He desired, 'let me create food, and be propagated.' He formed animals from his breaths, a MAN from his soul, a horse from his eye, a bull from his breath, a sheep from his ear, a goat from his voice. Since he formed animals from his breaths, therefore men say, 'the breaths are animals.' The soul is the first of the breaths. Since he formed a man from his soul, therefore they say, 'man is the first of the animals, and the strongest.' The soul is all the breaths; for all the breaths depend upon the soul. Since he formed man from his soul, therefore they say, 'man is all the animals;' for all these are man's."

"This universe was formerly soul only, in the form of Puruṣa. Looking closely, he saw nothing but himself (or soul). He first said, 'This is I.' Then he became one having the name of I. Hence even now a man, when called, first says, 'this is I,' and then declares the other name which he has. 2. Inasmuch as he, before (pūrvāḥ) all this, burnt up (aushat) all sins, he (is called) puruṣa. The man who knows this burns up the person who wishes to be before him. 3. He was afraid. Hence a man when alone is afraid. This (being) considered that 'there is no other thing but myself: of what am I afraid?' Then his fear departed. For why should he have feared? It is of a second person that people are afraid. 4. He did not enjoy happiness. Hence a person when alone does not enjoy happiness. He desired a second. He was so much as a man and a woman when locked in embrace. 5. He caused this same self to fall asunder into two parts. Thence arose a husband and a wife.³⁸ Hence Yājñavalkya has said that 'this one's self is like the half³⁹ of a split pea.' Hence the void is filled up by

He cohabited with her. From them the class of animals with undivided hoofs was produced. The one became a she-goat, the other a he-goat, the one a ewe, the other a ram. He cohabited with her. From them goats and sheep were produced. In this manner pairs of all creatures whatsoever, down to ants, were created."

The next passage describes men as descendants of Virasvat, or the Sun, without specifying any distinction of classes:

She cooked a second (oblation). She reflected, 'from the remains of the oblation these sons have been born to me. If I shall eat (the oblation) first, more brilliant estimation in which women were held by the authors of the Brāhmaṇas was very high, as there are other texts in which they are spoken of disparagingly; such as the following: Taitt. Sanh. vi. 5, 8, 2.—Sa somo nātishkhata strībhyo grihyamānaḥ | tam ghṛitāṁ vajrāṁ kṛitvā 'ghnan tam nirindriyam bhūtam agrihnan | tasmāt striyo nirindriyā adyūdīr opī pūpāt pūṁsa upastilaram vadanti | "Soma did not abide, when being poured out to women. Making that butter a thunderbolt they smote it. They poured it out when it had become powerless. Hence women, powerless, and portionless, speak more humbly than even a poor man." (Compare the quotation in the Commentary on the Taitt. Sanhitā, Vol. i. p. 996.) Taitt. Sanh. vi. 5, 10, 3. Tasmāt striyaṁ jātūm parāsyanti ut pumūṁsam haranti | "Hence they reject a female (child) when born, and take up a male." (Compare Nirukta, iii. 4.)

(sons) will be born to me. She ate it first; she conceived seed; an imperfect egg was produced from her. She cooked a third (oblation) for the Ādityas, (repeating the formula) 'may this religious toil have been undergone for my enjoyment.' The Ādityas said, 'Let us choose a boon: let any one who is produced from this be ours only; let anyone of his progeny who is prosperous be for us a source of enjoyment.' In consequence the Āditya Vivasvat was born. This is his progeny, namely MEN.⁴¹ Among them he alone who sacrifices is prosperous, and comes a cause of enjoyment to the gods."⁴²

The passages next following do not specify separately the creation men (who must, however, be understood as included along with other beings under the designation prajāh, "offspring," or "creatures,") and therefore afford less distinct evidence that their authors did not hold the fourfold origin of mankind.

The first of these extracts is especially interesting, both on account of its own tenor, and because (along with Taitt. Br. ii. 3, 8, 1 ff. quoted in p. 23) it contains the germ of one of the Puranic accounts of the creation which will be adduced in a subsequent section.

⁴² This story is told also, but with more detail of names and somewhat differently, in Taitt. Br. i. 1, 9, 10 ff. *Aditiḥ putrakāmā sādhyebhyo devebhyo brahmaudanam apachat | tasyai uchchheshanam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sū reto 'dhatta | tasyai Dhātā cha Aryamā cha ajāyetām | sū dvitīyam apachat tasyai uchchheshanam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sū reto 'dhatta | tasyai Mitras cha Varuṇas cha ajāyetām | sū tritīyam apachat | tasyai uchchheshanam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sū reto 'dhatta | tasyai Aṁśa cha Bhagā cha ajāyetām | sū chaturtham apachat | tasyai uchchheshanam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sū reto 'dhatta tasyai Indras cha Vivasvāns cha ajāyetām | "Aditi, desirous of sons, cooked a Brahmaudana oblation to the gods the Sādhyas. It clove its bladder. That became the sea. Hence men do not drink of the sea. For they regard it as like the place of generation. Hence water issues forth before an animal when it is being born. After that the Daśahotri (a particular formula) was created. Prajāpati is the Daśahotri. That man succeeds, who thus knowing the power of austere abstraction (or fervour), practises it. This was then water, fluid. Prajāpati wept, (exclaiming), (4) 'For what purpose have I been born, if (I have been born) from this which forms no support?'⁴⁵ That which fell⁴⁶ into the waters became the earth. That which he wiped away, became the air. That which he wiped away, upwards, became the sky. From the circumstance that he wept (arodīt), these two regions have the name of rodasī, (worlds). 5. They do not weep in the house of the man who knows this. This was the birth of these worlds. He who thus knows the birth of these worlds, incurs no suffering in these worlds. He obtained this (earth as a) basis. Having obtained (this earth as a) basis, he desired, 'May I be propagated.' He practised austere fervour. He became pregnant. He created Asuras from his abdomen. 6. To them he milked out food in an earthen dish. He cast off that body of his. It became darkness.⁴⁷ He desired, 'May I be propagated.' He practised

To them he milked out milk in a wooden dish. He cast off that body of his. It became moon-light. He desired, 'May I be propagated. He practised austere fervour. He became pregnant. He created the seasons from his armpits. To them he milked out butter in a silver dish. He cast off that body of his. It became the period which connects day and night. He desired, 'May I be propagated.' He practised austere fervour. He became pregnant. He created the gods from his mouth.⁴⁸ To them he milked out Soma in a golden dish. He cast off that body of his. It became day. 9. These are Prajāpati's milkings. He who thus knows milks out offspring. 'Day (divā) has come to us:' this (exclamation expresses) the godhead of the gods. He who thus knows the godhead of the gods, obtains the gods. This is the birth of days and nights. He who thus knows the birth of days and nights, incurs no suffering in the days and nights. 10. Mind (or soul, manas,) was created from the non-existent. Mind created Prajāpati. Prajāpati created offspring. All this, whatever exists, rests absolutely on mind. This is that Brahma called Svovasyasa.⁴⁹ For the man who thus knows, (Ushas), dawning, dawning, dawns more and more bright; he becomes prolific in offspring, and (rich) in cattle; he obtains the rank of Parameshthin."

Bh. xii. 774 : Aruṇāḥ Ketavāś chaiva sūndhūyena divāṁ gatūḥ | “By sacred study the Aruṇas and Ketus have ascended to heaven.”

⁵³ Here the Sanskrit, if it be not corrupt, must be irregular and incorrect. On the style of the Āraṇyakas, see Mr. E. B. Cowell's Preface to the Kaushītakī Upanishad, p. viii., where it is remarked : “The Āraṇyakas appear to belong to a class of Sanskrit writings, whose history has not yet been thoroughly investigated. Their style, if we may judge from that of the Taittirīya and Kaushītakī, is full of strange solecisms which sometimes half remind us of the gāthās of the Lalita Vistara. The present Upanishad has many peculiar forms, some of which are common to both recensions, while others appear only in one. Such are : nishincha, in p. 10; praiti for prayanti, in p. 51; samśīḡyan, in p. 56; veti for vyeti, in p. 78; aduḡham, in p. 89, etc

(R.V. x. 90, 1), he arose. Prajāpati said to him, 'Thou wert produced before me: do thou first make this.' He took water from this (5) in the cavity of his two hands, and placed it on the east, repeating the text, 'so be it, o Sun.'⁶⁴ From thence the sun arose. That was the eastern quarter. Then Aruṇa Ketu placed (the water) to the south, saying, 'so be it,' o Agni.' Thence Agni arose. That was the southern quarter. Then Aruṇa Ketu placed (the water) to the west, saying 'so be it, o Vāyu.' 6. Thence arose Vāyu. That was the western quarter. Then Aruṇa Ketu placed (the water) to the north, saying 'so be it, o Indra.' Thence arose Indra. That is the northern quarter. Then Aruṇa Ketu placed (the water) in the centre, saying 'so be it, o Pūshan.' Thence arose Pūshan. That is this quarter. 7. Then Aruṇa Ketu placed (the water) above, saying 'so be it, o gods.' Thence arose gods, MEN, fathers, Gandharvas and Apsarases. That is the upper quarter. From the drops which fell apart arose the Asuras, Rakshases, and Piśāchas. Therefore they perished, because they were produced from drops. Hence this text has been uttered; (8) 'when the great waters became pregnant, containing wisdom, and generating Svayambhū, from them were created these creations. All this was produced from the waters. Therefore all this is Brahma Svayambhu.' Hence all this was as it were loose, as it were unsteady. Prajāpati was that. Having made himself through himself, he entered into that. Wherefore this verse has been uttered; (9) 'Having formed the world, having formed existing things and all intermediate quarters and quarters, Prajāpati, the firstborn of the ceremonial; entered into himself with himself.' "

From an examination of the legends contained in the Brāhmaṇas, of which some specimens have just been given, it appears (1) that they are generally, if not always, adduced, or invented, with the view of showing the origin, or illustrating the efficacy, of some particular ceremony which the writer wished to explain or recommend; (2) that the accounts which they supply of Prajāpati's creative operations are various and even inconsistent; and (3) that they are the sources of many of the details which are found in a modified form in the cosmogonies of the Purāṇas.

When we discover in the most ancient Indian writings such different and even discrepant accounts of the origin of man, all put forth with equal positiveness, it is impossible to imagine that any uniform explanation of the diversity of castes could have been received at the period when they were composed, or to regard any of the texts which have been cited as more orthodox and authoritative than the rest. Even, therefore, if we should suppose that the author of the Puruṣa Sūkta meant to represent the four castes as having literally sprung from separate parts of Puruṣa's body, it is evident that the same idea was not always or even generally adopted by those who followed him, as a revealed truth in which they were bound to acquiesce. In fact, nothing is clearer than that in all these cosmogonies, the writers, while generally assuming certain prevalent ideas as the basis of their descriptions, gave the freest scope to their individual fancy in the invention of details. In such circumstances, perfect coincidence cannot be expected in the narratives.

We shall hereafter see that the Puranic writers reproduce some of these discrepancies in the traditions which descended to them from earlier generations, and add many new inconsistencies of their own, which they themselves, or their commentators, endeavour to explain away by the assumption that the accounts so differing relate to the occurrences of different Kalpas or Manvantaras (great mundane periods). But of a belief in any such Kalpas or Manvantaras no trace is to be found in the hymns or Brāhmaṇas: and, as we shall hereafter see, they must be held to be the inventions of a later age. The real explanation of these differences in the Brāhmaṇas is that the writers did not consider themselves (as their successors held them) to be infallibly inspired, and consequently were not at all studious to avoid in their narratives the appearance of inconsistency with the accounts of their predecessors.

SECT. V.—Manu's Account of the Origin of Castes.

I shall first quote a few verses from the beginning of Manu's account of the creation :

i. 8. So 'bhidyāya śarīrāt svāt sisrikshur vividhāḥ prajāḥ | apa eva sasarjādau tāsu vijam avasrijat | 9. Tad aṇḍam abhavad haimaṁ sahas-rāṁśu-sama-prabham | tasmīn jājne svayam Brahmā sarva-loka-pitā-mahaḥ | 10. Āpo nārā iti proktāḥ āpo vai naraśūnavaḥ | tāḥ yad asyāyanam pūrvam tena Nārāyaṇaḥ smṛitah | 11. Yat tat kāraṇam avyaktam nityam sad-asadātmakam | tad-viśiṣṭaḥ sa puruṣho lok-Brahmeti kirttyate | 12. *Tasminn aṇḍe sa bhagavān ushitvā parivate saram | svayam evātmano dhyānāt tad aṇḍam akarod dvīdhā |*⁵⁵

"8. He (the self-existent) having felt desire,⁵⁶ and willing to create various living beings from his own body, first created the waters, and threw into them a seed. 9. That seed became a golden egg, of lustre equal to the sun; in it he himself was born as Brahmā, the parent of all the worlds. 10. The waters are called nārāḥ, for they are sprung from Nara; and as they were his first sphere of motion (ayana=path), he is therefore called Nārāyaṇa.⁵⁷ 11. Produced from the imperceptible, eternal, existent and non-existent, cause, that male (puruṣa) is celebrated in the world as Brahmā. 12. After dwelling for a year in the egg, the glorious being, himself, by his own contemplation, split it in twain."

After a description of various other preparatory creative acts (vv. 13–30) the author proceeds in vv. 31 ff. to inform us how the four castes were produced :

i. 31. Lokānām tu viriddhyartham mukhabāhūru-pādataḥ | brāhmaṇam kṣattriyaṁ vaiśyaṁ śūdraṁ cha niravarttayat | 32. Dvīdhā krit-vātmano deham ardhena puruṣho 'bhavat | ardhena nārī tasyām sa Virājam asrijat prabhuḥ | 33. Tapas taptrā 'srijat yaṁ tu sa svayam puruṣho

⁵⁷ In the M. Bh. iii. 12952, Krishṇa says: apām nārāḥ iti purā sanjñā-karma kṛitam mayā | tena Nārāyaṇo py ukto mama tat tv ayanam sadā | "The name of nārāḥ was formerly assigned by me to the waters: hence I am also called Nārāyaṇa, for there has always been my sphere of motion."

31. "That the worlds might be peopled, he caused the Brāhman, the Kshattriya, the Vaiśya, and the Sūdra to issue from his mouth, his arms, his thighs, and his feet."⁵⁸ 32. Having divided his own body into two parts, the lord (Brahmā) became, with the half a male (purusha), and with the half, a female; and in her he created Virāj⁵⁹ 33. Know, O most excellent twice-born men, that I, whom that male, (purusha)⁶⁰ Virāj, himself created, am the creator of all this world. 34. Desiring to produce living creatures, I performed very arduous devotion, and first created ten Maharshis (great rishis), lords of living beings, (35) viz., Marīchi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Prachetas, Vasishṭha, Bhrīgu, and Nārada.⁶¹ 36 They, endowed with ⁵⁸ On this Kullūka the Commentator remarks: Daivyū cha śaktyū mukhādibhyo brūhmaṇādi-nirmāṇam Brahmano na visankanīyaṁ śruti-siddhatvāt | "It is not to be doubted that, by his divine power, Brahmā formed the Brāhman and the other castes from his mouth and other members, since it is proved by the Veda. He then quotes the 12th verse of the Purusha Sūkta.

⁵⁹ See the Purusha Sūkta, verse 5.

⁶⁰ It will be observed that Manu applies this term purusha to three beings, first to Brahmā (v. 11), second to the male formed by Brahmā from the half of his own body (v. 32), and third to Virāj, the offspring of the male and female halves of Brahmā's body (v. 33). It will be noticed that this story of Brahmā dividing his body is borrowed from the passage of the S'. P. Br. xiv. 4, 2, 1, quoted above.

⁶¹ In the Rāmāyana, ii. 110, 2 ff., a different account is given of the origin of the world, in which no reference is made to Manu Svāyambhuva. The order of the creation there described is as follows: First everything was water. Then Brahmā Svāyambhū, with the deities, came into existence—Brahmā being said to have sprung great energy, created⁶² other seven Manus, gods, and abodes of gods, and Maharshis of boundless might; (37) Yakshas, Rakshases, Pisāchas, Gandharvas, Apsarases, Asuras, Nāgas, Serpents, great Birds, and the different classes of Pitṛis; (38) lightnings, thunderbolts, clouds, Indra's bows unbent and bent, meteors, portentous atmospheric sounds, comets, and various luminaries; (39) Kinnaras, apes, fishes, different sorts of birds, cattle, deer, MEN, beasts with two rows of teeth; (40) small and large reptiles, moths, lice, flies, fleas, all gadflies and gnats, and motionless things of different sorts. 41. Thus by my appointment, and by the force of devotion, was ALL THIS WORLD BOTH MOTIONLESS AND MOVING, created by those great beings, according to the (previous) actions of each creature."

The different portions of the preceding narrative of the creation of the human species are not easily reconcileable with each other. For it is first stated in verse 31, that men of the four castes proceeded separately from different parts of Brahmā's body,—prior (as it would appear) (1) to the division of that body into two parts and to the successive production (2) of Virāj, (3) Manu, and (4) the Maharshis, who formed all existing creatures. And yet we are told in verse 39, that MEN were among the beings called into existence by those Maharshis, and in verse 41, that the entire MOVING as well as motionless WORLD was their work. It is not said that the men created by the Maharshis were distinct from those composing the four castes, and we must, therefore, assume that the latter also are included under the general appellation of men. But if men of the four castes had been already produced before the formation of all living creatures by the Maharshis, what necessity existed for the men of these castes being a second time called into being as a part of that later creation? It is possible that this from the ether (ākāśa). Brahmā, with his sons, created the world. From Brahmā sprang Marichi; from Marichi, Kaś'apa; from Kaś'apa, Vivasvat; and from Vivasvat, Manu Vaivasvata. The original of this passage is quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 29 ff.

⁶² These great rishis seem to be the beings denoted by the word viśvasṛjaḥ, "creators of the universe," in the verse of Manu (xii. 50), which will be quoted below. Reference to rishis, or to seven rishis, as "formers of existing things" (bhūta-kṛitaḥ), is also found in the Atharvaveda, vi. 108, 4; vi. 133, 4, 5; xi. 1, 1, 3, 24; xii. 1, 39; and the word bhūtakṛitaḥ, without the addition of rishis, is found in the same work iii. 28, 1; iv. 35, 2, and xix. 16, 2.

allegation of the separate creation of castes may have been engrafted as an after-thought on the other account.⁶³

After other details, regarding the propagation, nature, etc, of created things (vv. 42–50), the re-absorption of Brahmā into the Supreme Spirit, and his alternations of sleep and repose, etc. (vv. 50–57), Manu proceeds :

58. Idaṁ sāstraṁ tu kṛtvā 'sau mām eva svayam āditaḥ | vidhivad grāhayāmāsa Marīchyādīmś tv aham munīn | 59. Etad vo 'yam Bhṛiguḥ sāstraṁ śrāvayishyaty aśeshataḥ | etad hi matto 'dhijage sarvam eṣho 'khlīlam munīḥ | 60. Tatas tathā sa tenokto maharshir Manunū Bhṛiguḥ | tān abravīd ṛishīn sarvān prītātmā "śrūyatām" iti | 61. Svāyambhuvaśyāśya Manoḥ shad-caṁśyā Manavo 'pare | śṛiṣṭavantāḥ prajāḥ svāḥ svāḥ mahātmāno mahaujaśaḥ | 62. Svārochishaś chaṭṭamiś cha Tāmaso Raivataś tathā | Chāḁkshushaś cha mahūtejā Vivasvat-suta eva cha | 63. Svāyambhuwādyāḥ saptaite Manavo bhūritejaśaḥ | sve sve 'ntare sarvam idam utpādyāpuś charācharam |

58. "Having formed this Scripture, he (Brahmā) himself in the beginning caused me to comprehend it according to rule; as I did to Marichi and the other munis. 59. This, Bhṛigu will give you to this scripture in its entirety; for this muni learned the whole from : 60. Then that Maharshi (great rishi), Bhṛigu being so addressed Manu, with pleasure addressed all those rishis, saying, 'Let it heard.' 61. 'From this Manu Svāyambhuva sprang other Manus in six successive generations, great and glorious, who respectively created living beings of their own,—(62) viz., Svārochisha, Auttami, Tāmasa, Raivata, Chāḁkshusha, and the mighty son of Vivasvat. 63. These seven⁶⁴ Manus of great power, of whom Svāyambhuva was the first, have each in his own period (antara) produced and possessed the world.' "

⁶³ In the same way it may be observed that in v. 22 Brahmā is said to have formed the subtle class of living gods whose essence is to act, and of the Sādhyas (karmātmanām cha devūnām so 'ṣṛijāt prūṇinām prabhuḥ | sādhyānūnām cha gaṇān sūkṣhmaṁ), and in v. 25, to have "called into existence this creation, desiring to form these living beings" (śṛiṣṭiṁ sasarja chaivemām eṣaṣṭum icchann imāḥ prajāḥ). But if the gods and all other creatures already existed, any such further account of their production by the Maharshis, as is given in verse 36, seems to be not only superfluous but contradictory.

After some preliminary explanations regarding the divisions of time as reckoned by men and gods, etc. (vv. 64-78), the author proceeds to tell us how long each of these Manus reigns :

79. Yat prāk dvādaśa-sāhasram uditāṁ daivikāṁ yugam | tad ekasaptati-guṇam manvantaram ihochyate | 80. Manvantarāṇy asankhyāni sargaḥ saṁhāra eva cha | kṛḍann ivaitat kurute Parāmeshṭhi punaḥ punaḥ |

"The age (yuga) of the gods mentioned before, consisting of twelve thousand (years), when multiplied by seventy-one, is here called a manvantara. 80. There are innumerable manvantaras, creations and destructions. The Supreme Being performs this again and again, as if in sport."

A more detailed account of these great mundane periods will be given in the next section, when I come to take up the Vishṇu Purana. Meanwhile it may be remarked that the present manvantara is that of the last of the Manus above enumerated, or Manu Vairasvata, who, according to verse 63, must have created the existing world. But if such be the case, it does not appear why the creation of Manu Svāyambhuva, with which the present race of mortals can have little to do, should have been by preference related to the rishis in vv. 33 ff. It must, however, be observed that in v. 33 Manu Svāyambhuva described himself as the former of "this" (i.e., the existing) universe, and there is no doubt that the whole code of laws prescribed in the sequel of the work is intended by the author to be observed by the existing race of Indians (see verses 102 ff. of the first book). We must, therefore, suppose that the creations of the later Manus are substantially identical with that of the first; or that there is some confusion or inconsistency in the accounts which I have cited. Perhaps both suppositions may be correct.

In vv. 81-86, the four Yugas (or great ages of the world) the Kṛita, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali, their gradual deterioration, and the special duties peculiar to each, are described.⁶⁵

⁶⁵ In v. 86 these predominant duties are said to be austere fervour in the Kṛita age, knowledge in the Tretā, sacrifice in the Dvāpara, and liberality alone in the Kali (tāpaḥ parāṁ Kṛita-yuge tretāyāṁ jñānam uchyate | dvāpare gajnam evāhur dānam ekam kalau yuge). This, as remarked in Weber's Indische Studien, 282 f., note, is not quite in conformity with the view of the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, i. 2, 1, which states :

At verse 87, Bhṛigu recurs to the four castes:

87. Sarcasyāśya tu sargasya gupty-artham sa mahādyutiḥ | mukhabāhūru-paj-jānām prīthak karmāny akalpayat |

"For the preservation of this whole creation, that glorious being (Brahmā) ordained separate functions for those who sprang from his mouth, his arms, his thighs, and his feet."

These functions are then detailed (vv. 88-92). In verse 93, the grounds of the Brāhman's pre-eminence are stated:

93. Uttamāngobhavāj jyaishṭhyād brahmaṇas chaiva dhāraṇāt | sarcasyaivāśya sargasya dharmato brāhmaṇaḥ prakhuḥ | 94. Tam hi evayambhūḥ svād āsyūt tapas taptvā 'dīto 'srijat |

Since the Brahman sprang from the most excellent organ, since he is the first-born and possesses the Veda, he is by nature the lord of this whole creation. Him, the self-existent (Brahmā) after exercising fervid abstraction, formed as the first from his own mouth."

But as there are grades of excellence among created things, and among men themselves (96), so are there also among Brahmanas:

97. *Brāhmaṇeshu cha vidvāṃso vidvatsu kṛita-buddhayaḥ | kṛita-
buddhishu karttāraḥ karttrishu brahma-vedināḥ |*

"Among Brāhmanas the learned are the most excellent, among the learned the resolute, among the resolute those who act, and among them who act they who possess divine knowledge."

In a subsequent part of the work (xii. 40 ff.) we find men in general, the castes, and indeed all existing things, from Brahmā downwards, classified according to their participation in different degrees in the three guṇas, or qualities (sattva, "goodness," rajas, "passion," and amas, "darkness").

39. *Yena yāṃs tu guṇenaishāṃ saṃsūrān pratipadyate | tān samāśena
akshyāmi sarcasyāśya yathākramam |* 40. *Devatraṃ sāttvikā yānti

*ṣṭ etat satyam mantreshu karmūṇi kavayo yāny apāśyāṃs tāni tretāyām bahudhū ariety celebrated in the Tretā." In the same way the M. Bh. iii. v. 11,248, says that crifices and rites prevail in the Tretā (tato yajnāḥ pravarttante dharmūḥ cha vidhāḥ kriyāḥ | tretāyām ityādi). See also M. Bh. xii. 13,090. The word kṛita, as the name of the first yuga is thus explained in a previous verse of the former of these two passages (11,235): kṛitam eva na karttavyaṃ tasmin kāle yugottame | "In the

“39. I shall now declare succinctly in order the states which the soul reaches by means of each of these qualities. 40. Souls endowed with the sattva quality attain to godhead; those having the rajas quality become men; whilst those characterized by tamas always become beasts—such is the threefold destination . . . 43. Elephants, horses, Sūdras and contemptible Mlechhas, lions, tigers, and boars form the middle dark condition . . . 46. Kings, Kshattriyas, a king’s priests (purohitāḥ), and men whose chief occupation is the war of words, compose the middle condition of passion . . . 48. Devotees, ascetics, Brāhmanas, the deities borne on aerial cars, constellations, and Daityas, constitute the lowest condition of goodness. 49. Sacrificing priests, rishis, gods, the vedas, the celestial luminaries, years, the fathers, the Sādhyas, form the second condition of goodness. 50. Brah-mā, the creators,⁶⁶ righteousness, the Great One (mahat), the Unapparent One (avyakta), compose the highest condition of goodness.”

⁶⁶ These “creators” (viśvasṛjāḥ) are thus mentioned in Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 9, 2. Ādurām Agnīm chinvānāḥ pūve viśvasṛjo mṛitāḥ | śataṃ varsha-sahasrāṇi dikṣitāḥ satram āsata | 3. tapāḥ āsīd grihapatir Brahma brahmā bhavat svayam | satyaṃ ha hotaishūm āsīd yad viśvasṛja āsata | amṛitam ebhya udagōyāt sahasram parivat-sarān | bhūtaṃ ha prastotaishām āsīd bhaviṣyat prati chāharat | prāṇo adhvaryur abhavad idaṃ sarvaṃ sikhṣasatūm | . . . 7. Viśvasṛjāḥ prathamāḥ satram āsata | . . . | tato ha jajne bhuvanasya gopāḥ hiraṇmayāḥ śakunir Brahma nāma | yena sūryas tapati tejaseddhaḥ | . . . 8. Etena vai viśvasṛjāḥ idaṃ viśvam aṣṛjanta | yad viśvam aṣṛjanta tasmād viśvasṛjāḥ | viśvam enān anu prajāyate | “2. The ancient and immortal creators of the universe, keeping fire kindled till they saw the new moon, and consecrated, were engaged in a sacrifice for 100,000 years. 3. Austere fervour was the householder; Prayer itself (brahma) was the brahmā priest; Truth was their hotṛi, when the creators were so occupied. Immortality was their udgātṛi for a thousand years. The Past was their prastotṛi, the Future their pratihartṛi; Breath was the adhvaryu, whilst they were seeking to obtain all this.” After a good deal more of this allegory, the author proceeds in para.: 7. “These first

It will be observed that the different parts of this account of the mode in which the three qualities are distributed, are not quite in harmony. From v. 40 it would appear that all souls having the quality of passion become men; and yet we find from vv. 43, 48, and 49, that Sūdras belong to the tāmāsa class, and Brāhmins, of different descriptions, to two of the Sāttvika grades. According to the rule enunciated in v. 40, the latter ought to have been born as gods.

It is, further, remarkable that in this enumeration Sūdras are found in the same category with Mlechhas (v. 43), that the Vaiśyas are not accommodated with a position in any of the classes, that Kshattriyas and kings' domestic priests, who are of course Brāhmins, and others (who must be Brāhmins) fond of disputation on learned questions⁶⁷ (though not stated to be heretical) are ranked together as "passionate" (v. 46), while other Brāhmins of different characters are placed in two of the higher grades, Brāhmins simply so called (viprāḥ) being regarded as "good" in the lowest degree (v. 48), and sacrificing priests (yajvānaḥ) sharing with rishis, gods, the vedas, etc., the honour of the middle condition of goodness. It is not clear whether the devotees, and ascetics, mentioned in v. 48, belong to the same caste as the Brāhmins with whom they are associated, or may also be men of the inferior classes. Nor is it evident for what reason the sacrificing priests (yajvānaḥ), specified in v. 49, are so much more highly estimated than the king's priests (rājanaḥ purohitāḥ) in v. 46, since the latter also officiate at sacrifices. The honourable position assigned to Daityas in the lowest class of "good" beings (v. 48) is also deserving of notice. We shall see in the following chapter that the Purāṇas variously describe mankind as belonging entirely to the "passionate" class (see v. 40, above) and as characterized by the three other "qualities," according to their caste.

creators were engaged in sacrifice . . . Thence was born the preserver of the world, the golden bird called Brahma, by whom the sun glows, kindled with light. . . . 8. . . . Through this the creators created this universe. As they created the universe, they are called visvasṛjāḥ. . . Everything is created after them." See above the reference made to ṛishayo bhūta-kṛitāḥ in p. 37. The allegory in this extract from the Taitt. Br. resembles in its character that in the sixth verse of the Puruṣa Sūkta.

I shall in the next section adduce the description given in the Vishṇu Purāṇa of the creation of living creatures, and the origin of the four castes, after first supplying in the present some explanation of the great mundane periods, the Yugas, Manvantaras, Kalpas, etc.

The computations of these great periods are stated in the third chapter of the first book, and in the first chapter of the sixth book, and are clearly explained by Professor Wilson in his notes to page 50 of his translation.

12,000 divine years are equal to a period of four Yugas, which is us made up, viz.: Brahma's day = 1000 Yugas.

As a day of the gods is = to one year of mortals, the 12,000 divine years must be multiplied by 360, the assumed number of days in a year, to give the number of the years of mortals in this great period of four yugas, thus: 12,000 divine years \times 360 = 4,320,000 years of mortals. 1000 of these periods of 12,000 divine, or 4,320,000 human, years—i.e., 4,320,000,000 human years are = 1 day of Brahmā,⁷⁰ and his night is of the same duration. Within that period of a day of Brahmā, 14 Manus reign,⁷¹ and a Manvantara, or period of Manu, is consequently = the 14th part of a day of Brahmā. In the present Kalpa (= a day of Brahmā) six Manus, of whom Svāyambhuva was the first, have already passed away, the present Manu being Vaivasvata.⁷² In each Manvantara seven rishis, certain deities, an Indra, a Manu, and the kings, his sons, are created and perish.⁷³ A thousand of the systems of 4 Yugas, as has been before explained, occur coincidentally with these 14 Manvantaras; and consequently about 71 systems of 4 Yugas elapse during each Manvantara, and measure the lives of the Manu and the deities of the period.⁷⁴ At the close of this day of Brahmā a collapse (pratisancharaḥ) of the universe takes place, which lasts through a night of Brahmā, equal in duration to his day, during which period the three worlds are converted into one great ocean, when the lotus-born god,⁷⁵ expanded by his deglutition of the universe, and contemplated by the yogis and gods in Janaloka, sleeps on the serpent Śeṣha. At the end of that night he awakes and creates anew.⁷⁶

A year of Brahmā is composed of the proper number of such days and nights; and 100 such years constitute his whole life. The period of his life is called Para, and the half of it Parārdha, or the half of a Para. One Parārdha, or half of Brahmā's existence, has now expired, terminating with the great Kalpa, called the Pādma Kalpa. The now existing Kalpa, or day of Brahmā, called Vārāha (or that of the boar), is the first of the second Parārdha of Brahmā's existence.⁷⁷ The dissolution, which occurs at the end of each Kalpa, or day of Brahmā, is called naimittika, incidental, occasional, or contingent. (See Wilson's Vishṇu Purana, vol. i. of Dr. Hall's edition, p. 52, with the editor's note; and vol. ii. p. 269. For an account of the other dissolutions of the universe I refer to the same work, vol. i. p. 113, and to pp. 630–633 of the original 4to. edition.)

Of this elaborate system of Yugas, Manvantaras, and Kalpas, of enormous duration, no traces are found in the hymns of the Rig-veda. Their authors were, indeed, familiar with the word Yuga,⁷⁸ which frequently occurs in the sense of age, generation, or tribe. Thus in i. 139, 8; iii. 26, 3; vi. 8, 5; vi. 15, 8; vi. 36, 5; x. 94, 12, the phrase *yuge yuge*⁷⁹ means "in every age." In iii. 33, 8; x. 10, 10, we have uttarā yugāni, "future ages," and in x. 72, 1, uttare yuge, "in a later age;" in vii. 70, 4, pūrvāni yugāni, "former ages,"⁸⁰ and in i. 184, 3, yuga jūrṇā, "past ages." In i. 92, 11; i. 103, 4; i. 115, 2; i. 124, 2; i. 144, 4;⁸¹ ii. 2, 2; v. 52, 4; vi. 16, 23; vii. 9, 4; viii. 46, 12; viii. 51, 9; ix. 12, 7;⁸² x. 27, 19; x. 140, 6⁸³ (in all of which places, except i. 115, 2, the word is combined with manushyā, mānushā, manu-śah, or janūnām), yuga seems to denote "generations" of men, or parārdhasya varttamānasya vai devja | Vārāhaḥ iti kalpo 'yam prathamah parikalpitaḥ |

⁷⁸ In Professor Willson's Dictionary three senses are assigned to yuga (neuter) (1) a pair; (2) an age as the Kṛita, Tretā, etc.; (3) a lustre, or period of five years. When used as masculine the word means, according to the same authority, (1) a yoke; (2) a measure of four cubits, etc.; (3) a particular drug.

⁷⁹ Sāyana, on iii. 36, 3, explains it by pratidinam, "every day;" on vi. 8, 5; vi. 15, 8; vi. 36, 5, by kāle kāle, "at every time."

⁸⁰ Sāyana takes the phrase for former "couples of husbands and wives," mithunāni jūyāpatirūpāni.

rather, in some places, "tribes" of men. In v. 73, 3, the phrase nāhushā yugā must have a similar meaning. In i. 158, 6, it is said that the rishi Dīrghatamas became worn out in the tenth yuga; on which Professor Wilson remarks (R. V. vol. ii. 104, note): "The scholiast understands yuga in its ordinary interpretation; but the yuga of five years is perhaps intended, a lustrum, which would be nothing marvellous." Professor Aufrecht proposes to render, "in the tenth stage of life." The first passage of the Rīg-veda, in which there is any indication of a considerable mundane period being denoted, is x. 72, 2 f., where "a first," or, "an earlier age (yuga) of the gods" is mentioned (devānām pūrve yuge; devānām prathame yuge) when "the existent sprang from the non-existent" (asataḥ sad ajāyata); but no allusion is made to its length. In the same indefinite way reference is made in x. 97, 1, to certain "plants which were produced before the gods,—three ages (yugas) earlier" (yāḥ oshadhīḥ pūrvāḥ jātāḥ devebhyas tri-yugam purā). In one verse of the Atharva-veda, however, the word yuga is so employed as to lead to the supposition that a period of very long duration is intended. It is there said, viii. 2, 21 : śataṁ te ayutaṁ hāyanān dve yuge tṛiṇi chatvāri kṛiṇmaḥ | "we allot to thee a hundred, ten thousand, years, two, three, four ages (yugas)."⁶⁴ As we may with probability assume that the periods here mentioned proceed in the ascending scale of duration, two yugas, and perhaps even one yuga, must be supposed to exceed 10,000 years.

The earliest comparison between divine and human periods of duration of which I am aware is found in the text of the Taitt. Br. quoted above in a note to p. 43: "A year is one day of the gods."⁶⁵ But so far as that passage itself shows, there is no reason to imagine that the statement it contains was anything more than an isolated idea, or that the conception had, at the time when the Brāhmaṇas were compiled, been developed, and a system of immense mundane periods, whether human or divine, had been elaborated. That, however, the authors of the Brāhmanas were becoming familiar with the idea of extravagantly large numbers is clear from the passage in the Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 9, 2, quoted above, p. 41, in the note on Manu xii. 50, where it is said that the creators were engaged in a sacrifice for 100,000 years.

Professor Roth is of opinion (see his remarks under the word Kṛita in his Lexicon) that according to the earlier conception stated in Manu i. 69, and the Mahābhārata (iii. 826 ff.), the four Yugas—Kṛita, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali, with their mornings and evenings, consisted respectively of no more than 4,800; 3,600; 2,400; and 1,200 ordinary years of mortals; and that it was the commentators on Manu, and the compilers of the Purāṇas, who first converted the years of which they were made up into divine years. The verse of Manu to which Professor Roth refers (i. 69), and the one which follows, are certainly quite silent about the years composing the Kṛita age being divine years:

Chatvāry āhuḥ sahasrāṇi varshāṇāṃ tu kṛitaṃ yugam | tasya tārach chhati sandhyā sandhyāṃśchaścha tathāvidhaḥ | 70. Itareshu sasandhyeshu sasandhāṃśeshu cha trishu | ekāpāyena varttante sahasrāṇi satāni cha |
 "They say that four thousand years compose the kṛita yuga, with as many hundred years for its morning and the same for its evening. 70. In the other three yugas, with their mornings and evenings, the thousands and hundreds are diminished successively by one."

Verse 71 is as follows: Yad etat parisankhyātam ādāv eva chatur-yugam | etad dvādaśa-sahasraṃ devānāṃ yugam uchyate | which, as explained by Medhātithi, may be thus rendered: "Twelve thousand of these periods of four yugas, as above reckoned, are called a Yuga of the gods." Medhātithi's words, as quoted by Kullūka, are these: Chaturyugair eva dvādaśa-sahasra-sankhyair divyam yugam | "A divine Yuga is formed by four yugas to the number of twelve thousand." Kullūka, however, says that his predecessor's explanation is mistaken, and must not be adopted (Medhātithiher bhramo nādarttaryaḥ). His own opinion is that the system of yugas mentioned in vv. 69 and 71 are identical, both being made up of divine years. According to this view, we must translate v. 71 as follows: "The period of four yugas, consisting of twelve thousand years, which has been reckoned above, is called a Yuga of the gods." This certainly appears to be the preferable translation, and it is confirmed by the tenor of verse 79. Verse 71, however, may represent a later stage of opinion, as it is not found in the following passage of the Mahābhārata, where the previous verse (69) is repeated, and verse 70 is expanded into three verses, though without any alteration of the sense:

M. Bh. iii. 12826 ff. — Ādīto manuḥ-vyāghra kṛitsnasya jagataḥ kshaye | chatvāry āhuḥ sahasrāṇi varshānām tat kṛitām yugam | tasya tārachchhatī sandhyā sandhyāmścha tathāvidhaḥ |

"In the beginning, after the destruction of the entire universe, they say that there are four thousand years: that is the Kṛita Yuga, which has a morning of as many hundred years, and an evening of the same duration." And then, after enumerating in like manner the other three Yugas with their respective thousands and hundreds successively diminished by one, the speaker (the sage Mārkaṇḍeya) proceeds in verse 12831: Eshā dvādaśahasrī yugākhyā parikīrtitā | etat sahasraparyantam aho brāhman udāhṛitam | "This period of twelve thousand years is known by the appellation of the Yugas. A period extending to a thousand of these is called a day of Brahmā."

Nowhere, certainly, in this passage is any mention made of the years being divine years.

The earliest known text in which the names of the four Yugas are found is a verse occurring in the story of Sunahśepha in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa vii. 15: Kaliḥ śayāno bhavati sanjihānas tu dvāparaḥ | uttiṣṭhaṁs tretā bhavati kṛitām sampadyate charan | "A man while lying is the Kali; moving himself, he is the Dvāpara; rising, he is the Tretā; walking, he becomes the Kṛita."⁸⁶ But this brief allusion leaves us

⁸⁶ This verse has been already translated no less than six times; twice into German by Weber and Roth (Ind. Stud. i. 286 and 460), once into Latin by Streiter (see Ind. Stud. ix. 315), and thrice into English, by Wilson (Journ. R. A. S. for 1851, p. 99), Müller (Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 412), and Haug (Ait. Br. ii. 464). All these authors, except the last, concur in considering the verse as referring to the four Yugas. Dr. Haug, however, has the following note: "Sāyana does not give any explanation of this important passage, where the names of the Yugas are mentioned for the first time. These four names are, as is well known from other sources, . . . names of dice, used at gambling. The meaning of this Gāthā is, There is every success to be hoped; for the unluckiest die, the Kali is lying, two others are slowly moving and half fallen, but the luckiest, the Kṛita, is in full motion. The position of dice here given is indicative of a fair chance of winning the game." Both Dr. Haug's translation and note are criticised by Professor Weber (Ind. Stud. ix. 319). Of the following verses, which occur in Manu ix. 301 f., the second is a paraphrase of that in the Aitareya Brāh-quite in the dark as to the duration which was assigned to these yugas in the age when the Brāhmaṇa was compiled.

SECT. VII.—Account of the different creations, including that of the castes, according to the Vishṇu Purāṇa.

I commence with the following general account of the cosmogony of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, extracted from Professor Wilson's Preface to his translation of that work, vol. i. p. xciii. :

"The first book of the six, into which the work is divided, is occupied chiefly with the details of creation, primary (sarga), and secondary (pratisarga); the first explains how the universe proceeds from Prakṛiti, or eternal crude matter;⁸⁷ the second, in what manner the forms of things are developed from the elementary substances previously evolved, or how they re-appear after their temporary destruction.⁸⁸ Both these creations are periodical; but the termination of the first occurs only at the end of the life of Brahmā, when not only all the gods and all other forms are annihilated, but the elements are again merged into primary substance, besides which only one spiritual being exists. The latter takes place at the end of every Kalpa or day of Brahmā, and affects only the forms of inferior creatures and lower worlds, leaving the substances of the universe entire, and sages and gods unharmed."⁸⁹

mana : Kṛitam tretā-yugaṁ chaiva dvāparam kalir eva cha | rājno vṛittānti sarvāṇi rājā hi yugam uchyate | 302. Kaliḥ prasupto bhavati sa jāgrat dvāparam yugam | karmasv abhyudyatas tretā vicharaṁ tu kṛitāṁ yugam | "301. The Kṛita, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali yugas are all modes of a king's action; for a king is called a yuga. 302. While asleep he is the Kali; waking he is the Dvāpara age; intent upon action he is the Tretā, moving about he is the Kṛita." The former of these two verses of Manu is reproduced nearly verbatim in the M. Bh. xii. 3408; and the same idea is expanded in the same book of the same poem, vv. 2674 ff., 2682, 2684, 2686, 2693 ff. The words kṛita, tretā, dvāpara, and kali, are found in the Vāj.-Sanhitā, xxx. 18, and in the Taitt. Brāhmaṇa, iii. 4, 1, 16; but in both places they denote dice, as does also the word kṛita in the Chhāndogya Upan. iv. 1, 4 (where see the commentary). On the Yugas the reader of German may also consult Weber's Indische Studien, i. pp. 39, 87 f., 282 ff.

“2. At the end of the past (or Pādma) Kalpa, arising from his night slumber, Brahmā, the lord, endowed predominantly with the quality of goodness, beheld the universe void. 3. He (was) the supreme lord Nārāyaṇa, who cannot even be conceived by other beings, the deity without beginning, the source of all things, existing in the form of Brahmā.” [The verse given in Manu i. 10, regarding the derivation of the word Nārāyaṇa (see above p. 35) is here quoted]. “6. This lord of creatures, discovering by inference,—when the world had become one ocean,—that the earth lay within the waters, and being desirous to raise it up, (7) assumed another body. As formerly, at the beginnings of the Kalpas, he had taken the form of a fish,

a tortoise, and so forth,⁹⁰ (so now) entering the body of a boar (8),—a form composed of the vedas and of sacrifice,—the lord of creatures, who, throughout the entire continuance of the world, remains fixed, the universal soul, the supreme soul, self-sustained, the supporter of the earth (9),—being hymned by Sanaka and the other saints, who had (at the dissolution of the lower worlds) proceeded to Janaloka,—entered the water.” [He is then addressed by the goddess Earth in a hymn of praise, as Vishṇu, and as the supreme Brahmā, vv. 10-24. The boar then rises from the lower regions, tossing up the earth with his tusk, and is again lauded by Sanandana and other saints in a second hymn, in the course of which he himself is identified with sacrifice, and his various members with its different instruments and accompaniments, vv. 25-44]. “45. Being thus lauded, the supreme soul, the upholder of the earth, lifted her up quickly and placed her upon the great waters. 46. Resting upon this mass of water, like a vast ship, she does not sink, owing to her expansion. Then, having levelled the earth, the divine eternal Purushottama heaped together mountains according to their divisions. 47. He whose will cannot be frustrated, by his unfailing power, created on the surface of the earth all those mountains which had been burnt up in the former creation. 48. Having then divided the earth, just as it had been, into seven dvīpas, he formed the four worlds Bhūloka and others as before. 49. Becoming next pervaded with the quality of passion, that divine being Hari, assuming the form of Brahmā, with four faces, effected the creation. 50. But he is merely the instrumental cause of the things to be created and of the creative operations, since the properties of the things to be created arise from Pradhāna as their (material) cause. 51. Excepting an instrumental cause alone, nothing else is required. Every substance (vastu) is brought into the state of substance (vastutā) by its own inherent power.”⁹¹

⁹⁰ No mention is made in the Brāhmaṇas (as I have already observed) of any such periods as the Kalpas. But here an attempt is made to systematize the different stories scattered through those older works which variously describe the manner in which the creation was effected—with the view, perhaps, of reconciling the discrepancies in those free and artless speculations which offended the critical sense of a later age.

[Before proceeding further with the narrative of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, I wish to quote or refer to some passages from the Taittirīya Saṁhitā and Brāhmaṇa and from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, which appear to furnish the original germs of the legends of the boar, fish, tortoise, and dwarf incarnations.

The first of these texts is from the Taittirīya Saṁhitā, vii. 1, 5, 1 ff:

Āpo vai idam agre salilam āsīt | tasmin Prajāpatiḥ vāyur bhūtvā acharat | sa imām apaśyat | tam varāho bhūtvā āharat | tām Viśvakarmā bhūtvā vyamart | sū aprathata | sū prithivī abharat | tat prithivīyai prithivītvam | tasyām āsrūmyat Prajāpatiḥ | sa devān asṛijata Vasūn Rudrān Ādityān | te devāḥ Prajāpatim abruvan "prajāyāmahai" iti | so 'bravīd "yathā aham yushmāns tapasā asṛikṣhi evaṁ tapasi prajānanam icchēhadhvam" iti | tebhyo 'gnim āyatanam prūyachhad "etena āyatanena śrūmyata" iti | te 'gninā āyatanena āsrūmyan | te saṁvatsare śkāṁ gām asṛijanta |

"This universe was formerly waters, fluid. On it Prajāpati, becoming wind, moved.⁹² He saw this (earth). Becoming a boar, he took her up. Becoming Viśvakarman, he wiped (the moisture from) her. She extended. She became the extended one (prithivī). From this the earth derives her designation as the extended one. In her Prajāpati performed arduous devotion. He created gods, Vasus, Rudras,⁹⁴ and Adityas. The gods said to Prajāpati, 'let us be propagated.' He answered, 'As I have created you through austere fervour, so do ye seek after propagation in austere fervour.' He gave them Agni as a resting-place (saying), 'With this as a resting-place perform your devotion.' They (accordingly) performed devotion with Agni as a resting-place. In a year they created one cow, etc."⁹³

sva-saktyā can be properly rendered, as Dr. Hall does, "by its potency." The reading of the MSS. in v. 50, pradhāna-kāraṇābhūtāḥ seems to me doubtful, as it would most naturally mean "have become the Pradhāna-cause." I conjecture pradhāna-kāraṇābhūtāḥ, which gives the sense which seems to be required.

⁹² It is possible that the idea assigned to the word Nārāyaṇa (see Manu i. 10, above), "he whose place of movement is the waters," may be connected with this passage. See also Genesis i. 2, "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."

The second passage is from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 3, 5 ff. Āpo vai idam agre salilam āsīt | tena Prajāpatiḥ āsrūmyat "katham idaṁ syād" iti | so 'paśyat pushkara-pūrṇam tishṭhat | so 'manyata "asti vai tad yasminn idam adhitishṭhati" iti | sa varāho rūpam kṛtvā upanyamajjat | sa pṛthivīm adhaḥ ārchhat | tasyā upahatya udamajjat | tat pushkara-parṇe 'prathayat | yad "aprathata" tat pṛthivyai pṛthivītvam | "abhūt vai idam" iti tad bhūmyai bhūmitvam | tām diśo 'nu vātaḥ samavahat | tām śarkarābhīr adṛmhat |

"This (universe) was formerly water, fluid.⁹⁴ With that (water) Prajāpati practised arduous devotion (saying), 'how shall this (universe be (developed)?' He beheld a lotus-leaf standing.⁹⁵ He thought, 'there is somewhat on which this (lotus-leaf) rests.' He as a boar—having assumed that form—plunged beneath towards it. He found the earth down below. Breaking off (a portion of) her, he rose to the surface. He then extended it on the lotus-leaf. Inasmuch as he extended it, that is the extension of the extended one (the earth). This became (abhūt). From this the earth derives its name of bhūmī. The wind carried her, to the four quarters. He strengthened her with gravel, etc., etc. १३ १४ १५ १६ १७ १८ १९ २० २१ २२ २३ २४ २५ २६ २७ २८ २९ ३० ३१ ३२ ३३ ३४ ३५ ३६ ३७ ३८ ३९ ४० ४१ ४२ ४३ ४४ ४५ ४६ ४७ ४८ ४९ ५० ५१ ५२ ५३ ५४ ५५ ५६ ५७ ५८ ५९ ६० ६१ ६२ ६३ ६४ ६५ ६६ ६७ ६८ ६९ ७० ७१ ७२ ७३ ७४ ७५ ७६ ७७ ७८ ७९ ८० ८१ ८२ ८३ ८४ ८५ ८६ ८७ ८८ ८९ ९० ९१ ९२ ९३ ९४ ९५ ९६ ९७ ९८ ९९ १०० १०१ १०२ १०३ १०४ १०५ १०६ १०७ १०८ १०९ ११० १११ ११२ ११३ ११४ ११५ ११६ ११७ ११८ ११९ १२० १२१ १२२ १२३ १२४ १२५ १२६ १२७ १२८ १२९ १३० १३१ १३२ १३३ १३४ १३५ १३६ १३७ १३८ १३९ १४० १४१ १४२ १४३ १४४ १४५ १४६ १४७ १४८ १४९ १५० १५१ १५२ १५३ १५४ १५५ १५६ १५७ १५८ १५९ १६० १६१ १६२ १६३ १६४ १६५ १६६ १६७ १६८ १६९ १७० १७१ १७२ १७३ १७४ १७५ १७६ १७७ १७८ १७९ १८० १८१ १८२ १८३ १८४ १८५ १८६ १८७ १८८ १८९ १९० १९१ १९२ १९३ १९४ १९५ १९६ १९७ १९८ १९९ २०० २०१ २०२ २०३ २०४ २०५ २०६ २०७ २०८ २०९ २१० २११ २१२ २१३ २१४ २१५ २१६ २१७ २१८ २१९ २२० २२१ २२२ २२३ २२४ २२५ २२६ २२७ २२८ २२९ २३० २३१ २३२ २३३ २३४ २३५ २३६ २३७ २३८ २३९ २४० २४१ २४२ २४३ २४४ २४५ २४६ २४७ २४८ २४९ २५० २५१ २५२ २५३ २५४ २५५ २५६ २५७ २५८ २५९ २६० २६१ २६२ २६३ २६४ २६५ २६६ २६७ २६८ २६९ २७० २७१ २७२ २७३ २७४ २७५ २७६ २७७ २७८ २७९ २८० २८१ २८२ २८३ २८४ २८५ २८६ २८७ २८८ २८९ २९० २९१ २९२ २९३ २९४ २९५ २९६ २९७ २९८ २९९ ३०० ३०१ ३०२ ३०३ ३०४ ३०५ ३०६ ३०७ ३०८ ३०९ ३१० ३११ ३१२ ३१३ ३१४ ३१५ ३१६ ३१७ ३१८ ३१९ ३२० ३२१ ३२२ ३२३ ३२४ ३२५ ३२६ ३२७ ३२८ ३२९ ३३० ३३१ ३३२ ३३३ ३३४ ३३५ ३३६ ३३७ ३३८ ३३९ ३४० ३४१ ३४२ ३४३ ३४४ ३४५ ३४६ ३४७ ३४८ ३४९ ३५० ३५१ ३५२ ३५३ ३५४ ३५५ ३५६ ३५७ ३५८ ३५९ ३६० ३६१ ३६२ ३६३ ३६४ ३६५ ३६६ ३६७ ३६८ ३६९ ३७० ३७१ ३७२ ३७३ ३७४ ३७५ ३७६ ३७७ ३७८ ३७९ ३८० ३८१ ३८२ ३८३ ३८४ ३८५ ३८६ ३८७ ३८८ ३८९ ३९० ३९१ ३९२ ३९३ ३९४ ३९५ ३९६ ३९७ ३९८ ३९९ ४०० ४०१ ४०२ ४०३ ४०४ ४०५ ४०६ ४०७ ४०८ ४०९ ४१० ४११ ४१२ ४१३ ४१४ ४१५ ४१६ ४१७ ४१८ ४१९ ४२० ४२१ ४२२ ४२३ ४२४ ४२५ ४२६ ४२७ ४२८ ४२९ ४३० ४३१ ४३२ ४३३ ४३४ ४३५ ४३६ ४३७ ४३८ ४३९ ४४० ४४१ ४४२ ४४३ ४४४ ४४५ ४४६ ४४७ ४४८ ४४९ ४५० ४५१ ४५२ ४५३ ४५४ ४५५ ४५६ ४५७ ४५८ ४५९ ४६० ४६१ ४६२ ४६३ ४६४ ४६५ ४६६ ४६७ ४६८ ४६९ ४७० ४७१ ४७२ ४७३ ४७४ ४७५ ४७६ ४७७ ४७८ ४७९ ४८० ४८१ ४८२ ४८३ ४८४ ४८५ ४८६ ४८७ ४८८ ४८९ ४९० ४९१ ४९२ ४९३ ४९४ ४९५ ४९६ ४९७ ४९८ ४९९ ५०० ५०१ ५०२ ५०३ ५०४ ५०५ ५०६ ५०७ ५०८ ५०९ ५१० ५११ ५१२ ५१३ ५१४ ५१५ ५१६ ५१७ ५१८ ५१९ ५२० ५२१ ५२२ ५२३ ५२४ ५२५ ५२६ ५२७ ५२८ ५२९ ५३० ५३१ ५३२ ५३३ ५३४ ५३५ ५३६ ५३७ ५३८ ५३९ ५४० ५४१ ५४२ ५४३ ५४४ ५४५ ५४६ ५४७ ५४८ ५४९ ५५० ५५१ ५५२ ५५३ ५५४ ५५५ ५५६ ५५७ ५५८ ५५९ ५६० ५६१ ५६२ ५६३ ५६४ ५६५ ५६६ ५६७ ५६८ ५६९ ५७० ५७१ ५७२ ५७३ ५७४ ५७५ ५७६ ५७७ ५७८ ५७९ ५८० ५८१ ५८२ ५८३ ५८४ ५८५ ५८६ ५८७ ५८८ ५८९ ५९० ५९१ ५९२ ५९३ ५९४ ५९५ ५९६ ५९७ ५९८ ५९९ ६०० ६०१ ६०२ ६०३ ६०४ ६०५ ६०६ ६०७ ६०८ ६०९ ६१० ६११ ६१२ ६१३ ६१४ ६१५ ६१६ ६१७ ६१८ ६१९ ६२० ६२१ ६२२ ६२३ ६२४ ६२५ ६२६ ६२७ ६२८ ६२९ ६३० ६३१ ६३२ ६३३ ६३४ ६३५ ६३६ ६३७ ६३८ ६३९ ६४० ६४१ ६४२ ६४३ ६४४ ६४५ ६४६ ६४७ ६४८ ६४९ ६५० ६५१ ६५२ ६५३ ६५४ ६५५ ६५६ ६५७ ६५८ ६५९ ६६० ६६१ ६६२ ६६३ ६६४ ६६५ ६६६ ६६७ ६६८ ६६९ ६७० ६७१ ६७२ ६७३ ६७४ ६७५ ६७६ ६७७ ६७८ ६७९ ६८० ६८१ ६८२ ६८३ ६८४ ६८५ ६८६ ६८७ ६८८ ६८९ ६९० ६९१ ६९२ ६९३ ६९४ ६९५ ६९६ ६९७ ६९८ ६९९ ७०० ७०१ ७०२ ७०३ ७०४ ७०५ ७०६ ७०७ ७०८ ७०९ ७१० ७११ ७१२ ७१३ ७१४ ७१५ ७१६ ७१७ ७१८ ७१९ ७२० ७२१ ७२२ ७२३ ७२४ ७२५ ७२६ ७२७ ७२८ ७२९ ७३० ७३१ ७३२ ७३३ ७३४ ७३५ ७३६ ७३७ ७३८ ७३९ ७४० ७४१ ७४२ ७४३ ७४४ ७४५ ७४६ ७४७ ७४८ ७४९ ७५० ७५१ ७५२ ७५३ ७५४ ७५५ ७५६ ७५७ ७५८ ७५९ ७६० ७६१ ७६२ ७६३ ७६४ ७६५ ७६६ ७६७ ७६८ ७६९ ७७० ७७१ ७७२ ७७३ ७७४ ७७५ ७७६ ७७७ ७७८ ७७९ ७८० ७८१ ७८२ ७८३ ७८४ ७८५ ७८६ ७८७ ७८८ ७८९ ७९० ७९१ ७९२ ७९३ ७९४ ७९५ ७९६ ७९७ ७९८ ७९९ ८०० ८०१ ८०२ ८०३ ८०४ ८०५ ८०६ ८०७ ८०८ ८०९ ८१० ८११ ८१२ ८१३ ८१४ ८१५ ८१६ ८१७ ८१८ ८१९ ८२० ८२१ ८२२ ८२३ ८२४ ८२५ ८२६ ८२७ ८२८ ८२९ ८३० ८३१ ८३२ ८३३ ८३४ ८३५ ८३६ ८३७ ८३८ ८३९ ८४० ८४१ ८४२ ८४३ ८४४ ८४५ ८४६ ८४७ ८४८ ८४९ ८५० ८५१ ८५२ ८५३ ८५४ ८५५ ८५६ ८५७ ८५८ ८५९ ८६० ८६१ ८६२ ८६३ ८६४ ८६५ ८६६ ८६७ ८६८ ८६९ ८७० ८७१ ८७२ ८७३ ८७४ ८७५ ८७६ ८७७ ८७८ ८७९ ८८० ८८१ ८८२ ८८३ ८८४ ८८५ ८८६ ८८७ ८८८ ८८९ ८९० ८९१ ८९२ ८९३ ८९४ ८९५ ८९६ ८९७ ८९८ ८९९ ९०० ९०१ ९०२ ९०३ ९०४ ९०५ ९०६ ९०७ ९०८ ९०९ ९१० ९११ ९१२ ९१३ ९१४ ९१५ ९१६ ९१७ ९१८ ९१९ ९२० ९२१ ९२२ ९२३ ९२४ ९२५ ९२६ ९२७ ९२८ ९२९ ९३० ९३१ ९३२ ९३३ ९३४ ९३५ ९३६ ९३७ ९३८ ९३९ ९४० ९४१ ९४२ ९४३ ९४४ ९४५ ९४६ ९४७ ९४८ ९४९ ९५० ९५१ ९५२ ९५३ ९५४ ९५५ ९५६ ९५७ ९५८ ९५९ ९६० ९६१ ९६२ ९६३ ९६४ ९६५ ९६६ ९६७ ९६८ ९६९ ९७० ९७१ ९७२ ९७३ ९७४ ९७५ ९७६ ९७७ ९७८ ९७९ ९८० ९८१ ९८२ ९८३ ९८४ ९८५ ९८६ ९८७ ९८८ ९८९ ९९० ९९१ ९९२ ९९३ ९९४ ९९५ ९९६ ९९७ ९९८ ९९९ १०००

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 1, 2, 11, has the following reference to the same idea, although here Prajāpati himself is not the boar:

Iyatī ha vai iyam agre pṛthivyā āsa prādeśa-mātṛī | tām Emūshaḥ itī varāhaḥ ujjaghāna | so 'syāḥ patiḥ Prajāpatiḥ tena eva enam etan-mithunena priyena dhūmnā samardhayati kṛtsnaṁ karoti |

"Formerly this earth was only so large, of the size of a span. A boar called Emūsha raised her up. Her lord Prajāpati, therefore, prospers him with (the gift of) this pair, the object of his desire, and makes him complete."

Another of the incarnations referred to in the preceding passage of sent extract was recommended for selection by its allusion to a mythological notion, which apparently gave origin to the story of the Varāha-avatāra, and from which an astronomical period, entitled Calpa, has perhaps been taken."

the Vishṇu Purāṇa is foreshadowed in the following text from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 1, 5 :

Sa yat kūrmo nāma | etad vai rūpaṁ kṛtvā Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asrijata | yad asrijata akarot tat | yad akarot tasmāt kūrmaḥ | kaśyapo vai kūrmaḥ | tasmād āhuḥ "sarvāḥ prajāḥ kāśyapyāḥ" iti | sa yaḥ sa kūrmo sau sa Ādityaḥ |

"As to its being called kūrma (a tortoise); Prajāpati having taken this form, created offspring. That which he created, he made (akarot); since he made, he is (called) kūrmaḥ. The word kaśyapa means tortoise; hence men say all creatures are descendants of Kaśyapa. This tortoise is the same as Āditya."⁹⁶

The oldest version of the story of the fish incarnation, which is to be found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 8, 1, 1 ff., will be quoted in the next chapter.

For the passages which appear to supply the germ of the dwarf incarnation, the reader may consult the fourth volume of this work, pp. 54-58 and 107 f.

It will have been noticed that in the passage above adduced from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, the word Nārāyaṇa is applied to Vishṇu, and that it is the last named deity who (though in the form of Brahmā) is said to have taken the form of a boar. In the verses formerly cited from Manu (i. 9, 10), however, Nārāyaṇa is an epithet, not of Vishṇu, but of Brahmā; and in the following text, from the Rāmāyaṇa, xi. 110, 3, it is Brahmā who is said to have become a boar :

*Sarvaṁ salilam evāsīt prithivī tatra nīrmitā | tataḥ samabhavad Brahmā svayambhūr daivataiḥ saha*⁹⁷ | sa varāhas tato bhūtvā projjahāra va-sundharām ityādi |

"All was water only, and in it the earth was fashioned. Then arose

⁹⁷ Such is the reading of Schlegel's edition, and of that which was recently printed at Bombay, both of which, no doubt, present the most ancient text of the Rāmāyaṇa. The Gauḍa recension, however, which deviates widely from the other, and appears to have modified it in conformity with more modern taste and ideas, has here also introduced a various reading in the second of the lines quoted in the text, and identifies Brahmā with Vishṇu in the following manner: tataḥ samabhavad Brahmā svayambhūr Viṣṇur avyayaḥ | "Then arose Brahmā the self-existent and imperishable Vishṇu."

Brahmā, the self existent, with the deities. He then, becoming a boar, raised up the earth," etc.

I now return to the narrative of the Vishṇu Purāṇa.]

The further process of cosmogony is thus described in chapter v. :

"Maitreya said: 1. Tell me in detail how at the beginning of the creation that deity Brahmā formed the gods, rishis, fathers, dānavas, men, beasts, trees, etc., dwelling respectively on the earth, in the sky, and in the water; 2. and with what qualities, with what nature, and of what form he made the world. Parāśara replied: 3. I declare to thee, Maitreya, how that deity created the gods and all other beings; listen with attention. While he was meditating on creation, as at the beginnings of the (previous) Kalpas, there appeared an insentient creation, composed of gloom (tamas). 4. Gloom, illusion, great illusion, darkness, and what is called utter darkness—such was the five-fold ignorance, which was manifested from that great Being, 5. as he was meditating—an insensible creation,¹⁰² under five conditions, devoid of feeling either without or within,¹⁰³ closed up, motionless. 6. And since motionless objects are called the primary objects, this is called the primary (mukhya) creation.¹⁰⁴ 7. Beholding this creation to be ineffective,¹⁰⁵ he again contemplated another. As he was desiring it the brute (tiryaksrotas) creation came forth. 8. Since (in its natural functions) it acts horizontally it is called Tiryaksrotas. 9. The (creatures composing it) are known as cattle, etc., distinguished mainly by darkness (tamas) ignorant, following irregular courses,¹⁰⁶ while in a state of ignorance having a conceit of knowledge, (10) self-regarding, self-esteeming, affected by the twenty-eight kinds of defects, endowed with inward feeling, and mutually closed. 11. As Brahmā, regarding this creation also as ineffective, was again meditating, another creation, the third, or ūrdhvasrotas, which was good, rose upward. 12. They (the creatures belonging to this creation) abounding in happiness and satisfaction, being unclosed both without and within, and possessed both of external and internal feeling, are called the offspring of the Ūrdhvasrotas creation. 13. This third creation, known as that of the gods, was one full of enjoyment. When it was completed, Brahmā was pleased. 14. He then contemplated another creation, effective and most excellent, since he regarded as ineffective the beings sprung from the primary and other creations. 15. While he, whose will is efficacious, was so desiring, the Arvāksrotas, an effective creation, was manifested.¹⁰⁶ 16. They ¹⁰⁴ See Dr. Hall's note p. 70 on Professor Wilson's translation; and also the passage quoted above p. 16 from the Taitt. Sanh. vii. 1, 1, 4, where the word mukhya is otherwise applied and explained.

¹⁰³ Vahir-anto'prakāśascha appears to be the true reading, as the Commentator renders the last word by prakṛiṣṭa-jñāna-śūnyaḥ, “devoid of knowledge.” But if this be the correct reading, it is ungrammatical, as antaḥ and aparakāśa would properly make antar-aparakāśa, not anto'prakāśa. But the Purāṇas have many forms which are irregular (ārsha, “peculiar to the rishis,” “vedic,” or “antiquated” as the Commentators style them). The Taylor MS. of the Vāyu Purāṇa reads in the parallel passage bahir-antaḥ-prakāśascha.

(the creatures belonging to it) are called Arvāksrotas, because (in their natural functions) they acted downwardly. And they abound in sensation (prakāśa) and are full of darkness (tamas) with a preponderance of passion (rajas). Hence they endure much suffering, and are constantly active, with both outward and inward feeling. These beings were men, and effective."¹⁰⁷

In the next following verses, 17–22, the names of the different creations, described in the first part of this section, and in the second chapter of the first book of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, are recapitulated, and two others, the Anugraha and the Kaumāra, are noticed, but not explained.¹⁰⁸

The speaker Parāśara then adds: "23. Thus have the nine creations of Prajāpati, both Prākṛita and Vaikṛita, the radical causes of the world, been recounted. What else dost thou desire to hear regarding the creative lord of the world? Maitreya replies: 24. By thee, most excellent Muni, the creation of the gods and other beings has been summarily narrated: I desire to hear it from thee in detail. Parāśara rejoins: Called into (renewed) existence in consequence of former actions, good or bad, and unliberated from that destination when they were absorbed at the (former) dissolution of the world, (25) the four descriptions of creatures, beginning with things immovable and ending with gods, were produced, o Brāhman, from Brahmā when he was creating, and they sprang from his mind. 26. Being then desirous to create these streams (ambhūmāsi)¹⁰⁹—the four classes of Gods, Asuras, Fathers, and Men, he concentrated himself. 27. Prajāpati, thus concentrated, received a body, which was formed of the quality of gloom (tamas); and as he desired to create, Asuras were first produced from his groin. 28. He then abandoned that body formed entirely of gloom; which when abandoned by him became night. 29. Desiring to create, when he had occupied another body, Brahmā experienced pleasure; and then gods, full of the quality of goodness, sprang from his mouth. 30. That body also, being abandoned by him, became day, which is almost entirely good. Hence the Asuras are powerful by night¹¹⁰ and the gods by day. 31. He then assumed another body formed of pure goodness; and the Fathers were born from him, when he was regarding himself as a father.¹¹¹ 32. The Lord, after creating the Fathers, abandoned that body also; which, when so abandoned, became twilight, existing between day and night. 33. He next took another body entirely formed of passion; and men, in whom passion is violent, were produced. The primeval Prajāpati speedily discarded this body also, which became faint light (vyotsnā), which is called early twilight. 34. Hence, at the appearance of this faint light, men are strong, while the fathers are strong at evening-twilight. 35. Morning-twilight, night, day, and evening-twilight, these are the four bodies of Brahmā, and the receptacles of the three qualities. 36. Brahmā next took another body entirely formed of passion, from which sprang hunger, and through it anger was produced. 37. The Divine Being then in darkness created beings emaciated with hunger, which, hideous of aspect, and with long beards, rushed against the lord. 38. Those who said, 'Let him not be preserved' (rakshyatām) were called Rākshasas, whilst those others who cried, 'Let us eat (him)' were called Yakshas from 'eating' (yakshanāt).¹¹²

¹⁰⁸ See Dr. Hall's edition of Wilson's V. P. pp. 32 ff.; and pp. 74 ff.

It is not necessary for my purpose that I should quote at length the conclusion of the section. It may suffice to say that verses 39 to 51 describe the creation of serpents from Brahmā's hair; of Bhūtas; of Gandharvas; of birds (vayāṁsi) from the creator's life (vayas), of sheep from his breast, of goats from his mouth, of kine from his belly and sides, and of horses,¹¹³ elephants, and other animals from his feet; of plants from his hairs; of the different metres and vedas from his eastern, southern, western, and northern mouths. Verses 52 ff. contain a recapitulation of the creative operations, with some statement of the

Of these verses I quote only the following: 55. Teshām ye yāni karmāni prak-sṛiṣṭhyām pratipedire | tāny eva pratipadyante sṛijyamānāḥ punaḥ punaḥ | . . . 60. Yathārtāv ritu-lingāni nānārūpāni paryaye | dṛiṣyante tāni tānyeva tathā bhāvā yugādishu | 61. Karoty evamvidhām sṛiṣṭim kalpātau sa punaḥ punaḥ | sisṛikshāsakti-yukto 'sau sṛijya-śakti-prachoditaḥ | "These creatures, as they are reproduced time after time, discharge the same functions as they had fulfilled in the previous creation . . . 60. Just as, in each season of the year, all the various characteristics of that season are perceived, on its recurrence, to be the very same as they had been before; so too are the beings produced at the beginnings of the ages"¹¹⁴ 61. Possessing both the will and the ability to create, and impelled by the powers inherent in the things to be created, the deity produces again and again a creation of the very same description at the beginning of every Kalpa."

The sixth section of the same book of the V. P., of which I shall cite the larger portion, professes to give a more detailed account of the creation of mankind.

"Maitreya says: 1. You have described to me the Arvāksrotas, or human, creation: declare to me, o Brahman, in detail the manner in which Brahmā formed it. 2. Tell me how, and with what qualities, he created the castes, and what are traditionally reputed to be the functions of the Brāhmans and others. Parāśara replies: 3. When, true to his design, Brahmā became desirous to create the world, creatures in whom goodness (sattva) prevailed sprang from his mouth; (4) others in whom passion (rajas) predominated came from his breast; others in whom both passion and darkness (tamas) were strong, proceeded from his thighs; (5) others he created from his feet, whose chief characteristic was darkness. Of these was composed the system of four castes, Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, who had respectively issued from his mouth, breast, thighs, and feet. 6. Brahmā formed this¹¹⁶ entire fourfold institution of classes for the performance of sacrifice, of which it is an excellent instrument. 7. Nourished by sacrifices, the gods nourish mankind by discharging rain. Sacrifices, the causes of prosperity, (8) are constantly celebrated by virtuous men, devoted to their duties, who avoid wrong observances, and walk in the right path. 9. Men, in consequence of their humanity, obtain heaven and final liberation; and they proceed to the world which they desire. 10. These creatures formed by Brahmā in the condition of the four castes, (were) perfectly inclined to conduct springing from religious faith, (11) loving to dwell wherever they pleased, free from all sufferings, pure in heart, pure, spotless in all observances. 14. And in their pure minds,—the pure Hari dwelling within them,—(there existed) pure knowledge whereby they beheld his highest station, called (that of) Viṣṇu.¹¹⁷ 15. Afterwards that which is described as the portion of Hari consisting of Time¹¹⁸ infused into those beings direful sin, in the form of desire and the like, ineffective (of man's end), small in amount, but gradually increasing in force, (16) the seed of unrighteousness, and sprung from darkness and cupidity. 17. Thenceforward their innate perfectness was but slightly evolved: and as all the other eight perfections called rasollāsa and the rest (18) declined, and sin increased, these creatures (mankind) were afflicted with suffering arising out of the pairs (of susceptibilities to pleasure and pain, etc., etc.) 19. They then constructed fastnesses among trees, on hills, or amid waters, as well as artificial fortresses, towns, villages, etc. 20. And in these towns, etc., they built houses on the proper plan, in order to counteract cold, heat, and other discomforts. 21. Having thus provided against cold, etc., they devised methods of livelihood depending upon labour, and executed by their hands." The kinds of grain which they cultivated are next described in the following verses 22 to 25. The text then proceeds, verse 26: "These are declared to be the fourteen kinds of grain, cultivated and wild, fitted for sacrifice; and sacrifice is an eminent cause of their existence. 27. These, too, along with sacrifice, are the most efficacious sources of progeny. Hence those who understand cause and effect celebrate sacrifices. 28. Their daily performance is beneficial to men, and delivers from sins committed. 29. But that drop of sin which had been created by time increased in men's hearts, and they disregarded sacrifice. 30. Reviling the Vedas, and the prescriptions of the Vedas, the gods, and all sacrificial rites, etc., obstructing oblations, (31) and cutting off the path of activity,¹¹⁹ they became malignant, vicious, and perverse in their designs. 32. The means of subsistence being provided, Prajāpati, having created living beings, established a distinction according to their position and qualities (see verses 3 to 5 above), (and fixed) the duties of the castes and orders, and the worlds (to be attained after death) by all the castes which perfectly fulfilled their duties. 33. The world of Prajāpati is declared to be the (future) abode of those Brāhmanas who are assiduous in religious rites; the realm of Indra the abode of those Kshatriyas who turn not back in battle; (34) that of the Maruts the abode of those Vaiśyas who fulfil their duties; and that of the Gandharvas the abode of the men of Śūdra race who abide in their vocation of service." In the remaining verses of the chapter (35 to 39) the realms of blessedness destined for the reception of more eminent saints are briefly noticed, as well as the infernal regions, to which the wicked are doomed.

“1. Then from him, as he was desiring, there were born mental sons with effects and causes¹²⁰ derived from his body. 2. Embodied spirits sprang from the limbs of that wise Being. All those creatures sprang forth which have been already described by me, (3) beginning with gods and ending with motionless objects, and existing in the condition of the three qualities. Thus were created beings moving and stationary. 4. When none of these creatures of the Wise Being multiplied, he next formed other, mental, sons like to himself, (5) Bhrigu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Angiras, Marichi, Daksha, Atri, and Vasishtha, all born from his mind. These are the nine Brahmās who have been determined in the Purāṇas. 6. But Sanandana and the others who had been previously created by Vedhas (Brahmā) had no regard for the worlds, and were indifferent to offspring. They had all attained to knowledge, were freed from desire, and devoid of envy. 7. As they were thus indifferent about the creation of the world, great wrath, sufficient to burn up the three worlds, arose in the mighty Brahmā. 8. The three worlds became entirely illuminated by the wreath of flame which sprang from his anger. 9. Then from his forehead, wrinkled by frowns and inflamed by fury, arose Rudra, luminous as the midday sun, with a body half male and half female, fiery, and huge in bulk. After saying to him, 'Divide thyself,' Brahmā vanished. 10. Being so addressed, Rudra severed himself into two, into a male and a female form. The god next divided his male body into eleven parts, (11) beautiful and hideous, gentle and ungentle; and his female figure into numerous portions with appearances black and white. 12. Brahmā then made the lord Svāyambhuva, who had formerly sprung from himself, and was none other than himself, to be Manu the protector of creatures. 13. The god Manu Svāyambhuva took for his wife the female Satarūpā, who by austere fervour had become freed from all defilement. 14. To that Male the goddess Satarūpā bore Priyavrata and Uttānapāda, and two daughters called Prasūti and Ākūti, distinguished by the qualities of beauty and magnanimity. 15. He of old gave Prasūti in marriage to Daksha, and Ākūti to Ruchi."

From a comparison of the preceding narratives of the creation of mankind, extracted from the fifth and sixth chapters of the First Book of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, it will be seen that the details given in the different accounts are not consistent with each other. It is first of all stated in the fifth chapter (verse 16) that the arvāksrotas, or human creation was characterized by the qualities of darkness and passion. In the second account (verse 33) we are told that Brahmā assumed a body composed of passion, from which men, in whom that quality is powerful, were produced.¹²¹ In neither of these narratives is the slightest allusion made to there having been any primeval and congenital distinction of classes. In the third statement given in the sixth chapter (verses 3 to 5) the human race is said to have been the result of a four-fold creation; and the four castes, produced from different parts of the creator's body, are declared to have been each especially characterized by different qualities (guṇas), viz., those who issued from his mouth by goodness (satva), those who proceeded from his breast by passion (rajas), those who were produced from his thighs by both passion and darkness (tamas), and those who sprang from his feet by darkness. In the sequel of this account, however, no mention is made of any differences of conduct arising from innate diversities of disposition having been manifested in the earliest age by the members of the different classes. On the contrary, they are described (verses 10 ff.) in language applicable to a state of perfection which was universal and uniform, as full of faith, pure-hearted and devout. In like manner the declension in purity and goodness which ensued is not represented as peculiar to any of the classes, but as common to all. So far, therefore, the different castes seem, according to this account, to have been undistinguished by any variety of mental or moral constitution. And it is not until after the deterioration of the entire race has been related, that we are told (in verses 32 f.) that the separate duties of the several castes were fixed in accordance with their position and qualities. This sketch of the moral and religious history of mankind, in the earliest period, is thus deficient in failing to explain how beings, who were originally formed with very different ethical characters, should have been all equally excellent during their period of perfection, and have also experienced an uniform process of decline.

In regard to the variation between the two narratives of the creation found in the fifth chapter of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, Professor Wilson remarks as follows in a note to vol. i. p. 80: "These reiterated, and not always very congruous, accounts of the creation are explained by the Purāṇas as referring to different Kalpas or renovations of the world, and therefore involving no incompatibility. A better reason for their appearance

As regards the first of these explanations of the discrepancies in question, it must be observed that it is inapplicable to the case before us, as the text of the Vishṇu Purāṇa itself says nothing of the different accounts of the creation having reference to different Kalpas: and in absence of any intimation to the contrary we must naturally assume that the various portions of the consecutive narration in the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters, which are connected with each other by a series of questions and answers, must all have reference to the creation which took place at the commencement of the existing or Vārūha Kalpa, as stated in the opening verse of the fourth chapter. Professor Wilson's supposition that the various and discrepant accounts "have been borrowed from different original authorities" appears to have probability in its favour. I am unable to point out the source from which the first description of the creation, in the early part of the fifth chapter, verses 1 to 23, has been derived. But the second account, given in verses 26 to 35, has evidently drawn many of its details from the passages of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa ii. 2, 9, 5-9, and ii. 3, 8, 2 f., and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa xi. 1, 6, 6 ff. which I have quoted above. And it is possible that the references which are found in the former of these descriptions in the Vishṇu Purāṇa to different portions of the creation

being ineffective may have been suggested by some of the other details in the Brāhmaṇas, which I shall now proceed to cite. At all events some of the latter appear to have given rise to the statement in the fourth verse of the seventh chapter of the Viṣṇu P. that the creatures formed by Brahmā did not multiply, as well as to various particulars in the narratives which will be quoted below from the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas. The Brāhmaṇas describe the creative operations of Prajāpati as having been attended with intense effort, and often followed by great exhaustion; and not only so, but they represent many of these attempts to bring living creatures of various kinds into existence, to sustain them after they were produced, and to ensure their propagation, as having been either altogether abortive, or only partially successful. The following quotations will afford illustrations of these different points:

Taitt. Br. i. 1, 10, 1. Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | sa ririchāno 'manyata | sa tapo 'tapyata | sa ātman vīryam apaśyat tad avarddhata |

“Prajāpati when creating living beings felt himself as it were emptied. The living creatures went away from him. They were not produced so as to prosper and to eat food. 2. He considered: ‘I have become emptied: the object for which I created them has not been fulfilled: they have gone away, and have not gained prosperity and food.’ 3. He considered: ‘how can I again replenish myself; and how shall my creatures return to me, and acquire prosperity and food?’ Desirous of progeny, he went on worshipping and performing religious rites. He beheld this Ekādaśinī (Eleven); and sacrificing with it, he again replenished himself; his creatures returned to him, and gained prosperity and food. Having sacrificed, he became more brilliant.”

"1. Prajāpati alone was formerly this universe. He reflected, 'How can I be propagated?' He toiled in religious rites, and practised austere fervour. He created living beings. After being created by him they perished. They were these birds. Man is the thing nearest to Prajāpati. This being, man, is two-footed. Hence birds are two-footed creatures. Prajāpati reflected, 'As I was formerly but one, so am I now also only one.' He created a second set of living beings. They also perished. This was the class of small reptiles other than serpents. They say he created a third set of beings, which also perished. They were these serpents . . . 3. Worshipping and toiling in religious rites, Prajāpati reflected, 'How is it that my creatures perish after they have been formed?' He perceived this, 'they perish from want of food.' In his own presence he caused milk to be supplied to breasts. He created living beings, which resorting to the breasts were then preserved. These are the creatures which did not perish."

"Prajāpati formed living creatures by the vaiśvadeva (offering to the Viśvedevas). Being created they did not propagate. Agni desired 'let me beget these creatures.' He imparted grief to Prajāpati. He grieved, desiring offspring. Hence he whom offspring blesses, and he whom it does not bless, both of them grieve, desiring progeny. Among them he created Agni also. Agni desired (?) them. Soma infused seed. Savitṛi begot them. Sarasvatī infused into them speech. Pūshan nourished them. These (gods) who are lords of nourishment are employed thrice in the year. Prajāpati is the Year. It was through the year that he generated offspring for him. The Maruts killed those creatures when they had been born, saying 'they have not employed us also. 3. Prajāpati saw this Māruta oblation in seven platters. He offered it. In consequence of it he became capable of producing offspring . . . Prajāpati lamented, (saying) 'the Maruts have slain the former living beings whom I created. How can I create others?' His vigour sprang forth in the shape of an egg. He took it up. He cherished it. It became productive."

"Prajāpati, becoming Savitṛi, created living beings. They disregarded him, and went away from him. Becoming Varuṇa he caused Varuṇa to seize them. Being seized by Varuṇa, they again ran to Prajāpati, desiring help."

Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 1, 1. Tato vai sa (Prajāpatiḥ) prajāḥ asṛijata | tā! asmat śriṣṭā apākrāman |

“Prajāpati then created living beings. They went away from him.”

I have perhaps quoted too many of these stories, which are all similar in character. But I was desirous to afford some idea of their number as well as of their tenor.

As regards the legend of Satarūpā, referred to in the seventh chapter of the first book of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, I shall make some further remarks in a future section, quoting a more detailed account given in the Matsya Purāṇa.

Of the two sons of Manu Svāyambhuva and Satarūpā, the name of the second, Uttānapāda, seems to have been suggested by the appearance of the word Uttānapad in Rig-veda x. 72, 3, 4, as the designation (nowhere else traceable, I believe) of one of the intermediate agents in the creation.¹²⁴ A Priyavrata is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa vii. 34, and also in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa x. 3, 5, 14, (where he has the patronymic of Rauhiṇāyana) but in both these texts he appears rather in the light of a religious teacher, who had lived not very long before the age of the author, than as a personage belonging to a very remote antiquity. Dakṣa also, who appears in this seventh chapter as one of the mindborn sons of Brahmā, is named in R. V. ii. 27, 1, as one of the Ādityas, and in the other hymn of the R.V. just alluded to, x. 72, vv. 4 and 5, he is noticed as being both the son and the father of the goddess Aditi. In the S. P. ii. 4, 4, he is identified with Prajāpati.¹²⁵ In regard to his origin various legends are discoverable in the Purāṇas. Besides the passage before us, there are others in the V. P. in which he is mentioned. In iv. 1, 5, it is said that he sprang from the right thumb of Brahmā, and that Aditi was his daughter (Brahmanascha dakṣhiṇāṅgushṭha-janmā Dakṣaḥ | Prajāpater Dakṣasyūpy Aditiḥ). In another place, V. P. i. 15, 52, it is said that Dakṣa, although formerly the son of Brahmā, was born to the ten Prachetasas by Mārishā (Daśabhyas tu Prachetobhyo Mārishūyām Prajāpatiḥ | jāne Dakṣo mahābhūgo yaḥ pūrvam Brahmano 'bhavat |). This double parentage of Daksha appears to Maitreya, one of the interlocutors in the Purāṇa, to require explanation, and he accordingly enquires of his informant, vv. 60 ff.: Anguṣṭhād dakṣhiṇad Dakṣhaḥ pūrvam jātaḥ śrutam mayā | katham Prāchetaso bhūyaḥ sa sambhūto mahāmune | eṣha me saṁśayo brahman samahūn hṛidi varttate | yad dauhitṛas cha somasya punaḥ śvaśuratām gataḥ | Parāśara uvācha | utpattiś cha nirodhaś cha nityau bhūteshu vai mune | ṛishayo 'tra na muhyanti ye chānye ditya-ckakṣhushaḥ | 61. Kānishṭhyaṁ jyaishṭhyam apy eṣhām pūrvam nābhūd dvijottama | tapa eva gariyo 'bhūt prabhāvas chaiva kārāṇam |

"60. I have heard that Daksha was formerly born from the right thumb of Brahmā. How was he again produced as the son of the Prachetases? This great doubt arises in my mind; and also (the question) how he, who was the daughter's son of Soma,¹²⁶ afterwards became his father-in-law. Parāśara answered: Both birth and destruction are perpetual among all creatures. Rishis, and others who have celestial insight, are not bewildered by this. In every age Daksha and the rest are born and are again destroyed: a wise man is not bewildered by this. Formerly, too, there was neither juniority nor seniority: austere fervour was the chief thing, and power was the cause (of distinction)."

The reader who desires further information regarding the part played by Daksha, whether as a progenitor of allegorical beings, or as a creator, may compare the accounts given in the sequel of the seventh and in the eleventh chapters of Book I. of the V. P. (pp. 108 ff. and 152 ff.) with that to be found in the fifteenth chapter (vol. ii. pp. 10 ff.).

I will merely add, in reference to Akūti, the second daughter of Manu Svāyambhuva and Satarūpā, that the word is found in the Rig-veda with the signification of "will" or "design;" but appears to be personified in a passage of the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 12, 9, 5 (the context of which has been cited above, p. 41), where it is said: Irā pātñī viśvasrijām ākūtir apinaḍ hariḥ | "Irā (Idā) was the wife of the creators. Akūti kneaded the oblation."

SECT. VIII.—Account of the different creations, including that of the castes, according to the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas.

I now proceed to extract from the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas the accounts which they supply of the creation, and which are to the same effect as those which have been quoted from the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, although with many varieties of detail.

I shall first adduce a passage from the fifth chapter of the Vāyu (which to some extent runs parallel with the second chapter of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa¹²⁷), on account of its containing a different account from that generally given of the triad of gods who correspond to the triad of qualities (guṇas).

Vāyu Purāṇa, chapter v. verse 11. *Ahar-mukhe pravṛtite cha paraḥ prakṛiti-sambhavaḥ | kshobhayāmāsa yogena pareṇa parameśvaraḥ | 12. Pradhānam puruṣam chaiva praviśyāṇḍam Maheśvaraḥ | 13. Pradhāna, when agitated, the quality of passion (rajas) arose, which was there a stimulating cause, as water is in seeds. 14. When an inequality in the Guṇas arises, then (the deities) who preside over them are generated. From the Guṇas thus agitated there sprang three gods (15), indwelling, supreme, mysterious, animating all things, embodied. The rajas quality was born as Brahmā, the tamas as Agni,¹²⁹ the sattva as Vishṇu. 16. Brahmā, the manifestor of rajas, acts in the character of creator; Agni, the manifestor of tamas, acts in the capacity of time; 17. Vishṇu, the manifestor of sattva, abides in a condition of indifference. These deities are the three worlds, the three qualities, (18) the three Vedas, the three fires; they are mutually dependent, mutually devoted. 19. They exist through each other, and uphold each other; they are twin-parts of one another, they subsist through one another. 20. They are not for a moment separated; they never abandon one another. Īśvara (Mahādeva) is the supreme god; and Vishṇu is superior to Mahat (the principle of intelligence); while Brahmā, filled with rajas, engages in creation. Purusha is to be regarded as supreme, as Prakṛiti is also declared to be."

The sixth section of the Vāyu P., from which the next quotation will be made, corresponds to the fourth of the Vishṇu P. quoted above.

“1. When fire had perished from the earth, and this entire world motionless and moving, together with all intermediate things, had been dissolved into one mass, and had been destroyed—waters first were produced. As the world formed at that time but one ocean, nothing could be distinguished. Then the divine Brahmā, Purusha, with a thousand eyes, a thousand feet, (3) a thousand heads, of golden hue, beyond the reach of the senses—Brahmā, called Nārāyaṇa, slept on the water. 4. But awaking in consequence of the predominance (in him) of the sattva quality, and beholding the world a void—: Here they quote a verse regarding Nārāyaṇa: 5. ‘The waters are the bodies of Nara: such is the name we have heard given to them; and because he sleeps upon them, he is called Nārāyaṇa.’ 6. Having so continued for a nocturnal period equal to a thousand Yugas, at the end of the night he takes the character of Brahmā in order to create. 7. Brahmā then becoming Vāyu (wind) moved upon that water,¹⁵¹ hither and thither, like a firefly at night in the rainy season. 8. Discovering then by inference that the earth lay within the waters, but unbewildered, (9) he took, for the purpose of raising it up, another body, as he had done at the beginnings of the (previous) Kalpas. Then that Great Being devised a celestial form. 10. Perceiving the earth to be entirely covered with water, (and asking himself) ‘what great shape shall I assume in order that I may raise it up?’—he thought upon the form of a boar, brilliant from aquatic play, invincible by all creatures, formed of speech, and bearing the name of righteousness.”

The body of the boar is then described in detail, and afterwards the elevation of the earth from beneath the waters, and the restoration of its former shape, divisions, etc.¹⁵²—the substance of the account being much the same, but the particulars different from those of the parallel passage in the Vishṇu Purāṇa.

Then follows a description of the creation coinciding in all essential points¹³³ with that quoted above, p. 55, from the beginning of the fifth chapter of the Vishṇu Purāṇa.

The further account of the creation, however, corresponding to that which I have quoted from the next part of the same chapter of that Purāṇa, is not found in the same position in the Vāyu Purāṇa,¹³⁴ but is placed at the beginning of the ninth chapter, two others, entitled Pratisandhi-kīrttana and Chaturāśrama-vibhāga, being interposed as the seventh and eighth. With the view, however, of facilitating comparison between the various cosmogonies described in the two works, I shall preserve the order of the accounts as found in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, and place the details given in the ninth chapter of the Vāyu Purāṇa before those supplied in the eighth.

The ninth chapter of the Vāyu Purāṇa, which is fuller in its details than the parallel passage in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, begins thus, without any specific reference to the contents of the preceding chapter :

Sūta uvācha | 1. Tato 'bhidhyāyatas tasya jajnire mānasīḥ prajāḥ | tach-chharīra-samutpannaiḥ kāryais taiḥ kāraṇaiḥ saha | 2. Kṣhetrajñūḥ samavarttanta gūtrebhyas tasya dhimataḥ | tato devāsura-pitrīn mānavaṁ cha chatusṭayam | 3. Sisṛikshur ambhāmśy etāni svātmanā samayūyujat | yuktātmanas tatas tasya tamomātrā śrayambhuvaḥ | 4. Tam abhidhyāyataḥ sargam prayatno 'bhūt Prajāpateḥ | tato 'sya jaghanāt pūrvam asurā jajnire sūtāḥ | 5. *Asuḥ prūṇaḥ smṛito viprais taj-janmānas tato 'surāḥ | yayā śṛishṭāsuras tanvā tām tanuṁ sa vyapohata*¹³⁵ | 6. Sā 'pariddhā tanus tena sadyo rātrir ajāyata | sū tamo-bahulā yasmāt tato rātris triyāmikā | 7. Āritās tamasā rātrau prajāś tasmāt svapanty uta | dṛishṭrā 'surāṁś tu deveśas tanum anyām apadyata | 8. Aryaktām sattra-bahulām tatas tām so 'bhyayūyujat | tutas tām yunjatas tasya priyam āsīt prabhoḥ kila | 9. Tato mukhe samutpannā divyatas tasya devatāḥ | yato 'sya divyato jātās tena devūḥ

¹³³ This is also the case with the details given in the Mürk. P. xlvii. 15-27 and ff.

¹³⁴ The Mürk. P. however observes the same order as the Vishṇu P.

¹³⁵ The reading in the passage of the Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 9, 6, from which this narrative is borrowed (see above, p. 28), is apūhata,—which, however, does not prove that that verb with vi prefixed should necessarily be the true reading here; as the Taylor and Gaikowar MSS. have vyapohata throughout, and in one place vyapohat.

¹³⁷ The Gaikowar MS. seems to read upapūrvābhyām.

¹³⁹ The Gaikowar MS. reads divā tanvā.

“Sūta says: 1. Then, as he was desiring, there sprang from him mind-born sons, with those effects and causes derived from his body. 2. Embodied spirits were produced from the bodies of that wise Being. 3. Then willing to create these four streams (ambhūmā) gods, Asuras, Fathers, and men, he fixed his spirit in abstraction. As Svayambhū was thus fixed in abstraction, a body consisting of nothing but darkness (invested him). 4. While desiring this creation, Prajāpati put forth an effort. Then Asuras were first produced as sons from his groin. 5. Asu is declared by Brahmins to mean breath. From it these beings were produced; hence they are Asuras.¹⁴⁰ He cast aside the body with which the Asuras were created. 6. Being cast away by him, that body immediately became night. Inasmuch as darkness predominated in it, night consists of three watches. 7. Hence, being enveloped in darkness, all creatures sleep at night. Beholding the Asuras, however, the Lord of gods took another body, (8) imperceptible, and having a predominance of goodness, which he then fixed in abstraction. While he continued thus to fix it, he experienced pleasure. 9. Then as he was sporting, gods were produced in his mouth. As they were born from him, while he was sporting (divyatah), they are known as Devas (gods). 10. The root div is understood in the sense of sporting. As they were born in a sportive (divya)¹⁴¹ body, they are called Devatās. 11. Having created the deities, the Lord of gods then took another body, consisting entirely of goodness (sattra). 12. Regarding himself as a father, he thought upon these sons: he created Fathers (Pitris) from his armpits in the interval between night and day. 13. Hence these Fathers are gods: therefore that sonship belongs to them. He cast aside the body with which the Fathers were created. 14. Being cast away by him, it straightway became twilight. Hence day belongs to the gods, and night is said to belong to the Asuras. 15. The body intermediate between them, which is that of the Fathers, is the most important. Hence gods, Asuras, Fathers, and men (16) worship intently this intermediate body of Brahmā. He then took again another body. But from that body, composed altogether of passion (rajas)

¹⁴⁰ This statement, which is not found in the parallel passage of the Vishnu Purāṇa is borrowed from Taitt. Br. ii. 3, 3, 2, quoted above.

which he created by his mind, he formed mind-born¹⁴² sons who had almost entirely a passionate character. 18. Then from his mind sprang mind-born sons. Beholding again his creatures, he cast away that body of his. 19. Being thrown off by him it straightway became morning twilight. Hence living beings are gladdened by the rise of early twilight. 20. Such were the bodies which, when cast aside by the Great Being, became immediately night and day, twilight and early twilight. 21. Early twilight, twilight, and day have all the character of pure goodness. Night has entirely the character of darkness (tamas); and hence it consists of three watches. 22. Hence the gods are beheld with a celestial body, and they were created from the mouth. As they were created during the day, they are strong during that period. 23. Inasmuch as he created the Asuras from his groin at night, they, having been born from his breath, during the night, are unconquerable during that season. 24, 25. Thus these four streams, early twilight, night, day, and twilight, are the causes of gods, Asuras, Fathers, and men, in all the Manvantaras that are past, as well as in those that are to come. 26. As these (streams) shine, they are called ambhāṁsi. This root bhā is used by the intelligent in the senses of pervading and shining, and the Male, Prajāpati, declares (the fact). 27. Having beheld these streams (ambhāṁsi), gods, Dānavas, men, and fathers, he again created various others from himself. 28. Abandoning that entire body, the lord created another, a form consisting almost entirely of passion and darkness, and again fixed it in abstraction. 29. Being possessed with hunger in the darkness, he then created another. The hungry beings formed by him were bent on seizing the streams (ambhāṁsi). 30. Those of them, who said 'let us preserve (rakshāma) these streams,' are known in the world as Rākshasas, wrathful, and prowling about at night."

This description is followed by an account of the further creation corresponding with that given in the same sequence in the Vishṇu Purāṇa; and the rest of the chapter is occupied with other details which it is not necessary that I should notice. I therefore proceed to make some quotations from the eighth chapter, entitled Chaturāśramavibhāga, or "the distribution into four orders," which corresponds, in its general contents, with the sixth chapter of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, book i., but is of far greater length, and, in fact, extremely prolix, as well as confused, full of repetitions, and not always very intelligible.

The chapter immediately preceding (i.e. the seventh), entitled Pratisandhi-kirttanam, ends with the words: "I shall now declare to you the present Kalpa; understand." Sūta accordingly proceeds at the opening of the eighth chapter to repeat some verses, which have been already quoted from the beginning of the sixth chapter, descriptive of Brahmā's sleep during the night after the universe had been dissolved, and to recapitulate briefly the elevation of the earth from beneath the waters, its reconstruction, and the institution of Yugas. At verse 22 the narrative proceeds:

¹⁴³ The narrative in the 49th chapter of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (verses 3-13) begins at this verse, the 37th of the Vāyu Purāṇa, and coincides, though with verbal differences, with what follows down to verse 47. After that there is more variation.

¹⁴⁵ For aśushmīṇāḥ the Märk. P. reads amarahīṇāḥ, "irascible."

¹⁴⁶ I have corrected this line from the Märkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 49, 9 b. The reading of the MSS. of the Vāyu Purāṇa cannot be correct. It appears to be: māse māse 'rttaraṁ yat tat tadāśīd hi yoshitām | The negative particle seems to be indispensable here.

¹⁴⁷ This half verse is not found in the Märk. P.

¹⁴⁸ The Märk. P. has mānuṣhī, "human," instead of mānasī, "mental."

¹⁴⁹ This verse is not in the Märk. P.; and after this point the verses which are common to both Purāṇas do not occur in the same places.

¹⁵⁰ Verses 53-56 coincide generally with verses 14-18 of the Märk. P.

"22. At the beginning of the Kalpa, in the first Kṛita age, he created those living beings (23) which I have formerly described to thee; but in the olden time, at the close of the Kalpa, those creatures were burnt up by fire. 24. Those of them who did not reach the Tapoloka took refuge in the Janaloka; and when the creation again commences, they form its seed. 25. Existing there as a seed for the sake of another creation, they then, as they are created, are produced with a view to progeny. 26. These are declared to accomplish, in the present state (the four ends of human life, viz.), duty, the acquisition of wealth, the gratification of love, and the attainment of final liberation, — both gods, Fathers, Rishis, and Manus. 27. They, then, filled with austere fervour, replenish (all) places. These are the mental sons of Brahmā, perfect in their nature. 28. Those who ascended to the sky by works characterized by devotion to external objects, but not by hatred, return to this world and are born in every age. 29. As the result of their works, and of their destination, (returning) from the Janaloka, they are born of the same character (as before), in consequence of the (previous) deeds by which they are bound.¹⁰⁷ 30. It is to be understood that the cause of this is their tendency (or fate), which itself is the result of works. In consequence of these works, good or bad, they return from Janaloka and are born, (31) and receive various bodies in (different) wombs. They are produced again and again in all states, from that of gods to that of motionless substances. 32. These creatures, as they are born time after time, receive the same functions as they had obtained in each previous creation. 33. Destructiveness and undestructiveness, mildness and cruelty, righteousness and unrighteousness, truth and falsehood—actuated by such dispositions as these, they obtain (their several conditions); and hence particular actions are agreeable to particular creatures. 34. And in succeeding periods they for the most part obtain the forms and the names which they had in the past Kalpas. 35. Hence they obtain the same names and forms. In the different Kalpas they are born with the same name and form. 36. Afterwards, when the creation had been suspended, as Brahṁā was desirous to create, (37) and, fixed in his design, was meditating upon offspring,—he created from his mouth a thousand couples of living beings, (38) who were born with an abundance of goodness (sattva) and full of intelligence.¹⁰⁸ He then created another thousand couples from his breast: (39) they all abounded in passion (rajas) and were both vigorous and destitute of vigour.¹⁰⁹ After creating from his thighs another thousand pairs, (40) in whom both passion and darkness (tamas) prevailed, and who are described as active,—he formed from his feet yet another thousand couples (41) who were all full of darkness, inglorious, and of little vigour. Then the creatures sprung from the couples (or thus produced in couples) rejoicing, (42) and filled with mutual love, began to cohabit. From that period sexual intercourse is said to have arisen in this Kalpa. 43. But at that time women had no monthly discharge: and they consequently bore no children, although cohabit-

¹⁰⁷ Karma-saṁśaya-bandhanāt. I am unable to state the sense of saṁśaya in this compound.

¹⁰⁹ The reading of the Mār. P. amarśinah, "irascible," gives a better sense than asushmīṇah, "devoid of vigour," which the Vāyu P. has.

ation was practised. 44. At the end of their lives they once bore twins. Weak-minded boys and girls were produced when (their parents) were on the point of death. 45. From that period commenced, in this Kalpa, the birth of twins; and such offspring was once only born to these creatures by a mental effort, in meditation (46),—(offspring which was) receptive (?) of sound and the other objects of sense, pure, and in every case distinguished by five marks. Such was formerly the early mental creation of Prajapāti. 47. Those creatures by whom the world was replenished, born as the descendants of this stock, frequented rivers, lakes, seas, and mountains. 48. In that age (yuga) they lived unaffected by excessive cold or heat, and appropriated the food which was produced from the essences of the earth. 49. They acted according to their pleasure, existing in a state of mental perfection. They were characterized neither by righteousness nor unrighteousness; were marked by no distinctions. 50. In that Kṛita yuga, in the beginning of the Kalpa, their age, happiness, and form were alike: they were neither righteous nor unrighteous. 51. In the Kṛita age they were produced each with authority over himself. Four thousand years, according to the calculation of the gods, (52) and four hundred years for each of the morning and evening twilights, are said to form the first, or Kṛita, age.¹⁷⁰ Then, although these creatures were multiplied by thousands, (53) they suffered no impediment, no susceptibility to the pairs of opposites (pleasure and pain, cold and heat, etc.) and no fatigue. They frequented mountains and seas, and did not dwell in houses. 54. They never sorrowed, were full of goodness (sattra), and supremely happy; acted from no impulse of desire,¹⁷¹ and lived in continual delight. 55. There were at that time no beasts, birds, reptiles, or plants,¹⁷² (for these things are produced by unrighteousness),¹⁷³ (56) no roots, fruits,

¹⁷¹ Perhaps we should read here nikūma-chāringyo instead of nishkūma:- if so, the sense will be, "they moved about at will."

¹⁷² The text adds here nūrakūḥ or narakūḥ, which may mean "hellish creatures."

flowers, productions of the seasons, nor seasons. The time brought with it every object of desire and every enjoyment. There was no excess of heat or cold. 57. The things which these people desired sprang up from the earth everywhere and always, when thought of, and had a powerful relish. 58. That perfection of theirs both produced strength and beauty, and annihilated disease. With bodies, which needed no decoration, they enjoyed perpetual youth. 59. From their pure will alone twin children were produced. Their form was the same. They were born and died together. 60. Then truth, contentment, patience, satisfaction, happiness, and self-command prevailed. They were all without distinction in respect of form, term of life, disposition and actions. 61. The means of subsistence were produced spontaneously, without forethought on their parts. In the Kṛita age they engaged in no works which were either virtuous or sinful. 62. And there were then no distinctions of castes or orders, and no mixture of castes. Men acted towards each other without any feeling of love or hatred. 63. In the Kṛita age they were born alike in form and duration of life, without any distinction of lower and higher,¹⁷⁴ with abundant happiness, free from grief, (64) with hearts continually exulting, great in dignity mencement of the Tretā age Brahmā—having at the beginning of the Kalpa created animals and plants—employed them in sacrifice.” Although the order of the words renders the sense in some degree uncertain, it appears to be that which Prof. Wilson assigns in his translation (i. 84), “Brahmā, having created, in the commencement of the Kalpa, various [animals and] plants, employed them in sacrifices in the beginning of the Tretā age.” This interpretation is supported by the Commentator, who remarks: Tad evaṁ kalpasyādau eva paśūn ośadhīś cha śriṣṭvā 'nantaram tīrṭhā-yuga-mukhe prāpte satī samyag grāmāṇyā-ryasthāyā tadā 'dhvare sūnatayā (samyaktayā?) yuyojā kṛita-yuge yujnasyūpravrūtteḥ | “Having then thus at the very beginning of the Kalpa created animals and plants, he afterwards, when the commencement of the Tretā age arrived, employed them properly, according to the distinction of domestic and wild, in sacrifice,—since sacrifice did not prevail in the Kṛita age.” This agrees with the course of the preceding narrative which makes no allusion to plants and animals having been produced in a different Yuga from the other beings whose creation had been previously described. (See Wilson i. 82–84.) The parallel passage in the Vāyu P. x. 44–46, is confused.

and in force. There existed among them no such things as gain or loss, friendship or enmity, liking or dislike. 65. It was through the mind (alone, i.e. without passion?) that these disinterested beings acted towards each other. They neither desired anything from one another; nor shewed any kindness to each other.¹⁷⁵ Contemplation is declared to be supreme in the Kṛita age, knowledge in the Tretā; sacrifice began in the Dvāpara; liberality is the highest merit in the Kali. 67. The Kṛita age is goodness (sattva), the Tretā is passion (rajas), the Dvāpara is passion and darkness (tamas), in the Kali it is to be understood that darkness (prevails), according to the necessary course of these ages. 68. The following is the time in the Kṛita age: understand its amount. Four thousand years constitute the Kṛita; (69) and its twilights endure for eight hundred divine years. Then their life was (so long?)¹⁷⁶ and no distresses or calamities befel them. 70. Afterwards, when the twilight in the Kṛita was gone, the righteousness peculiar to that age was in all respects reduced to a quarter (of its original sum). 71. When further the twilight had passed, at the close of the Yuga, and the righteousness peculiar to the twilight had been reduced to a quarter, (72) and when the Kṛita had thus come altogether to an end,—then perfection vanished. When this mental perfection had been destroyed, there arose (73) another perfection formed in the period of the Tretā age. The eight mental perfections, which I declared (to have existed) at the creation, (74) were gradually extinguished. At the beginning of the Kalpa mental perfection alone (existed), viz., that which existed in the Kṛita age. 75. In all the Manvantaras there is declared to arise a perfection proceeding from works, produced by the discharge of the duties belonging to castes and orders, according to the fourfold division of Yugas. 76. The (morning) twilight (deteriorates) by a quarter of the (entire) Kṛita,—and the evening twilight by (another) quarter;—(thus) the Kṛita, the morning twilight, and the evening

twilight (together) deteriorate successively to the extent of three quarters, in the duties peculiar to the Yuga, and in austere fervour, sacred knowledge, strength, and length of life.¹⁷⁷ Then after the evening of the Kṛita had died out, (78) the Tretā age succeeded,—(which) the most excellent rishis regarded as the evening of the Kṛita. But when the evening of the Kṛita had died out, (79) from the influence of time, and for no other reason, perfection disappeared from among the creatures who survived at the commencement of the Tretā age which ensued at the beginning of the Kalpa. 80. When that perfection had perished, another perfection arose. The subtile form of water having returned in the form of cloud (to the sky),¹⁷⁸ (81) rain began to be discharged from the thundering clouds. The earth having once received that rain, (82) trees resembling houses¹⁷⁹ were provided for these creatures. From them all means of enjoyment were produced. 83. Men derived their subsistence from them at the beginning of the Tretā. Subsequently, after a great length of time, owing to their ill fortune, (84) the passions of desire and covetousness arose in their hearts uncaused. The monthly discharge, which occurred at the end of women's lives, (85) did not then take place: but as it commenced again, owing to the force of the age (yuga), (86) and as the couples, in consequence of it, began to cohabit, and approached each other monthly, from necessity occasioned by the time,—(87) an unseasonable^{179a} production of the monthly discharge, and of pregnancy ensued. Then through their misfortune, and owing to that fated time, (88) all those house-like trees perished. When these had been destroyed, men disturbed and agitated, (89) but genuine in their desire, longed after that perfection (which they had lost). Then those house-like trees appeared to them; (90) and among their fruits yielded clothes and jewels. On these trees too, in the hollow of every leaf, there was produced, (91) without the aid of bees, honey of great potency, having scent, colour, and flavour. By this means they subsisted at the beginning of the Tretā, (92) delighted with this perfection and free from trouble. Again, through the lapse of time, becoming greedy, (93) they seized by force those trees, and that honey produced without bees. And then, owing to that misconduct of theirs, (occasioned by cupidity, (94) the Kalpa trees, together with their honey, were in some places destroyed. As but little of it¹⁸⁰ remained, owing to the effects of the period of twilight, (95) the pairs (of opposites, as pleasure and pain, etc.) arose in men when existing (in this state); and they became greatly distressed by sharp cold winds, and heats. 96. Being thus afflicted by these opposites, they adopted means of shelter: and to counteract the opposites they resorted to houses. 97. Formerly they had moved about at their will, and had not dwelt at all in houses: but subsequently they abode in dwellings, as they found suitable and pleasant, (98) in barren deserts, in valleys, on mountains, in caves; and took refuge in fortresses,—(in a) desert with perpetual water.¹⁸¹ 99. As a protection against cold and heat they began to construct houses on even and uneven places, according to opportunity and at their pleasure. 100. They then measured out towns, cities, villages, and private apartments, according to the distribution of each.” [The following verses 101–107 give an account of the different measures of length and breadth, which is followed, in verses 108–122, by a description of the various kinds of fortresses, towns, and villages, their shapes and sizes, and of roads. The author then proceeds in verse 123:] “These places having been made, they next constructed houses; and as formerly trees existed, formed like houses,¹⁸² (124) so did they (now) begin to erect them, after repeated consideration. (Some) boughs are spread out, others are bent down, (125) others rise upwards, while others again stretch horizontally. After examining thus by reflection how the different boughs of trees branch out, (126) they constructed in like manner the apartments (śākhāḥ) (of their houses): hence they are called rooms (śālāḥ).¹³³ In this way rooms and houses derive their appellation from branches. 127. Hence rooms are called śālā, and in that their character as rooms (śālātram) consists. And inasmuch as the mind takes pleasure in them, and as they have gladdened (prāsādayan), the mind, (128) houses, rooms, and palaces are termed respectively griha, śālā, and prāsāda. Having adopted these means of defence against the 'opposites,' they devised methods of subsistence. 129. The kalpa-trees having been destroyed along with their honey, those creatures, afflicted with thirst and hunger, became disquieted by dejection. 130. Then again another perfection arose for them in the Tretā age,—which fulfilled the purpose of subsistence,—viz., rain at their pleasure. 131. The rain-water, which flowed into the hollows, burst out in the form of springs, water-courses, and rivers,¹³⁴ through the rain. 132. Thus at the second fall of rain rivers began to flow. When the drops of water first reached the ground, then (133) from the conjunction of the waters and the earth plants sprang up among them, which bore both flowers, roots, and fruits. 134. Fourteen kinds of plants, cultivated and wild, were produced without ploughing or sowing, as well as trees and shrubs which bore flowers and fruit at the proper season. 135. This was the first appearance of plants in the Tretā age, and by them men subsisted at that period. 136. Then there again arose among them, universally, desire and cupidity, through a necessary process, and as a result of the Tretā age. 137. They then appropriated to themselves, by force and violence, rivers, fields, hills, trees, shrubs, and plants. 138. Those perfect beings, who were described by me as existing formerly in the Kṛita,—the mind-born children of Brahmā, who had been produced in this world when they came from the Janaloka,—(139) who were (some) tranquil, (some) fiery, (some) active, and (others) distressed,—were again born in the Tretā, (140) as Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, Sūdras, and injurious men, governed by the good and bad actions (performed) in former births. 141. Then those who were weaker than they, being truthful and innocent, dwelt among them, free from cupidity, and self-restrained; (142) whilst ¹³³ The reasoning here does not seem very cogent, as the two words śālāḥ and śālā do not appear to have any close connection. But such unsuccessful attempts at etymology are frequent in Sanskrit works.

¹⁷⁸ Such is the only sense of the words here rendered which occurs to me.

¹⁸¹ Dhanvānam śiśvatodakam. Perhaps we should read here with the Märk. P. xlix. 35, vārکشyam pūrvatam audakam “(fortresses) protected by trees, built on mountains, or surrounded by water.”

others, less glorious than they, took and did.¹⁸⁵ When they had thus become opposed to each other, — (143) through their misconduct, while they struggled together, the plants were destroyed, being seized with their fists like gravel. 144. Then the earth swallowed up the fourteen kinds of cultivated and wild plants, in consequence of the influence exerted by the Yuga: for men had seized again and again the fruit, together with the flowers and leaves. 145. After the plants had perished, the famished people, becoming bewildered, repaired to Svayambhū the lord of creatures, (146) in the beginning of the Tretā age, seeking the means of subsistence.¹⁸⁶ Learning what they desired, (147) and determining by intuition what was proper to be done, the Lord Brahmā Svayambhū, knowing that the plants had been swallowed up by the earth, milked them back. 148. Taking Sumeru as a calf, he milked this earth. When this earth (or cow)¹⁸⁷ was milked by him, roots were produced again in the ground,—(149) those plants, whereof hemp is the seventeenth, which end with the ripening of fruits.” [The plants fit for domestic use, and for sacrifice are then enumerated in verses 150–155.] “155. All these plants, domestic and wild, were for the first time¹⁸⁸ produced at the beginning of the Tretā age, (156) without cultivation, trees, shrubs, and the various sorts of creepers and grasses, both those which produce roots as their fruits, and those which bear fruit after flowering. The seeds for which the earth was formerly milked by Svayambhū (158) now became plants bearing flowers and fruits in their season. When these plants, though created, did not afterwards grow, (159) the divine Brahmā Svayambhū devised for the people means of subsistence depending on labour effected by their hands. 160. From that time forward the plants were produced and ripened through cultivation. The means of subsistence having been provided, Svayambhū (161) established divisions among them according to their tendencies.¹⁸⁹ Those of them who were rapacious, and destructive, (162) he ordained to be Kshattriyas, protectors of the others.¹⁹⁰ As many men as attended on these, fearless, (163) speaking truth and propounding sacred knowledge (brahma) with exactness, (were made) Brāhmins. Those others of them who had previously been feeble, engaged in the work of slaughter,¹⁹¹ who, as cultivators (kīnāsāh), had been destructive, and were active in connection with the ground, were called Vaiśyas, husbandmen (kīnāsān), providers of subsistence. 165. And he designated as Sūdras those who grieved (śochantah), and ran (dravantah),¹⁹² who were addicted to menial tasks, inglorious and feeble.

¹⁸⁵ It is difficult to extract any satisfactory sense out of this line.

¹⁸⁶ The S. P. Br. ii. 4, 2, 1, also speaks of different classes of creatures applying to the creator for food: Prajāpatiṃ vai bhūtāny upāsīdan | prajāḥ vai bhūtāni | "vi no dheḥi yathā jīvāma" iti | tato devā yajnopavitino bhūtā dakṣiṇāṃ jānu āchya upāsīdan | tūn abravīd "yajno vo 'nnam amṛitatvaṃ va ūrg vaḥ sūryo vo jyotir" iti | 2. Then the Fathers, wearing the sacrificial cord on their right shoulders, and bending the left knee, approached him. To them he said, 'you shall eat monthly, your oblation (svadhā) shall be your rapidity of thought, the moon your light.' 3. Then men, clothed, and inclining their bodies, approached him. To them he said, 'ye shall eat morning and evening, your offspring shall be your death, Agni your light.' 4. Then cattle repaired to him. To them he accorded their desire, (saying), 'Whosoever ye find anything, whether at the proper season or not, eat it.' Hence whenever they find anything, whether at the proper season or not, they eat it. 5. Then they say that the Asuras again and again resorted to him. To them he gave darkness (tamaś) and illusion. There is, indeed, such a thing as the illusion, as it were, of the Asuras. But those creatures succumbed. These creatures subsist in the very manner which Prajāpati allotted to them."

¹⁸⁹ Yathūrarabhūh. The Mārk. P. has yathā-nyāyāṁ yathā-guṇam, “according to fitness and their qualities.”

¹⁹⁰ Itareshūṁ kṛita-trāṇān. The M. Bh. xii. 2247, thus explains the word Kshattriya: brāhmaṇūnāṁ kshata-trāṇāt tatah kshattriya uchyate | “(a king) is called Kshattriya because he protects Brāhmins from injuries.”

¹⁹² The reader who is familiar with the etymologies given in Yūska’s Nirukta, or in Professor Wilson’s Dictionary on Indian authority, will not be surprised at the absurdity of the attempts made here by the Purāṇa-writer to explain the origin of the words Kshattriya, Vaiśya and Sūdra. To account for the last of these names he combines the roots śuch, “to grieve,” and drū, “to run,” dropping, however, of necessity the last letter (ch) of the former. The word kshattriya is really derived from kshattrā, “royal power;” and vaiśya comes from viś, “people,” and means “a man of the people.”

166. Brahmā determined the respective functions and duties of all these persons. But after the system of the four castes had been in all respects established, (167) those men from infatuation did not fulfil their several duties. Not living conformably to those class-duties, they came into mutual conflict. 168. Having become aware of this fact, precisely as it stood, the Lord Brahmā prescribed force, criminal justice, and war, as the profession of the Kshattriyas. 169. He then appointed these, viz., the duty of officiating at sacrifices, sacred study, and the receipt of presents, to be the functions of Brāhmans. 170. The care of cattle, traffic, and agriculture, he allotted as the work of the Vaiśyas; and the practice of the mechanical arts, and service, he assigned as that of the Sūdras. 171. The duties common to Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, and Vaiśyas were the offering of sacrifice, study, and liberality. 172. Having distributed to the classes their respective functions and occupations, the Lord then allotted to them abodes in other worlds for their perfection. 173. The world of Prajāpati is declared to be the (destined) abode of Brāhmans practising rites; Indra's world that of Kshattriyas who do not flee in battle; (174) the world of the Maruts that of Vaiśyas who fulfil their proper duty; the world of the Gaṇḍharvas that of men of Sūdra birth who abide in the work of service. 175. Having allotted these as the future abodes of (the men of the different) classes, who should be correct in their conduct, he ordained orders (āśramas) in the classes which had been established. 176. The Lord formerly instituted the four orders of householder, religious student, dweller in the woods, and mendicant. 177. To those of them who do not in this world perform the duties of their castes, the men who dwell in hermitages apply the appellation of 'destroyer of works.' 178. Brahmā established these orders by name, and in explanation of them he declared their duties, (179) their methods of procedure, and their various rites. First of all there is the order of householder, which belongs to all the four classes, (180) and is the foundation and source of the other three orders. I shall declare them in order with their several observances." [The following verses 181-189, which detail these duties, need not be cited here. I shall, however, quote verses 190 ff. for their excellent moral tone.] "190. The Vedas, with their appendages, sacrifices, fasts, and ceremonies, (191) avail not to a depraved man, when his disposition has become corrupted. All external rites are fruitless (192) to one who is inwardly debased, however energetically he may perform them. A man who bestows even the whole of his substance with a defiled heart will thereby acquire no merit—of which a good disposition is the only cause.” [After giving some further particulars about the celestial abodes of the righteous, verses 194–198, the writer proceeds:] “199. When—after the division into castes and orders had thus been made—(200) the people living under that system did not multiply, Brahmā formed other mind-born creatures in the middle of the Tretā (201) from his own body and resembling himself. When the Tretā age had arrived, and had gradually reached its middle, (202) the Lord then began to form other mind-born creatures. He next formed creatures in whom goodness (sattva) and passion (rajas) predominated, (203) and who were capable of attaining (the four objects of human pursuit) righteousness, wealth, love, and final liberation, together with the means of subsistence. Gods, too, and Fathers, and Rishis, and Manus (were formed), (204) by whom these creatures were classified (?) according to their natures in conformity with the Yuga. When this character(?) of his offspring had been attained, Brahmā (205) longed after mental offspring of all kinds and of various forms. Those creatures, whom I described to you as having taken refuge in Janaloka, (206) at the end of the Kalpa, all these arrived here, when he thought upon them, in order to be reproduced in the form of gods and other beings. 207. According to the course of the Manvantaras the least were esteemed the first (?), being swayed by destiny, and by connections and circumstances of every description. 208. These creatures were always born, under the controuling influence of, and as a recompence for their good or bad deeds. 209. He by himself formed those creatures which arrived in their several characters of gods, asuras, fathers, cattle, birds, reptiles, trees, and insects, in order that they might be subjected (anew) to the condition of creatures.”¹⁹³

The substance of the curious speculations on the origin and primeval condition of mankind contained in the preceding passage may be stated as follows: In verses 22–34 we are told that the creatures, who at the close of the preceding Kalpa had been driven by the mundane conflagration to Janaloka, now formed the seed of the new creation, which took place in the Kṛita Yuga, at the commencement of the present

Kalpa. These were mind-born sons of Brahmā, perfect in nature, and they peopled the world. As a rule, we are informed, those beings who have formerly been elevated from the earth to higher regions, return again and again to this world, and, as a result of their previous works, are born in every age, in every possible variety of condition, exhibiting the same dispositions and fulfilling the same functions as in their former states of existence. It is next stated, verses 35-40, that when creation had, in some way not explained, come to a stand-still, four classes of human beings, consisting each of a thousand pairs of males and females, characterized respectively by different qualities, physical and moral, were produced from different members of the Creator's body.¹⁹⁴ These creatures sought to propagate the race, but abortively, for the reason specified (43). Children however were produced by mental effort (45 and 59), and in considerable numbers (52). The state of physical happiness, absolute and universal equality, moral perfection, and complete dispassion, in which mankind then existed, is depicted (48-65). The means of subsistence and enjoyment, which they are said to have drawn from the earth (48 and 57), were not of the ordinary kind, as we are informed (55 f.) that neither animals nor plants, which are the products of unrighteousness, existed at that period. No division into castes or orders prevailed during that age of perfection (62). A gradual declension, however, had been going on, and at the end of the Kṛita Yuga, the perfection peculiar to it had altogether disappeared (70-79). Another kind of perfection, peculiar to the Tretā, however, subsequently arose (73 and 80), and in the different Yugas there has existed a perfection springing from the performance of the duties belonging to each caste and order (75). The perfection described as prevailing in the Tretā was of a physical kind, consisting in the production of ruin and the growth of trees, shaped like houses, which at the same time yielded the materials of all sorts of enjoyments (80-82). Passion, however, in its various forms began to take the place of the previous dispassion (84). The constitution of women, which had formerly incapacitated them for effective impregnation, became ultimately so modified as to ensure the successful propagation of the species, which accordingly proceeded (84-87).¹⁰⁵ We have then the destruction, and subsequent reproduction of the trees, formed like houses, described (88-91). These trees now produced clothes and jewels, as well as honey without bees, and enabled mankind to live in happiness and enjoyment. Again, however, the trees disappeared in consequence of the cupidity which led to their misuse (92-94). The absence of perfection occasioned suffering of various kinds, from moral as well as physical causes, and men were now driven to construct houses, which they had hitherto found unnecessary (96-99 and 123), and to congregate in towns and cities (100). Their houses were built after the model furnished by trees (123-128). The hunger and thirst which men endured from the loss of the trees which had formerly yielded all the means of subsistence and enjoyment, were relieved by means of a new perfection which appeared in the shape of rain, and the streams thereby generated, and by the growth of plants, which now sprang up for the first time as a result of the conjunction of water and earth (130-135 and 155). Desire and cupidity, however, now again arose and led to acts of violent appropriation (136 f.). At this juncture the perfect mind-born sons of Brahmā, of different dispositions, who had formerly existed in the Kṛita age, were reproduced in the Tretā as Brāhmans, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, Sūdras, and destructive men, as a result of their actions in their former existence (138-140). But in consequence of their dissensions and rapacity, the earth swallowed up all the existing plants (142-144). Under the pressure of the distress thus occasioned the inhabitants of the earth resorted to Brahmā, who milked the earth, through the medium of mount Sumeru acting as a calf, and recovered the plants which had disappeared (145-149). As, however, these plants did not propagate themselves spontaneously, Brahmā introduced agriculture (158-160). Having thus provided the means of subsistence, he divided the people into classes according to their characteristics (160-165). But as these classes did not perform their several duties, and came into mutual conflict, Brahmā prescribed their respective functions with greater precision (166-171); and assigned the future celestial abodes which the members of each class might attain by their fulfilment (172-174). He then ordained the four orders of householder, religious student, etc. (175-190). After a few verses in praise of moral purity (190-193), the abodes and destinies of the eminently righteous are set forth (194-199). Just when we had arrived at a point in the narrative, from which we might have imagined that it had only to be carried on further to afford us a sufficient explanation of the state of things existing up to the present age, we are suddenly arrested (199-202) by being informed that the people distributed according to the system of castes and orders did not multiply, and are introduced to a new mind-born creation, which took place in the Tretā age, to remedy this failure. We are next told (203) of what appears to be another creation of beings endowed with goodness and passion. And, finally, a yet further re-incorporation of previously existing souls is described as having taken place (205-209). It would thus seem that after all we are left without any account of the origin of the system of castes which prevailed when the Purāṇa was compiled. The only suppositions on which this conclusion can be avoided are either (1) that the cessation in the increase of the generation alluded to in verse 200, which led to the new creation, was not universal, that the race then existing did not entirely die out, but that the old blood was re-invigorated by that of the newly created beings; or (2) that the other set of creatures, mentioned in verse 203, as characterized by goodness and passion, were the progenitors of the present race of men. On these points, however, the text throws no light.

The preceding account of the creation of mankind and of the vicissitudes and deterioration of society, is in some places obscure and confused, and its several parts do not appear to be consistent with each other. At the outset the writer describes the creation of four thousand pairs of human beings, of whom each separate set of one thousand is distinguished by widely different innate characters, the first class having the quality of goodness, the second that of passion, the third those of passion and darkness, and the fourth that of darkness. Nevertheless (as in the parallel passage of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa) we cannot find in the narrative the least trace of those inherent differences of character having for a long time manifested themselves by producing dissimilarity either of moral conduct or of physical condition; for the perfection, which is described as existing in the Kṛita age, is spoken of as if it was universal; and not only is no distinction alluded to as prevailing at this period between the component parts of society, but we are expressly told that no castes or orders then existed. The deterioration also, which ensued towards the end of the Kṛita age, is described as general, and not peculiar to any class. How is this complete uniformity, first of perfection, and afterwards of declension, which, for anything that appears to the contrary, is predicated of the descendants of the whole of the four thousand pairs, to be reconciled with the assertion that each thousand of those pairs was characterized by different innate qualities? The difficulty is not removed by saying that the writer supposed that these inherent varieties of character existed in a latent or dormant state in the different classes, and were afterwards developed in their descendants; for he distinctly declares (verse 54) in general terms that mankind were at that period sattra-bahulāḥ, i.e. "possessed the quality of goodness in abundance;" and in the earlier part of the subsequent narrative no allusion is made to the different qualities at first ascribed to the four sets of a thousand pairs being separately developed in the members of the four classes respectively. In verse 74, indeed, it appears to be assumed that the division into castes had existed from the creation; for we there find an assertion that in "all the Manvantaras, according to the division of the four yugas," (including apparently the Kṛita) "there is declared to have existed a perfection effected by the observances of the castes and orders, and arising from the fulfilment of works;" but how is this to be reconciled with the express statement of verses 60 and 61, that "in the Kṛita age no works were performed which were either virtuous or sinful," and that "there then existed neither distinctions of caste or order, nor any mixture of castes?" In the Tretā age the state of deterioration continued, but no reference is made of any separation of classes till we come to verse 138, where it is said that the beings who in the Kṛita age had existed as the perfect mind-born sons of Brahmā, were now, as a consequence of their former actions, recalled into human existence, and in conformity with their previous characters as calm, fiery, laborious, or depressed, became Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, Sūdras, and men of violence. These creatures, after they had been furnished with the means of subsistence, were eventually divided into classes, according to their varieties of disposition, character, and occupation; and as at first they did not fulfil their proper duties, but encroached upon each others' provinces, their functions were afterwards more stringently defined and the means of enforcing obedience were provided. Here it is intimated that different sets of beings were born as Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, on account of the different qualities which they had manifested in a previous existence, and that in conformity with those same characteristics they were afterwards formally distributed into castes. This description is therefore so far consistent with itself. The difference of caste is made to depend upon the dispositions of the soul. But how are we to reconcile this postulation of different characters formerly exhibited with the description given in the previous part of the narrative, where we are informed that, in the earlier parts, at least, of the Kṛita age, all men were alike perfect, and that no actions were performed which were either virtuous or vicious? If such was the case at that period, how could the beings who then existed have manifested those differences of disposition and character which are asserted to have been the causes of their being subsequently reborn as Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Sūdras, and Vaiśyas? It may be admitted that the differences of character, which are attributed in the Purāṇa to the four primeval sets of a thousand pairs of human beings, correspond to those qualities which are described as having subsequently given rise to the division into castes; but the assertion of such a state of uniform and universal perfection, as is said to have intervened between the creation of mankind and the realization of caste, seems incompatible with the existence of any such original distinctions of a moral character.

As regards this entire account when compared with the other two descriptions of the creation given in the previous part of this section, the same remarks are applicable as have been made in the last section, p. 65 f., on the corresponding passages from the Vishṇu Purāṇa.

The chapter which I have just translated and examined, is followed immediately by the one of which I have already in a preceding page quoted the commencement, descriptive of the creation of Asuras, Gods, Fathers, etc., from the different bodies assumed and cast off successively by Brahmā.

I shall now give an extract from the following, or tenth chapter, in which the the legend of Śatarūpā is related.

"1. When the worlds had thus been formed by Brahmā their creator,¹⁹⁷ but the creatures, for some reason did not engage in action,¹⁹⁷ (2) Brahmā, enveloped in gloom, and thenceforward dejected, formed a resolution tending to ascertain the fact. 3. He then created in himself (a body) of his own, formed of pure gloom (tamas), having overpowered the passion (rajas) and goodness (sattva) which existed (in him) naturally. 4. The Lord of the world was afflicted with that suffering, and lathe neuter, but not in the masculine) is here used for metrical reasons. Such irregularities are, as we have seen, designated by the Commentators as āreṣa. It is unlikely that Brahman should be here used in a neuter sense.

mented.¹⁹⁸ He then dispelled the gloom, and covered over the passion.

5. The gloom, when scattered, was formed into a pair.¹⁹⁹ Unrighteousness arose from activity (?), and mischief sprang from sorrow.²⁰⁰

6. That active (?) pair having been produced, he became glorious (?) and pleasure took possession of him. 7. Brahmā after that cast off that body of his, which was devoid of lustre, and divided his person into two parts; with the half he became a male (purusha) (8) and with the half a female: it was Satarūpā who was so produced to him. Under the impulse of lust he created her a material supporter of beings. 9. By her magnitude she pervaded both heaven and earth. That former body of Brahmā invests the sky. 10. This divine female Satarūpā, who was born to him from his half, as he was creating, by incessantly practising austere fervour of a highly arduous description, acquired for herself as a husband a Male (purusha) of glorious renown. He is called of old the Male, Manu Svāyambhuva; and his period (manvantara) is declared to extend to seventy-one Yugas. 12. This Male, having obtained for his wife, Satarūpā, not sprung from any womb, lived in dalliance with her (ramate); and from this she is called Rati (the female personification of sexual love). 13. This was the first cohabitation practised in the beginning of the Kalpa. Brahmā created Virāj; he was the Male, Virāj. 14. He is the sovereign (samrāj), from his having the form of a month; and Manu is known as the son of Virāj.²⁰⁰ This creation of living beings is called that of Virāj. In this creation Manu is the male. 15. Satarūpā bore to the heroic Purusha, son of Virāj, two sons, Priyavrata and Uttānapāda, the most eminent of these who have sons." This is followed by a further genealogy, into which I will not enter.

By comparing this account with the one extracted above, p. 64 f. from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 7, 1 ff., it will be seen that while it makes no allusion to the production of Rudra, as related in the Vishṇu Purāṇa (which, as well as the birth of the mental sons of Brahmā, the Vāyu Purāṇa had described in the preceding chapter, verses 67–83), it is somewhat fuller in regard to the legend of Satarūpā; and although it does not allow that Brahmā cohabited with his daughter, and assigns to her another husband, Manu Svāyambhūva, it describes the creator as having been actuated by carnal desire in generating her. I shall give further illustrations of this story in the next section.

SECT. IX.—Legend of Brahmā and his daughter, according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, and of Satarūpā, according to the Matsya Purāṇa.

The story which forms the subject of the present section is noticed at some length in the fourth volume of this work, pp. 38–46, where one of the oldest passages in which it is related, is quoted from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 7, 4, 1 ff., together with one of a comparatively late age from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, iii. 12, 28 ff. As however the legend, ~~though repulsive in its character~~, is not without interest as illustrating the opinions which Indian mythologists have entertained regarding their deities, I shall quote two other texts in which it is narrated.

The first, from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 33, has, no doubt (along with the passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa just referred to, and another from the same work, xiv. 4, 2, 1 ff., quoted above, in p. 24 ff.), furnished the ideas which are expanded in the later versions of the story. It is as follows :

Prajāpatir vai svām duhitaram abhyadhyāyat | Diram ity anye āhur Uhasam ity anye | tām ṛśyo bhūtvā rohitām bhūtām abhyait | tam devā apaśyan | “akṛitaṁ vai Prajāpatiḥ kuroti” iti | te tam aichhan yaḥ enam āriśhyati | etam anyonyasmin na avindan | teshām yā eva ghoratāmās tanvaḥ ūsāṁs tāḥ ekadhā samabharan | tāḥ sambhṛitāḥ esha devo 'bharat | tad asya etad bhūtaran-nāma | bhavati vai sa yo 'sya etad evaṁ nāma veda | tam devā abruvann “ayaṁ vai Prajāpatir akṛitam akar imam vidhya” iti | sa “tathā” ity abravīt | “sa vai vo varam vṛṇai” iti | “vṛṇishva” iti | sa etam eva varam arṇinita paśūnām ūdhipatyam | tad asya etat paśuman-nāma | paśumān bhavati yo 'sya etad evaṁ nāma veda | tam abhyāyatyā avidhyat | sa viddhaḥ ūrddhvo udaprāpatad ityādi;²⁰¹ |

²⁰¹ See the translation of this passage given by Dr. Haug in his Aitareya Brāhmaṇa

"Prajāpati lusted after his own daughter. Some call her the Sky, others Ushas. Becoming a buck, he approached her after she had become a doe. The gods saw him; (and said) Prajāpati does a deed which was never done (before).³⁰² They sought some one who should take vengeance on him. Such a person they did not find among themselves. They then gathered together their most dreadful bodies. These when combined formed this god (Rudra). Hence (arises) his name connected with Bhūta (Bhūtapati). That man flourishes³⁰³ who thus knows this name of his. The gods said to him, 'This Prajāpati has done a deed which was never done before: pierce him.' He replied, 'so be it,' (adding), 'let me ask a boon of you.' They rejoined, 'ask.' He asked for this boon, viz., lordship over cattle. Hence arises his name connected with Paśu (Paśupati). He who thus knows his name, becomes the owner of cattle. He then attacked (Prajāpati) and pierced him. He, when pierced, soared upwards," etc. etc. in note in mss.

The second passage I proposed to cite is from the Matsya Purāṇa, chapter iii. verses 32 ff.: Etad tattvātmakam kṛitṛa jagad dvedhā ajījanat | 33. Sāvitṛim loka-siddhyartham hṛidi kṛitṛa samāsthitaḥ | tataḥ sanjapatas tasya bhūtā deham akalmaṣham | 34. strī-rūpam arddham akarod arddham puruṣa-rūparat | Satarūpā cha sū khyātā Sāvitṛi cha nigadyate | 35. Sarasvaty atha Gāyatri Brahmānī cha parantapa | tataḥ sa Brahmadevās tām ātmajām ity akalpayat | 36. Dṛiṣṭvā tām vyathitas tāvat kama-cānārdito vibhuḥ | "aho rūpam aho rūpam" ity urūcha tadā 'vyayaḥ | 37. Tato Vasishṭha-pramukhā "bhaginīm" iti chukruṣuḥ | Brahmā na kinchid dadṛise tan-mukhālokanād rite | 38. vol. ii. pp. 218 ff.; and the remarks on this translation by Professor Weber, Indische Studien, ix. 217 ff.; and also Professor Roth's explanation of the word bhūtat in his Lexicon.

³⁰² This seems to be imitated in the line of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa iii. 12, 30, quoted in vol. iv. of this work, p. 40: naitat pūrvaiḥ kṛitām tvad yo na karishyanti chāpare | "This was never done by those before thee, nor will those after thee do it."

³⁰³ Bhavati. In the Brāhmaṇas this verb has frequently the sense of prospering, as opposed to parābhavati, "he perishes." See Bōthlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s. v., and the passages there referred to.

“32. Having thus formed the universe, consisting of the principles, he generated a twofold creation, (33) having, with a view to the completion of the world, placed and kept Sāvitṛi in his heart. Then as he was muttering prayers, he divided his spotless body (34) and gave to the half the form of a woman, and to the half that of a male. (This female) is called Satarūpā, Sāvitṛi, (35) Sarasvatī, Gāyatrī, and Brahmānī. Brahmā then took her for his daughter. 36. Beholding her, the imperishable deity, distressed, tortured with the arrows of love, exclaimed, ‘o what beauty! o what beauty!’ 37. Then (his sons) headed by Vasishṭha, cried aloud, ‘(our) sister.’ Brahmā saw nothing else, looking only at her face; (38) and exclaimed again and again, ‘o what beauty! o what beauty!’ He then again gazed upon her, as she bend forward in obeisance. 39. The fair woman then made a circuit round her father. As on account of his sons he felt ashamed from his desire of gazing on her beauty (40) there appeared (on his head) a southern face with pale cheeks; and there was afterwards manifested a western face with lips quivering with astonishment. 41. A fourth was subsequently formed, beautiful, disquieted by the arrows of love. Then another was produced from the disturbing influence of the same passion, (42) and from eagerness in gazing after her as she rose upwards in the sky. That austere fervour, extremely dreadful, which Brahmā had practised with a view to creation, (43) was entirely lost through his desire to approach his daughter (carnally). Through this was produced speedily the fifth face (or, according to one MS., the upper the fifth face) of the wise deity, (44) which appeared with matted hair, and which he covered up. Brahmā then said to the sons who had sprung from him, (45) 'create living beings everywhere, gods, asuras, and men.' They, being thus addressed, created beings of various kinds, 46. When they had gone away for the purpose of creating, he, who is the universe, took for his wife the unblamed Satarūpā. 47. Sickened with love, he cohabited with her: like any ordinary being, he loved her,—though she was full of shame—embowered in the hollow of a lotus, (48) for a hundred years of the gods. A long time after, a son was born to her, Manu (49) called Svāyambhuva, who, as we have heard, is Virāj. From their community of form and qualities he is called Adhipūruṣa.²⁰⁶ 50. From him were sprung those numerous Vairājas, steadfast in religious observances, those seven glorious sons of Svāyambhū, and those other seven Manus, (51) beginning with Svārochisha and Auttami, in form equal to Brahmā, of whom thou²⁰⁷ art now the seventh. (4th chapter) 1. Manu says: 'Ah! this is most afflicting, this entrance of love into the god. How was it that the lotus-born did not incur guilt by that act? 2. And how did a matrimonial connection take place between persons of the same family who were sprung from him? Solve this doubt of mine, o Lord. The Fish replied: 3. This primeval creation was celestial, produced from the quality of passion (rajas); it had senses removed beyond the cognizance of sense, and bodies of the same description, (4) was possessed of celestial energy, derived from celestial knowledge, and cannot be perfectly perceived by others with the eye of flesh. 5. Just as serpents know the path of serpents, and (beings living) in the sky know the path of all sorts of birds, so too the celestials alone, and not men, know the way of celestials. 6. And since it is the gods who award the recompence, favourable or unfavourable, according as good or bad deeds have been done,—it is not good for men to examine this (question). 7. Furthermore, the four-faced (Brahmā) is the ruler of all the gods, and in like manner the Gāyatrī is declared to be a member of Brahmā. 8. And, as they say, there is a pair consisting of the formless, and of that which has form. Wherever the divine Viranchi (Brahmā) is, there is also the goddess Sarasvatī. 9. Wherever Bhārati (a name of Sarasvatī) is, there is also Prajāpati. Just as shadow is nowhere seen without sunshine, (10) so Gāyatrī never forsakes the side of Brahmā. He is called the collected Veda, and Sāvitrī rests upon him; (11) there can therefore be no fault in his approaching her. Nevertheless, Brahmā, the lord of creatures, was bowed down with shame, (12) because he had approached his own daughter, and cursed Kusumāyudha ²⁰⁸ (Kāma), (in these words) 'As even my mind has been agitated by thy arrows, Rudra shall speedily reduce thy body to ashes.' Kāmadeva then propitiated the four-faced deity, saying, (14) 'Thou oughtest not to curse me without cause: preserve me. It is by thee thyself that I have been created with such a character, (15) an agitator of the organs of sense of all embodied creatures. The minds both of men and women must always and everywhere (16) be energetically stirred up by me without hesitation: this thou thyself hast formerly declared. It is therefore, without any fault of mine that I have been thus cursed by thee. 17. Be gracious, lord, that I may recover my body.' Brahmā answered: 18. 'When the Vaivasvata Manvantara shall have arrived, a mortal, named Rāma, sprung from the Yādava race, deriving force from my essence, (19) and, becoming incarnate as a destroyer of Asuras, shall inhabit Dvārakā. Thou shalt then become a son of his substance and like to him," etc.

The narrator of this legend does not hesitate to depict in the strongest colours (though without the least approach to grossness) the helpless subjection of Brahmā to the influence of sexual desire. This illicit indulgence was regarded by the authors of the Satapatha and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas as in the highest degree scandalous, and they do not attempt to palliate its enormity by any mystical explanation, such as that which we find in the Matsya Purāṇa. Whether this apology proceeded from the original narrator, or from a later writer of a more sensitive disposition, who perceived its inconsistency with any elevated idea of the superior powers, is difficult to say. It is quite possible that the same writer who gave his fancy scope in describing the unbecoming scene, of which the substance had been handed down in works regarded as authoritative, may also have thought it necessary to discover some device for counteracting the scandal. On the other hand, the original writer seems to cut himself off from the privilege of resorting to any mystical refinements to explain away the offence, by having in the first instance represented Brahmā's indulgence as on a level with that of ordinary beings. And even after the apology has been concluded, we are still told that Brahmā could not help feeling ashamed of what he had done. The writer of the explanation ought to have perceived that if his defence was of any value, the deity for whom he was apologizing had no ground for humiliation. But he did not venture to expunge the popular features of the story. The grounds on which the apology proceeds are partly of the same character as those which the writer of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa assumes in the passage (x. 33, 27 ff.) which is given in the fourth volume of this work, pp. 42 f., viz., that the gods are not to be judged on the same principles as men,—that "the celestials have laws of their own" (sunt superis sua jura). The Bhāgavata Purāṇa has, however, different measures for Brahmā and for Kṛishṇa; for whilst the adultery of the latter is defended in the verses just referred to, no desire is shown to vindicate the former in the other passage, iii. 12, 28 ff., adduced in the same volume, page 40.

As regards the details of the story according to the different Purāṇas, I may observe that while the Viṣṇu, the Vāyu (see above, pp. 65, and 106), and the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, xl. 13 f., represent Śatarūpā as the wife of Manu Svāyambhuva, the Matsya Purāṇa, as we have just seen, declares her to have been the spouse of Brahmā himself, and the mother of Manu Svāyambhuva.²⁰⁰ This is repeated in the twenty-sixth verse of the fourth chapter:

²¹⁰ In this line the original readings are in several places erased in the Taylor MS. I have endeavoured to restore it with the help of the Gaikowar MS.

“She who was produced from the half of his body, Gāyatrī the declarer of sacred science, she who was the mother of Manu, the goddess Satarūpā (i.e. having a hundred forms), Satendriyā (i.e. having a hundred senses), (27) (was also) Rati, Mind, Austere Fervour, Intellect, sprung from Mahat and the other principles. He then begot upon Satarūpā seven sons. 28. This world, composed of all knowledge, sprang from Marīchi, and the others who were the mind-born sons of that wise Being. He next created Vāmadeva (Mahādeva), the wielder of the excellent trident, and the lord Sanatkumāra, born before the earliest. 30. Then the divine Vāmadeva created Brāhmins from his mouth, Rājanyas from his breast, the Viś and the Sūdra from his thighs and feet.” [After describing in the following verses some other creations of Vāmadeva, the writer proceeds in verse 35:] “The wise Manu Svāyambhuva, having practised austere fervour of the most arduous kind, obtained a beautiful wife named Anantā. On her he begot Priyavrata and Uttānapāda.”

Having made Manu the son of Satarūpā, the writer was obliged to give him another female for a wife, as we see he has here done.

It will be observed that in this passage Vāmadeva—and not Brahmā, as in the other Purāṇas—is described as the creator of the four castes.

SECT. X.—Quotations from the Rāmāyaṇa on the Creation, and on the Origin of Castes.

The substance of the first of the following passages has already been stated above in a note on page 36. Part of it is also quoted in p. 54, and it is more fully cited in the fourth volume of this work, p. 29, but for facility of reference I repeat it here.

“1. Perceiving Rāma to be incensed²¹¹ Vasishṭha replied: ‘Jābali also knows the destruction and renovation of this world. 2. But he spoke as he did from a desire to induce you to return. Learn from me, lord of the earth, this (account of) the origin of the world. 3. The universe was nothing but water. In it the earth was fashioned. Then Brahmā Svayambhū came into existence, with the deities. He next, becoming a boar, raised up the earth, and created the entire world, with the saints his sons. 5. Brahmā, the eternal, unchanging, and undecaying, was produced from the æther (ākāśa). From him sprang Marīchi, of whom Kaśyapa was the son. 6. From Kaśyapa sprang Vivasvat: and from him was descended Manu, who was formerly the lord of creatures (prajāpati). Ikshvāku²¹² was the son of Manu (7) and to him this prosperous earth was formerly given by his father. Know that this Ikshvāku was the former king in Ayodhyā.”

The account which I next quote does not agree with the last in its details, as, besides representing the Prajāpatis or sons of Brahmā to be seventeen in number, it places Marīchi, Kaśyapa, and Vivasvat in the same rank as contemporaries, while the former narrative declares them to have been respectively father, son, and grandson.

"5. Having heard the words of Rāma, the bird (Jaṭāyus) made known to him his own race, and himself, and the origin of all beings. 6. 'Listen while I declare to you from the commencement all the Prajāpatis (lords of creatures) who came into existence in the earliest time. 7. Kardama was the first, then Vikṛita, Śeṣha, Saṁśraya, the energetic Bahuputra, (8) Sthānu, Marīchi, Atri, the strong Kratu, Pulastya, Angiras, Prachetas, Pulaha, (9) Daksha, then Virasvat, Arishṭanemi, and the glorious Kāśyapa, who was the last. 10. The Prajāpati Daksha is famed to have had sixty daughters. 11. Of these Kāśyapa took in marriage eight elegant maidens, Aditi, Diti, Danū, Kālakā, (12) Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu,²¹⁵ and Analā. Kāśyapa, pleased, then said to these maids, (13) 'ye shall bring forth sons like to me, preservers of the three worlds.' Aditi, Diti, Danū, (14) and Kālakā assented; but the others did not agree. Thirty-three gods were borne by Aditi, the Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras, and the two Aśvins." [The following verses 15-28 detail the offspring of Diti, Danū, Kālakā, Tāmṛā, Krodhavaśā, as well as of Kraunchī, Bhāsi, Syeni, Dhṛitarāshṭri, and Sukī the daughters of Kālakā, and of the daughters of Krodhavaśā. (Compare the Mahābharata, i. 2620-2635; and Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. ii. pp. 72 f.) After this we come upon Manu and the creation of mankind.] "29. Manu, (wife) of Kaśyapa,²¹⁶ produced men, Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras. 30. 'Brāhmanas were born from the mouth, Kshattriyas from the breast, Vaiśyas from the thighs, and Sūdras from the feet,' so says the Veda. 31. Analā gave birth to all trees with pure fruits."

It is singular to observe that in this passage, after having represented men of all castes as sprung from Manu, the writer next adds a verse to state, on the authority of the Veda, that the different castes were produced from the different parts of the body out of which they issued. Unless Manu's body be here meant, there is a contradiction between the two statements. If Manu's body is meant, the assertion conflicts with the common account. And if the Manu here mentioned is, as appears from the context, a woman, we should naturally conclude that her offspring was born in the ordinary way; especially as she is said to have been one of the wives of Kaśyapa.

The next passage from the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, 74, 8 f., describes the condition of men in the Kṛita age, and the subsequent introduction of the caste system in the Tretā. The description purports to have been occasioned by an incident which had occurred just before. A Brāhman had come to the door of Rāma's palace in Ayodhyā, carrying the body of his dead son,²¹⁷ and bewailing his loss, the blame of which (as he was himself unconscious of any fault) he attributed to some misconduct on the part of the king. Rāma in consequence convoked his councillors, when the divine sage Nārada spoke as follows :

²¹⁶ The text reads Kaśyapa, "a descendant of Kāśyapa," who, according to Rām. ii. 110, 6, ought to be Vivasvat. But as it is stated in the preceding part of this passage iii. 14, 11 f. that Manu was one of Kāśyapa's eight wives, we must here read Kāśyapa. The Gauḍa recension reads (iii. 20, 30) Manur manushyūṁś cha tatā jānayāmāsa Rāghava, instead of the corresponding line in the Bombay edition.

²¹⁷ The boy is said, in 73, 5, to have been apṛṇpta-yauvanam bālam pancha-varsha-sahasrakam | "a boy of five thousand years who had not attained to puberty!" The Commentator says that varsha here means not a year, but a day (varsha-sabdō 'tra |

Nārada speaks: 8. "Hear, o king, how the boy's untimely death occurred: and having heard the truth regarding what ought to be dinaparaḥ),—just as it does in the ritual prescription that a man should perform a sacrifice lasting a thousand years ("sahasra-saṁvatsaraṁ satram upāsita" iti vat),—and that thus some interpreters made out the boy's age to be sixteen, and others under fourteen. But this would be a most unusual mode of reckoning age.

done, do it. 9. Formerly, in the Kṛita age, Brāhmins alone practised austere fervour (tapas). 10. None who was not a Brāhman did so in that enlightened age, instinct with divine knowledge (or, with Brahma), unclouded (by darkness). 11. At that period all were born immortal, and far-sighted. Then (came) the Tretā age, the era of embodied men, (12) in which the Kshattriyas were born, distinguished still by their former austere fervour; although those men who were great in the Tretā age had been greater, both in energy and austere fervour, in the former birth. 13. All the Brāhmins and Kshattriyas, both the former and the later, were of equal energy in both Yugas.²¹⁸ 14. But not perceiving any more distinction (between the then existing men) they all²¹⁹ next established the approved system of the four castes. 15. Yet in that enlightened age, instinct with righteousness, unclouded (by darkness), unrighteousness planted one foot upon the earth." [After some other remarks (verses 16-18), which are in parts obscure, the writer proceeds:] 19. "But, although this falsehood had been planted upon the earth by unrighteousness, the people, devoted to true righteousness, practised salutary observances. 20. Those Brāhmins and Kshattriyas who lived in the Tretā practised austere fervour, and the rest of mankind obedience. 21. (The principle that) their own duty was the chief thing pervaded the Vaiśyas and Sūdras among them: and the Sūdras especially paid honour to all the (other) classes. . . . 23. Next the second foot of unrighteousness was planted on the earth, and the number of the Dvāpara (the third yuga) was produced. 24. When this deterioration of the age numbered as the Dvāpara, had come into existence,

Some lower marks to the inferior classes

²¹⁸ The Commentator says, this means that in the Kṛita age the Brāhmins were superior, and the Kshattriyas inferior (as the latter had not then the prerogative of practising tapas), but that in the Tretā both classes were equal (ubhayor yugayor madhye kṛita-yuge brahma pūrvam tapo-vīryābhyām utkrishṭam kshattriāṁ chāvarāṇ cha tābhyām tapo-vīryābhyām nyūnam āsit | tat sarvam brahma-kshattrā-rūpam ubhayam tretāyām sama-vīrya-samanvitam āsit | kṛite kshattriyānām tapasy anadhikūrāt tad-yugīyebhyaḥ brāhmaṇebhyas teshām nyūnatā | tretāyām tu ubhayo rapī tapo-dhikārād ubhāv api tapo-vīryābhyām samau | But in the previous verse (12) it is said that the Kshattriyas were born in the Tretā distinguished by their former tapas. But perhaps they were formerly Brahmins, according to verses 9, 10, and 12.

unrighteousness and falsehood increased. 25. In this age, numbered as the Dvāpara, austere fervour entered into the Vaiśyas. Thus in the course of three ages it entered into three castes; (26) and in the three ages righteousness (dharma) was established in three castes. But the Sūdra does not attain to righteousness through the (lapse of these three) ages. 27. A man of low caste performs a great act of austere fervour. Such observance will belong to the future race of Sūdras in the Kali age, (28) but is unrighteous in the extreme if practised by that caste in the Dvāpara. On the outskirts of thy territory such a foolish person, of intense fervour, is practising austerities. Hence this slaughter of the boy."

Here then was a clue to the mystery of the young Brāhman's death. A presumptuous Sūdra, paying no regard to the fact that in the age²²⁰ in which he lived the prerogative of practising self-mortification had not yet descended to the humble class to which he belonged, had been guilty of seeking to secure a store of religious merit by its exercise. Rāma mounts his car Pushpaka, makes search in different regions, and at length comes upon a person who was engaged in the manner alleged. The Sūdra, on being questioned, avows his caste, and his desire to conquer for himself the rank of a god by the self-mortification he was undergoing. Rāma instantly cuts off the offender's head. The gods applaud the deed, and a shower of flowers descends from the sky upon the vindicator of righteousness. Having been invited to solicit a boon from the gods, he asks that the Brāhman boy may be resuscitated, and is informed that he was restored to life at the same moment when the Sūdra was slain. (Sections 75 and 76.)²²¹

The following curious account of the creation of mankind, among whom it states that no distinction of class (or colour) originally existed, is given in the Uttara Kānda, xxx. 19 ff., where Brahmā says to Indra:

Amarendra mayā buddhyā prajāḥ sṛṣṭāś tathā prabho | eka-varṇāḥ sama-bhāṣhā eka-rūpāś cha sarvaśaḥ | 20. Tāsām nāsti viśesho hi darśane lakshane 'pi vā | tato 'ham ekāgramanūs tāḥ prajāḥ samachintayam | 21. So 'ham tāsām viśeshārtham striyam ekām vinirmame | yad yat prajānām pratyangam viśiṣṭāṁ tat tad uddhṛitam | 22. Tato mayā

“19. O chief of the immortals (Indra) all creatures were formed by my will of one class (or colour), with the same speech, and uniform in every respect. 20. There was no distinction between them in appearance, or in characteristic marks. I then intently reflected on these creatures. 21. To distinguish between them I fashioned one woman. Whatever was most excellent in the several members of different creatures was taken from them, (22) and with this (aggregate) I formed a female, faultless in beauty and in all her qualities. Haḥ means ‘ugliness,’ and halya, ‘what is produced from ugliness.’ 23. The woman in whom there is no halya, is called Ahalyā. And this was her name to which I gave currency. 24. When this female had been fashioned, I anxiously considered to whom she should belong. 25. Thou, Indra, didst, from the eminence of thy rank, determine in thy mind, ‘She must be my spouse.’ 26. I, however, gave her in trust to the great Gautama; and after having retained her in charge for many years, he restored her. 27. Knowing then the great steadfastness of that distinguished Muni, and the perfection of his austere fervour, I, in due form, gave her to him for his wife. 28. The holy sage lived with her in the enjoyment of connubial love. But the gods were filled with despair when she had been given away to Gautama. 29. And thou, Indra, angry, as well as inflamed with lust, wentest to the Muni’s hermitage, and didst behold that female brilliant as the flame of fire. 30. She was then corrupted by thee who wert tormented by lust, as well as heated by anger.²²² But thou wert then seen by the eminent rishi in the hermitage, (31) and cursed by that glorious being in his indignation. Thou didst in consequence fall into a reverse of condition and fortune,²²³ etc., etc.

The first passage which I shall adduce is from the Ādi Parvan, or first book, verses 2517 ff. :

Vaiśampāyana uvācha | hanta te kathayishyāmi namaskṛitya Svayambhūre | surādīnām ahaṁ samyak lokānām prabhavāpyayam | Brahmano mānasāḥ putrāḥ viditāḥ śaṇ-maharshayaḥ | Marīchir Atry-angirasau Pulastyaḥ Pulahaḥ Kratuḥ | Marīcheḥ Kaśyapaḥ putraḥ Kaśyapāt tu prajā imāḥ | prajājnire mahābhāgā Dakṣa-kanyās trayodaśa | 2520. Aditir Ditir Danuḥ Kālā Danūyuh Sindhikā tathā | Krodhū Pradhū cha Vīśvā cha Vinatā Kapilā Munih | Kadrūś cha manuḥjaryūghra Dakṣa-kanyaiva Bhārata | etāsūṁ vīrya-sampannam putra-pautram anantakam |

Vaiśampāyana said: I shall, after making obeisance to Svayambhū, relate to thee exactly the production and destruction of the gods and other beings. Six²²³ great rishis are known as the mind-born sons of Brahmā, viz., Marīchi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. ¹⁷ Kaśyapa was the son of Marīchi; and from Kaśyapa sprang these creatures. There were born to Daksha thirteen daughters of eminent rank, (2520) Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālā, Danāyu, Siṁhikā, Krodhā, Pradhā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, and Muni.²²¹ Kadrū also was of the number. These daughters had valorous sons and grandsons innumerable."

Daksha, however, had other daughters, as we learn further on in verses 2574 ff., where the manner of his own birth also is related :

*Dakshas tv ajāyatāngushthād dakshinād bhagavān ṛishih | Brahmanah

Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Vasishṭha, Parameshṭhīn, Vivasvat, Soma, the person called Kardama, Krodha, and Vikṛita." (Here, however, only twenty names are specified including Brahmā himself.) Compare this list with those quoted above, p. 116, from the Rāmāyana, iii. 14, 7 ff., from Manu in p. 36, and from the Vishṇu P. in p. 65.

2574. Daksha, the glorious rishi, tranquil in spirit, and great in austere fervour, sprang from the right thumb of Brahmā.²²⁵ From the left thumb sprang that great Muni's wife, on whom he begot fifty²²⁶ daughters. Of these he gave ten to Dharma, twenty-seven to Indu (Soma),²²⁷ and according to the celestial system, thirteen to Kaśyapa." I proceed with some other details given in the verses I have extracted:

2581. "Pitāmaha's descendant, Manu, the god and the lord of creatures, was his (it does not clearly appear whose) son. The eight Vasus, whom I shall detail, were his sons. 2595. Dividing the right breast of Brahmā, the glorious Dharma (Righteousness), issued in a human form, bringing happiness to all people. He had three eminent sons, Sama, Kāma, and Harsha (Tranquillity, Love, and Joy), who are the delight of all creatures, and by their might support the world. 2610. Arushī, the daughter of Manu, was the wife of that sage (Chyavana, son of Bhrigu). 2614. There are two other sons of Brahmā, whose mark remains in the world, Dhātṛi,²²⁸ and Vīdhātṛi, who remained with Manu. Their sister was the beautiful goddess Lakshmī,²²⁹ whose home is in the lotus. Her mind-born sons are the steeds, who move in the sky. 2617. When the creatures who were desirous of food, had devoured one another, Adharma (Unrighteousness) was produced, the destroyer of all beings. His wife was Nirriti,²³⁰ and hence the Rākshasas are called Nairṛitas, or the offspring of Nirriti. She had three dreadful sons, continually addicted to evil deeds, Bhaya Mahābhaya (Fear and Terror) and Mṛityu (Death) the ender of beings. He has neither wife, nor any son, for he is the ender."²³⁰

The next passage gives a different account of the origin of Daksha; and describes the descent of mankind from Manu:

Adip. 3128. Tejobhir uditāḥ sarve maharshi-sama-tejasah | daśa Pra-

²²⁵ See above, p. 72 f. The Matsya P. also states that Daksha sprang from Brahmā's right thumb, Dharma from his nipple, Kāma from his heart, etc.

²²⁶ The passage of the Rāmāyaṇa, quoted above, p. 116, affirms that they were sixty in number. Compare Wilson's Vishṇu P. vol. i. pp. 109 ff., and vol. ii. pp. 19 ff.

“3128. Born all with splendour, like that of great rishis, the ten sons of Prachetas are reputed to have been virtuous and holy ; and by them the glorious beings²³¹ were formerly burnt up by fire springing from their mouths. From them was born Daksha Prāchetasa;²³² and from Daksha, the Parent of the world (were produced), these creatures. Cohabiting with Vīriṇī, the Muni Daksha begot a thousand sons like himself, famous

²³² The same account of Daksha's birth is given in the S'āntip. 7573: Daśānāṁ tanayas tv eko Daksho nūma prajāpatiḥ | tasya dve nūmanī loke Dakshaḥ Ka iti cha-chyate | “These ten Prachetas had one son called Daksha, the lord of creatures. He is commonly called by two names, Daksha and Ka.” (Compare vol. iv. of this work, p. 13, note 30, and p. 24; and the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 4, 1, 19, and ii. 4, 4, 1, there quoted.) The following verse 7574 tells us that Kāśyapa also had two names, the other being Arishṭanemi. See Rām. iii. 14, 9, quoted above.

for their religious observances, to whom Nārada taught the doctrine of final liberation, the unequalled knowledge of the Sāṅkhya. Desirous of creating offspring, the Prajāpati Dakṣa next formed fifty daughters, of whom he gave ten to Dharma, thirteen to Kaśyapa, and twenty-seven, devoted to the regulation of time,²³³ to Indu (Soma). . . . 3135. On Dākṣhāyānī,²³⁴ the most excellent of his thirteen wives, Kaśyapa, the son of Marichi, begot the Ādityas, headed by Indra and distinguished by their energy, and also Vivasvat.²³⁵ To Vivasvat was born a son, the mighty Yama Vivasvata. To Mārtaṇḍa (i.e. Vivasvat, the Sun) was born the wise and mighty Manu, and also the renowned Yama, his (Manu's) younger brother. Righteous was this wise Manu, on whom a race was founded. Hence this (family) of men became known as the race of Manu. Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, and other men sprang from this Manu. From him, o king, came the Brāhman conjoined with the Kshattriya. 3140. Among them the Brāhmanas, children of Manu, held the Veda with the Vedāṅgas. The children of Manu are said to have been Vena, Dhṛiṣṇu, Narishyanta, Nābhāga, Ikshvāku, Kārusha, Suryāti, Ilā the eight, Pṛishadra the ninth, who was addicted to the duties of a Kshattriya, and Nābhāgarishṭha the tenth. Manu had also fifty other sons; but they all, as we have heard, perished in consequence of mutual dissensions. Subsequently the wise Purūravas was born of Ilā, who, we heard, was both his mother and his father."

The tradition, followed in this passage, which assigns to all the castes one common ancestor, removed by several stages from the creator, is, of course, in conflict with the account which assigns to them a fourfold descent from the body of Brahmā himself.

The Sāntiparvan, verses 27.9 ff., contains an account of the origin of castes which has evidently proceeded from an extreme assertor of the dignity of the Brahmanical order. The description given of the prerogatives of the priestly class is precisely in the style, and partly in almost the identical words, of the most extravagant declarations of ²³³ This phrase kūlasya nayane yuktūḥ had previously occurred in verse 2580, where it is followed by the words sarvā nakshatra-yoginyo loka-yūtrā-vidhūnataḥ | "all identified with the lunar asterisms, and appointed to regulate the life of men." See also Vishṇu P. i. 15, 56, and Professor Wilson's translation ii. p. 10, note 1, and p. 28, note 1.

²³⁴ i.e. Aditi. See verses 2520, 2522, and 2600 of this same book.

Manu (i. 99 f.) on the same subject. In other places, however, the Mahābhārata contains explanations of a very different character regarding the origin of the distinctions, social and professional, which prevailed at the period of its composition. A comparison of these various passages will afford an illustration of the fact already intimated in p. 6,²³⁰ that this gigantic poem is made up of heterogeneous elements, the products of different ages, and representing widely different dogmatical tendencies, the later portions having been introduced by successive editors of the work to support their own particular views, without any regard to their inconsistency with its earlier contents. In fact, a work so vast, the unaided compilation of which would have taxed all the powers of a Didymus Chalkenterus, could scarcely have been created in any other way than that of gradual accretion. And some supposition of this kind is certainly necessary in order to explain such discrepancies as will be found between the passages I have to quote, of which the three first are the productions of believers (real or pretended) in the existence of a natural distinction between their own Brahmanical order and the other classes of the community, while two of those which follow, viz., in pp. 134 and 139, have emanated from fair and moderate writers who had rational views of the essential unity of mankind, and of the superiority of moral and religious character to any factitious divisions of a social description.

In the first passage, Bhīshma, the great uncle of the Pāndus, when describing to Yudhishtira the duties of kings, introduces one of those ancient stories which are so frequently appealed to in the Mahābhārata. Without a minute study of the poem it would be difficult to say whether these are ever based on old traditions, or are anything more than mere vehicles invented to convey the individual views of the writers who narrate them. Bhīshma says, Sāntiparvan, 2749 :

“2749. The king should appoint to be his royal priest²⁵⁸ a man who will protect the good, and restrain the wicked. 2750. On this subject they relate this following ancient story of a conversation between Purūravas the son of Ilā, and Mātariśvan (Vāyu, the Wind-god). Purūravas said: You must explain to me whence the Brāhmaṇ, and whence the (other) three castes were produced, and whence the superiority (of the first) arises. Mātariśvan answered: The Brāhmaṇ was created from Brahmā's mouth, the Kshattriya from his arms, the Vaiśya from his thighs, while for the purpose of serving these three

²⁵⁸ Rāja-purohitaḥ. The king's priest (rāja-purohitaḥ) is here represented as one who should be a confidential and virtuous minister of state. Such is not, however, the character always assigned to this class of persons. In Manu xii. 46, quoted above (p. 41f.), the purohita is placed in a lower class than other Brāhmaṇs. And in the following verse (4527) of the Anusūsanaparvan, taken from a story in which the Rishis utter maledictions against anyone who should have stolen certain lotus roots, part of the curse spoken by Viśvāmitra is as follows: *varṣhācharo'stu bh̥ṛitako rājnas̄ ch̥istu puro-
hitaḥ | ayājyasya bhavato r̥itrig visa-stainyaṁ karoti yaḥ* | “Let the man who steals lotus roots be a hireling trafficker in rain incantations (?) and the domestic priest of a king, and the priest of one for whom no Brāhmaṇ should officiate.” Again, in verse 4579, the same person says: karotu bh̥ṛitako'varṣhūn rājnas̄ ch̥istu purohitaḥ | r̥itrig astu hy ayājyasya yas te harati pushkaram | “Let him who steals thy lotus perform as a hireling incantations to cause drought, and be a king's domestic priest, and the priest of one for whom no Brāhmaṇ should officiate.” I have had partly to guess at the sense of the words varṣhācharaḥ and avarṣhām. The Commentator does not explain the former; and interprets the latter (for which the Edinburgh MS. reads avarshāḥ) by vr̥ṣhti-nibandham, “causing drought.” He adds, papishṭhāḥ eva avarṣhūh, “those who cause drought are most wicked.”

castes was produced the fourth class, the Sūdra, fashioned from his feet. The Brāhman, as soon as born, becomes the lord of all beings upon the earth, for the purpose of protecting the treasure of righteousness. 2755. Then (the creator) constituted the Kshattriya the controulr of the earth, a second Yama to bear the rod, for the satisfaction of the people. And it was Brahmā's ordinance that the Vaiśya should sustain these three classes with money and grain, and that the Sūdra should serve them. The son of Ilā then enquired: Tell me, Vāyu, to whom the earth, with its wealth, rightfully belongs, to the Brāhman or the Kshattriya? Vāyu replied: All this, whatever exists in the world, is the Brāhman's property²³⁰ by right of primogeniture: this is known to those who are skilled in the laws of duty. It is his own which the Brāhman eats, puts on, and bestows. He is the chief of all the castes, the first-born and the most excellent. Just as a woman when she has lost her (first) husband, takes her brother in law for a second; so the Brāhman is thy first resource in calamity; afterwards another may arise."

A great deal is shortly afterwards added about the advantages of concord between Brāhmans and Kshattriyas. Such verses as the following (2802): "From the dissensions of Brāhmans and Kshattriyas the people incur intolerable suffering" (mitho bhēdād brāhmaṇa-kshattriyāṇām prajā duḥkhaṁ dussahaṁ chārīṣanti) afford tolerably clear evidence that the interests of these two classes must frequently have clashed.

In the same strain as the preceding passage is the following:

Vanaparvan, 13436. Nādhyāpanād yūjanād vā anyasmād vā pratigrahāt | dosho bhavati viprāṇām jvalitāgni-samā dvijāḥ | durvedā vā suvedā vā prākṛitāḥ saṁskṛitās tathā | brāhmaṇā nūramantaryā bhasmachannā ivāgnayaḥ | yathā śmaśāne diptaṁ yūḥ pāvako naiva dushyati | evaṁ vidvān avidvān vā brāhmaṇo daivatam mahat | prākāraiś cha puradvāraiḥ prāsūdaiś cha prithag-vidhaiḥ | nagarāṇi na śobhante hīnāṇi brāhmaṇottamāḥ | vedādhyā rṣitta-sampannā jñānavantas tapasvināḥ | yatra tiṣṭhanti vai viprāḥ tan-nāma nagaraṁ nripa | vraje vā py athavā

thaṁ cha tad bhavet |*

"No blame accrues to Brāhmins from teaching or sacrificing, or from receiving money in any other way: Brāhmins are like flaming fire. Whether ill or well versed in the Veda, whether untrained or accomplished, Brāhmins must never be despised, like fires covered by ashes. Just as fire does not lose its purity by blazing even in a cemetery, so too, whether learned or unlearned, a Brāhmin is a great deity. Cities are not rendered magnificent by ramparts, gates, or palaces of various kinds, if they are destitute of excellent Brāhmins. 13440. The place where Brāhmins, rich in the Veda, perfect in their conduct, and austere fervid, reside, is (really) a city (nāgara). Wherever there are men abounding in Vedic lore, whether it be a cattle-pen, or a forest, that is called a city, and that will be a sacred locality."

The following verses from the Anuśāsanap. 2160 ff. are even more extreme in their character, and are, in fact, perfectly sublime in their insolence:

*Brāhmaṇānām paribhavād asurāḥ salile śayāḥ | brāhmaṇānām prasā-
dāch cha devāḥ svarga-nivāsinaḥ | āśakyāṁ srashtum ākāśam achālyo

devānām api devatāḥ | tān pūjyasva satatāṁ dānena paricharyyayā |
yadichhasi mahim bhoktum imām sāgara-mekhalām |*

"Through the prowess of the Brāhmins the Asuras were prostrated on the waters; by the favour of the Brāhmins the gods inhabit heaven. The ether cannot be created; the mountain Himavat cannot be shaken; the Gangā cannot be stemmed by a dam; the Brāhmins cannot be conquered by any one upon earth. The world cannot be ruled in opposition to the Brāhmins; for the mighty Brāhmins are the deities even of the gods. If thou desire to possess the sea-girt earth, honour them continually with gifts and with service."

The next passage seems to be self-contradictory, as it appears to set out with the supposition that the distinction of castes arose after the creation; while it goes on to assert the separate origin of the four classes:

Sāntiparvan, 10861. *Janaka uvācha | varṇo viśeṣha-varṇānām ma-

“Janaka asks: 10861. How, o great rishi, does the caste of the separate classes arise? Tell me, as I desire to know. According to the Veda, the offspring which is born (to any one) is the very man himself. How does offspring born of a Brāhmaṇ fall into distinct classes? Parāśara replied: It is just as you say, o great king. A son is the very same as he by whom he was begotten; but from decline of austere fervour, (men) have become included under different classes. And from good soil and good seed a pure production arises, whilst from those which are different and faulty springs an inferior production. Those acquainted with duty know that men were born from the mouth, arms, thighs, and feet of Prajāpati when he was creating the worlds. The Brāhmaṇs sprang from his mouth, the Kshattriyas from his arms, the merchants from his thighs, and the servants from his feet. The scriptural tradition speaks only of four classes. The men not included in these are declared to have sprung from a mixture (of the four). 10870. Janaka asked: How is there a difference in race between men sprung from one and the same Brahmā? for there are now many races in the world. How have Munis born anywhere (indiscriminately) entered into a good family; some of them having sprung from a pure source and others from an inferior stock? Parāśara replied: It would not be credible that noble-minded men, whose souls had been perfected by austere fervour, should have been the offspring of a degraded birth. Munis who had begotten sons in an indiscriminate way conferred on them the position of rishis by their own austere fervour." The speaker then names a number of sages (10876) "famed for their acquaintance with the Veda, and for their self-command and austere fervour," as "having all attained to their respective conditions by practising the latter observance."

In the latter verses the speaker appears to admit, at the very moment that he denies, the degraded origin of some of the renowned sages of Indian antiquity. What else is the meaning of the verse, "Munis who had begotten sons in an indiscriminate way conferred on them the position of rishis by their own austere fervour?" No doubt it is intended to represent those as exceptional times: but while we refuse to admit this assumption, we may find some reason to suppose that the irregularities, as they were afterwards considered to be, which this assumption was intended to explain away, were really samples of the state of things which commonly prevailed in earlier ages.

The next extract declares that there is a natural distinction between the Brāhmanas and the other castes; and appears to intimate that the barrier so constituted can only be overpassed when the soul re-appears in another body in another birth:

Anuśāsana-parva, 6570. Deva uvācha | Brāhmanyam devi dushprāpyam nisargād brāhmaṇaḥ śubhe | kshattriyo vaiśyaśūdrau vā nisargād iti me matiḥ | karmanā dushkṛiteneha sthānād bhraśyati vai dvijaḥ | jyeshṭham varṇam anuprāpya tasmād raksheta vai dvijaḥ | sthito brāhmaṇa-dharmena brāhmanyam upajīvati | kshattriyo vā 'tha vaiśyo vā brahmabhūyam sa gachhati | yaś tu brahmatvam utśṛjya kshātraṁ dharmam nishvate | brāhmanyāt sa paribhraśṭaḥ kshātra-yonau prajāyate | vaiśya-karma cha yo vipro lobha-moha-vyapūśrayaḥ | brāhmanyam durlabham prāpya karoty alpa-matiḥ sadā | sa dvijo vaiśyatām eti vaiśyo vā śūdratām iyat | sva-dharmāt prachyuto vipras tataḥ śūdratvam āpnute | 6590. Ekhiś tu karmabhir devi śubhair ācharitais tathā | śūdro brāhmaṇatām yāti vaiśyaḥ kshattriyatām vrajet | śūdra-karmāṇi sarvāṇi yathānyāyam yathāvidhi | śūśrūṣhām paricharyyām cha jyeshṭhe varṇe prayatnataḥ | kuryād ityādi |

be attained. A man, whether he be a Brāhman, Kshattriya, Vaiśya, or Sūdra, is such by nature; this is my opinion. By evil deeds a twice-born man falls from his position. Then let a twice-born man who has attained to the highest caste, keep it. The Kshattriya, or Vaiśya, who lives in the condition of a Brāhman, by practising the duties of one, attains to Brāhmanhood. But he who abandons the state of a Brāhman and practises the duty of a Kshattriya, falls from Brāhmanhood and is born in a Kshattriya womb. And the foolish Brāhman, who, having attained that Brāhmanhood which is so hard to get, follows the profession of a Vaiśya, under the influence of cupidity and delusion, falls into the condition of a Vaiśya. (In like manner) a Vaiśya may sink into the state of a Sūdra. A Brāhman who falls away from his own duty becomes afterwards a Sūdra. . . . 6590. But by practising the following good works, o goddess, a Sūdra becomes a Brāhman, and a Vaiśya becomes a Kshattriya: Let him actively perform all the functions of a Sūdra according to propriety and rule, i.e. obedience and service to the highest caste," etc.

The next passage is the first of those which I have already noted, as in spirit and tenor very different from the preceding. The conversation which it records arose as follows: Yudhishtira found his brother Bhīmasena caught in the coils of a serpent, which, it turned out, was no other than the famous king Nahusha, who by his sacrifices, austerities, etc., had formerly raised himself to the sovereignty of the three worlds: but had been reduced to the condition in which he was now seen, as a punishment for his pride and contempt of the Brāhman. He promises to let Bhīmasena go, if Yudhishtira will answer certain questions. Yudhishtira agrees, and remarks that the serpent was acquainted with whatever a Brāhman ought to know. Whereupon the Serpent proceeds:

"12469. The Serpent said: Who may be a Brāhmaṇ, and what is the thing to be known, o Yudhishtira;—tell me, since by thy words I infer thee to be a person of extreme intelligence. Yudhishtira replied: 12470. The Smṛiti declares, o chief of Serpents, that he is a Brāhmaṇ, in whom truth, liberality, patience, virtue, innocence, austere fervour, and compassion are seen. And the thing to be known is the supreme Brahma, free from pain, as well as from pleasure,—to whom, when men have attained, they no longer sorrow. What is your opinion? The Serpent replied: The Veda (brahma) is beneficial to all the four castes and is authoritative and true.²⁴⁰ And so we find in

Sūdras also truth, liberality, calmness, innocence, harmlessness, and compassion. And as for the thing to be known, which is free from pain and pleasure, I perceive that there is no other thing free from these two influences. Yudhishtira rejoined: 12475. The qualities characteristic of a Sūdra do not exist in a Brāhman (nor vice versa). (Were it otherwise) the Sūdra would not be a Sūdra, nor the Brāhman a Brāhman.²⁴¹ The person in whom this regulated practice is perceived is declared to be a Brāhman; and the man, in whom it is absent, should be designated as a Sūdra. And as to what you say further, that there is nothing other than this (Brahma) to be known, which is free from the susceptibilities in question; this is also (my own) opinion, that there is nothing free from them. Just as between cold and heat there can be neither heat nor cold, so there is nothing free from the feeling of pleasure and pain. Such is my view; or how do you consider? The Serpent remarked: 12480. If a man is regarded by you as being a Brāhman only in consequence of his conduct, then birth is vain until action is shown. Yudhishtira replied: O most sapient Serpent, birth is difficult to be discriminated in the present condition

ity arthaḥ | evaṁ cha satyādikāṁ yadi śūdre 'py asti tarhi so 'pi brāhmaṇa eva syād iti āha "śūdreshv api" iti | "The serpent, however, understanding by the term Brāhman mere birth, shows in a sloka and a half that Yudhishtira's definition fails by being applicable also to a Sūdra. Chāturvarṇya means 'beneficial to the four castes.' (Such is the Veda), which is also 'true' and 'authoritative,' as establishing what is duty. Inasmuch as the Smṛiti which prescribes a Sūdra's conduct is itself founded on the Veda; all conduct, etc., is based on the Veda. And so if (the characters of) truth, etc., are found also in a Sūdra, he too must be a Brāhman—such is his argument in the words 'In Sūdras also.'" According to this explanation the connection between the first line and the second and third may be as follows: The Veda is beneficial to all the castes, and therefore Sūdras also, having the advantage of its guidance, although at second hand, may practise all the virtues you enumerate; but would you therefore call them Brāhman?

²⁴³ In the tenth vol. of his Indische Studien, p. 83, Professor Weber adduces some curious evidence of the little confidence entertained in ancient times by the Indians in the chastity of their women. He refers to the following passages: (1) Nidāna Sūtra, iii. 8. Uchchāvacha-charaṇāṇḥ striyo bhavanti | saha deva-sākshye cha manushya-sākshye cha yeshām putro vakshye teshām putro bhaviṣhyāmi | yāmścha putrān vakshye te me putrāṇ bhaviṣhyanti | "Women are irregular in their conduct. Of whatsoever men, I, taking gods and men to witness, shall declare myself to be the son, I shall be their son; and they whom I shall name as my sons shall be so." (2) S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 2, 1, 40. Atha yad "brāhmaṇaḥ" ityūha | anaddhā iva vai asya atah purā jānam bhavati | idam hy āhuḥ "rakṣāṃsi yoshitam anusachante tad uta rakṣāṃsy eva reta ādadhati iti | atha atra addhā jūyate yo brāhmaṇo yo yajnāj jūyate | tasmād api rājanyaṁ vā vaiśyaṁ vā "brāhmaṇaḥ" ity eva brūyāt | brāhmaṇo hi jūyate yo yajnāj jūyate | tasmād āhuḥ "na savana-kṛtāṁ hanyad enasvī ha eva savana-kṛtā" iti | "Now as regards what he says '(this) Brāhmaṇ (has been consecrated):' before this his birth is uncertain. For they say this that 'Rakshases follow after women, and therefore that it is Rakshases who inject seed into them.'" (Compare what it said of the Gandharvas in Atharva V. iv. 37, 11, 12, and Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1865, p. 301.) So then he is certainly born who is born from sacred science (brahma) and from sacrifice. Wherefore also let him address a Rājanya or a Vaiśya as 'Brāhmaṇ,' for he is born from sacred science (brāhma, and consequently a Brāhmaṇ) who is born from sacrifice. Hence they say 'let no one slay an offerer of a libation, for he incurs (the) sin (of Brahmanicide?) by so doing.'" (3) On the next passage of the S' P. Br. ii. 5, 2, 20, Professor Weber remarks that it is assumed that the wife of the person offering the Varuṇa praghāsa must have one or more paramours: Atha pratipras'hātā pratiparaiti | sa patnīm udīneshyan prichhati 'kena (jāreṇa Comm.) charasi' iti | Varuṇyaṁ vai etat strī karoti yad anyasya saty anyena charati | atho "na id me 'ataḥ-salpā juhuvad" iti tasmāt prichhati | niruktaṁ vai enaḥ kaṇṭyo bhavati | satyaṁ hi bhavati | tasmād vā iva prichhati | sū yad na prati-jūṇīta jñātibhyo ha asyai tad ahitaṁ syāt | "The pratiprasthātṛ (one of the priests) returns. Being about to bring forward the wife, he asks her, 'with what (paramour) dost thou keep company?' For it is an offence incurring punishment from Varuṇa that being the wife of one man she keeps company with another. He enquires 'in order that she may not sacrifice with me while she feels an inward pang.' For a sin when declared becomes less: for it is not attended with falsehood. Therefore he enquires. If she does not confess, it will be ill for her relations." (This passage is explained in Kātyāyana's S'rāuta Sūtras, v. 5, 6-11.) (4) S' P. Br. i. 3, 2, 21. Tad u ha uvācha Yājñavalkyo "yathūdishṭam patnyūṇḥ astu | kas tad ūdriyeta yat para-puṇsā vā patnī syāt" | "Yājñavalkya said this (in opposition to the doctrine of some other teachers): 'let the prescribed rule be followed regarding a wife. Who would mind his wife consorting with other men?'" The last clause has reference to the consequence which the other teachers said would follow from adopting the course they disapproved, viz., that the wife of the man who did so would become an adulteress. (5) Taitt. S. v. 6, 8, 3. Na agniṁ chitvā rāmām upeyād "ayonau reto dhasyāmi" iti | na doilīyaṁ chitvā 'nyasya striyam upeyāt | na trilīyaṁ chitvā kāñchana upeyāt | reto vai etad nidhātte yad agniṁ chinute | yad upeyād retasā vyridhyeta | "Let not a man, after preparing the altar for the sacred fire, approach a woman (a S'ūdra-woman, according to the Commentator), (considering) that in doing so, he would be discharging seed into an improper place. Let no man, after a second time preparing the firemen are continually begetting children on all (sorts of) women. The speech, the mode of propagation, the birth, the death of all mankind are alike. The text which follows is Vedic and authoritative: 'We who (are called upon) we recite the text.'²⁴³ Hence those men who have an insight into truth know that virtuous character is the thing chiefly to be desired. 'The natal rites of a male are enjoined to be performed before the section of the umbilical cord (Manu, ii. 29). Then Sāvitrī (the Gāyatrī, Manu ii. 77) becomes his mother and his altar, approach another man's wife. Let no man, after a third time preparing the fire-altar, approach any woman: for in preparing the fire-altar he is discharging seed. Should he approach (a woman in these forbidden cases) he will miscarry with his seed." This prohibition of adultery in a certain case, seems to prove that it was no uncommon occurrence, and is calculated, as Professor Weber remarks, to throw great doubt on the purity of blood in the old Indian families.

²⁴³ To explain the last elliptical expression I will quote part of the Commentator's remarks on the beginning of Yudhishthira's reply: Yāgādīnām iva maithunasāyāpi sādāhāraṇyāj jātir durjneyā | tathā chā śrutih "na chaitad vidmo brāhmaṇāḥ smo vayam abrahmaṇā vā" iti brāhmaṇya-saṁśayaṁ upanyasyati | nanu jāty-anīśchaye katham "brāhmaṇo 'ham" ityādī abhimūna-purassaram yāgādaḥ pravartiteta ity āśankyāha "idam ārsham" iti | atra "ye yajāmahe" ity anena cha ye vayam smo brāhmaṇāḥ anye vā te vayam yajāmahe iti brāhmaṇye 'navadhāraṇāṁ darsitam | mantra-lingam api "ya evāsmi sa san yaje" iti | . . . Tasmād āchūra eva brāhmaṇya-nīśchayahetur veda-prāmāṇyād ity upasāṁharati | "As the mode of propagation is common to all the castes, just as speech, etc. are, birth is difficult to be determined. And accordingly, by the words: 'We know not this, whether we are Brāhmans or no Brāhmans,' the Veda signifies a doubt as to Brāhmanhood. Then, having raised the difficulty 'how, if birth is undetermined, can a man engage in sacrifice, etc., with the previous consciousness that he is a Brāhman, etc.?' the author answers in the words 'this text is Vedic, etc.' It is both shewn by the words 'we who . . . recite,' (which mean) 'we, whoever we are,—Brāhmans or others,—we recite,' that the fact of Brāhmanhood is unascertained; and this is also a characteristic of the formula, 'whosoever I am, being he who I am, I recite.'" The comment concludes: "Hence he briefly infers from the authoritative character of the Veda, that conduct is the cause of certainty in regard to Brāhmanhood." Prof. Aufrecht has pointed out to me that the words ye yajāmahe occur in S'. P. Br. i. 5, 2, 16, and in Taitt. S. i. 16, 11, 1. The Commentator on the last-named passage refers in explanation of them to Asvalāyana's S'rauta Sūtras, i. 5, 4 f., where it is said that these two words constitute the formula called āguḥ, which comes in at the beginning of all the yājyās which are unaccompanied by any anuyāja. The Commentator interprets the two words thus: sarve "ye" vayam hotāro 'dhvaryuṇā "yaja" iti preśhitās te vayam "yajāmahe" yājyām paṭhāmaḥ | "All we hotri priests who are called upon by the adhvaryu by the word 'recite,' we recite, i.e. repeat the yājyā." (See Haug's Ait. Br. ii. p. 133, and note 11.) Prof. Aufrecht thinks the words in the Commentator's note ya evāsmi sa san yaje may be a free adaptation of Atharva V. vi. 123, 8, 4. It does not appear from what source the words na chaitad vidmaḥ etc. are derived.

religious teacher his father (Manu, ii. 170, 225). 12485. Until he is born in the Veda, he is on a level with a Sūdra' (Manu, ii. 172);—so, in this diversity of opinions did Manu Svāyambhuva declare. The castes (though they have done nothing) will have done all they need do,²⁴⁴ if no fixed rules of conduct are observed. In such a case there is considered to be a gross confusion of castes. I have already declared that he is a Brāhman in whom purity of conduct is recognized."

The next passage from the Sāntiparvan, verses 6930 ff., is even more explicit than the last in denying any natural distinction between the people of the different castes :

The colour (varṇa) of the Brāhmans was white; that of the Kshattriyas red; that of the Vaiśyas yellow, and that of the Sūdras black.' ²⁴⁸ 6935. Bhara-dvāja here rejoins: 'If the caste (varṇa) of the four classes is distinguished by their colour (varṇa), then a confusion of all the castes is observable. Desire, anger, fear, cupidity, grief, apprehension, hunger, fatigue, prevail over us all: by what, then, is caste discriminated? Sweat, urine, excrement, phlegm, bile, and blood (are common to all); the bodies of all decay: by what then is caste discriminated? There are innumerable kinds of things moving and stationary: how is the class (varṇa) of these various objects to be determined?' Bhṛigu replies: 'There is no difference of castes: ²⁴⁹ this world, having been at first created by Brahmā entirely Brahmanic, ²⁵⁰

became (afterwards) separated into castes in consequence of works. 6940. Those Brāhmans (lit. twice-born men), who were fond of sensual pleasure, fiery, irascible, prone to violence, who had forsaken their duty, and were red-limbed, fell into the condition of Kshattriyas. Those Brāhmans, who derived their livelihood from kine, who were yellow, who subsisted by agriculture, and who neglected to practise their duties, entered into the state of Vaiśyas. Those Brāhmans, who were addicted to mischief and falsehood, who were covetous, who lived by all kinds of work, who were black and had fallen from purity, sank into the condition of Sūdras. Being separated from each other by these works, the Brāhmans became divided into different castes. Duty and the rites of sacrifice have not been always forbidden to (any of) them. Such are the four classes for whom the Brahmanic²⁵¹ Sarasvatī was at first designed by Brahmā, but who through their cupidity fell into ignorance. 6945. Brāhmans live agreeably to the prescriptions of the Veda; while they continually hold fast the Veda, and observances, and ceremonies, their austere fervour (tapas) does not perish. And sacred science was created the highest thing: they who are ignorant of it are no twice-born men. Of these there are various other classes in different places, Piśūchas, Rākshasas, Pretas, various tribes of Mlechhas, who have lost all knowledge sacred and profane, and practise whatever observances they please. And different sorts of creatures with the purificatory rites of Brāhmans, and discerning their own duties, are created by different rishis through their own austere fervour. This creation, sprung from the primal god, having its root in Brahma, undecaying, imperishable, is called the mind-born creation, and is devoted to the prescriptions of duty.' 6950. Bharadvāya again enquires: 'What is that in virtue of which a man is a Brāhman, a Kshattriya, means "formed of the quality of passion" (rajo-guṇa-maya); yellow (pīta) "formed of the qualities of passion and darkness" (rajas-tamo-maya), and black (krishṇa, or asita) "formed of darkness only" (kevala-tamomaya).

a Vaiśya, or a Sūdra; tell me, o most eloquent Brāhman rishi.' Bhṛigu replies: 'He who is pure, consecrated by the natal and other ceremonies, who has completely studied the Veda, lives in the practice of the six ceremonies, performs perfectly the rites of purification, who eats the remains of oblations, is attached to his religious teacher, is constant in religious observances, and devoted to truth,—is called a Brāhman. 6953. He in whom are seen truth, liberality, inoffensiveness, harmlessness, modesty, compassion, and austere fervour,—is declared to be a Brāhman. He who practises the duty arising out of the kingly office, who is addicted to the study of the Veda, and who delights in giving and receiving,²⁵²—is called a Kṣhattriya. 6955. He who readily occupies himself with cattle,²⁵³ who is devoted to agriculture and acquisition, who is pure, and is perfect in the study of the Veda,—is denominated a Vaiśya. 6956. He who is habitually addicted to all kinds of food, performs all kinds of work, who is unclean, who has abandoned the Veda, and does not practise pure observances,—is traditionally called a Sūdra. And this (which I have stated) is the mark of a Sūdra, and it is not found in a Brāhman: (such) a Sūdra will remain a Sūdra, while the Brāhman (who so acts) will be no Brāhman.'²⁵⁴ 132 reference might not be given but remain

The passage next to be quoted recognizes, indeed, the existence of castes in the Kṛita age, but represents the members of them all as having been perfect in their character and condition, and as not differing from one another in any essential respects. as B.C. and others have

It is related in the Vanaparvan that Bhīmasena, one of the Pāndus,

²⁵³ Paśūn vānījyāya upayogināḥ upalabdhwā viśati pratishṭhām labhate | "Who perceiving cattle to be useful for trade, 'enters,' obtains a basis (for his operations)." —Comm. As we have seen above p. 97, these etymologies are frequently far-fetched and absurd.

"11234. The Kṛita is that age in which righteousness is eternal. In the time of that most excellent of Yugas (everything) had been done (kṛita), and nothing (remained) to be done. Duties did not then languish, nor did the people decline. Afterwards, through (the influence of) time, this yuga fell into a state of inferiority.²⁰¹ In that age there were neither Gods,²⁰² Dānavas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Rākshasas, nor Pannagas; no buying or selling went on; the Vedas were not classed²⁰³ as Sāman, Rich, and Yajush; no efforts were made by men:²⁰⁴ the fruit (of the earth was obtained) by their mere wish: righteousness and abandonment of the world (prevailed).

²⁰¹ In thus rendering, I follow the Commentator, whose gloss is this: Mukhyam apy amukhyatām gatam | "although the chief, it fell into inferiority." In Bühlingk and Roth's Lexicon this line is quoted under the word gunatā, to which the sense of "superiority, excellence," is assigned.

²⁰² Compare with this the verses of the Vāyu Purāṇa quoted in p. 90, which state that in the Kṛita age there were neither plants nor animals; which are the products of unrighteousness.

²⁰³ I do not venture to translate "there was then no [division of the Veda into] Sāman, Rich, and Yajush, nor any castes," (1) because the Edinburgh MS. reads vedāḥ instead of varṇāḥ, and the Commentator does not allude to the word varṇāḥ; and (2) castes (varṇāḥ) are referred to below (verses 11242 f.) as existing, though without much distinction of character. The Commentator explains: trayī-dharmasya chitta-śuddhy-arthatvāt tasyās cha tadānīm svabhāvatvāt na sāmāṇīy āsan | "As the object of the triple veda is purity of heart, and as that existed naturally at that period, there were no (divisions of) Sāman, etc."

²⁰⁴ I follow the Commentator whose gloss is: "Mānaso kriyā" *kṛishy-ādy-āram-
bha-bhūta* | kintu "abhidhyāya phalam," sankalpād eva sarvam sampadyate |

No disease or decline of the organs of sense arose through the influence of the age; there was no malice, weeping, pride, or deceit; no contention, and how could there be any lassitude? no hatred, cruelty, (11240) fear, affliction, jealousy, or envy. Hence the supreme Brahma was the transcendent resort of those Yogins. Then Nārāyaṇa, the soul of all beings, was white.²⁶⁵ Brāhmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras possessed the characteristics of the Kṛita.²⁶⁶ In that age were born creatures devoted to their duties. They were alike in the object of their trust, in observances and in their knowledge. At that period the castes, alike in their functions, fulfilled their duties, were unceasingly devoted to one deity, and used one formula (mantra), one rule, and one rite. Though they had separate duties, they had but one Veda, and practised one duty.²⁶⁷ By works connected with the four orders, and dependent on conjunctures of time,²⁶⁸ (11245) but unaffected by desire, or (hope of) reward, they attained to supreme felicity. This complete and eternal righteousness of the four castes during the Kṛita was marked by the character of that age and sought after union with the supreme soul. The Kṛita age was free from the three qualities.²⁶⁹ Understand now the Tretā, in which sacrifice commenced,²⁷⁰ righteousness decreased by a fourth, Vishnu became red;

and men adhered to truth, and were devoted to a righteousness dependent on ceremonies. Then sacrifices prevailed, with holy acts and a variety of rites. In the Tretā men acted with an object in view, seeking after reward for their rites and their gifts, and no longer disposed to austerities and to liberality from (a simple feeling of) duty. 11250. In this age, however, they were devoted to their own duties, and to religious ceremonies. In the Dvāpara age righteousness was diminished by two quarters, Vishṇu became yellow, and the Veda fourfold. Some studied four Vedas, others three, others two, others one, and some none at all.²⁷¹ The scriptures being thus divided, ceremonies were celebrated in a great variety of ways; and the people being occupied with austerity and the bestowal of gifts, became full of passion (rājasī). Owing to ignorance of the one Veda, Vedas were multiplied. And now from the decline of goodness (sattva) few only adhered to truth. When men had fallen away from goodness, many diseases, (11255) desires and calamities, caused by destiny, assailed them, by which they were severely afflicted, and driven to practice austerities. Others desiring enjoyments and heavenly bliss, offered sacrifices. Thus, when they had reached the Dvāpara, men declined through unrighteousness. In the Kali righteousness remained to the extent of one-fourth only. Arrived in that age of darkness, Vishṇu became black: practices enjoined by the Vedas, works of righteousness, and rites of sacrifice, ceased. Calamities, diseases, fatigue, faults, such as anger, etc., distresses, anxiety, hunger, fear, prevailed. As the ages revolve, righteousness again declines. When this takes place, the people also decline. When they decay, the impulses which actuate them also decay. The practices generated by this declension of the Yugas frustrate men's aims. Such is the Kali Yuga which has existed for a short time. Those who are long-lived act in conformity with the character of the age."

The next passage from the same book (the Vana-parvan) does not make any allusion to the Yugas, but depicts the primeval perfection of mankind with some traits peculiar to itself, and then goes on to describe their decline. Mārkaṇdeya is the speaker.

perfect righteousness will prevail. Next is the Tretā in which the triple veda will come into existence; and animals will be slain in sacrifice." See note 65, page 39, above.

²⁷¹ The Commentator explains anpichas ("without the Rig-veda") by kṛita kṛitṃyāḥ. On the sense of the latter word see above.

"The first-born Prajāpati formed the bodies of corporeal creatures pure, spotless, and obedient to duty. The holy men of old were not frustrated in the results at which they aimed; they were religious, truth-speaking, and partook of Brahma's nature. Being all like gods they ascended to the sky and returned at will. They died too when they desired, suffered few annoyances, were free from disease, accomplished all their objects, and endured no oppression. Self-subdued and free from envy, they beheld the gods²⁷² and the mighty rishis, and had an intuitive perception of all duties.²⁷³ They lived for a thousand years, and had each a thousand sons. Then at a later period of time, the inhabitants of the earth became subject to desire and anger, and subsisted by deceit and fraud. Governed by cupidity and delusion, devoted to carnal pursuits, sinful men by their evil deeds walked in crooked paths leading to hell," etc., etc.

Whatever men had not they asked from the gods, saying, 'We have not this; let us have it.' From dislike of this solicitation the gods disappeared, (saying each of them) 'let me not hurt (them), let me not be hateful.'" Compare also the passage of the S. P. Br. iii. 6, 2, 26, referred to by Professor Weber in Indische Studien, x. 158: Te ha sma ete ubhaye deva-manushyūḥ pitarāḥ sampibante | sū eshā sampā | te ha sma dṛisṣyamānā eva purā sampibante uta etarhy adṛisṣyamānāḥ | "Both gods, men, and fathers drink together. This is their symposium. Formerly they drank together visibly: now they do so unseen." Compare also Plato, Philebus, 18: Καὶ οἱ μὲν παλαιοί, κρείττορες ἡμῶν καὶ ἐγγυτέρω θεῶν δικοῦντες, ταυτην φημην παρέδωκαν, "And the ancients who were better than ourselves, and dwelt nearer to the gods, have handed down this tradition."

At the end of the chapter of the Bhishmaparvan, entitled Jambū-khanda-nirmāna, there is a paragraph in which Sanjaya gives an account of the four yugas in Bhāratavarsha (Hindustan), and of the condition of mankind during each of those periods. After stating the names and order of the yugas, the speaker proceeds:

389. Chatvāri tu sahasrāṇi varshāṇām Kuru-sattama | āyuh-sankhyā kṛita-yuge sankhyātā rāja-sattama | tathā trīṇi sahasrāṇi tretāyām manujādhipa | dve sahasre dvāpare cha bhuvi tishṭhanti sāmpratam | na pramāṇa-sthitir hy asti tishye 'smin Bharatarshabha | garbha-sthās cha mriyante cha tathā jātā mriyanti cha | mahābalā mahāsattvāḥ prajñā-guṇa-samanvitāḥ | prajāyante cha jātās cha śataśo 'tha sahasraśaḥ | jātāḥ kṛita-yuge rājan dhaninaḥ priya-darśinaḥ | prajāyante cha jātās cha munayo vai tapodhanāḥ | mahotsūhāḥ mahātmāno dhūrmikāḥ satya-vādināḥ | priyadarśanā vapuṣhmanto mahāvīryā dhanurdharāḥ | varūrḥ yudhi jāyante kshattriyāḥ sūra-sattamāḥ | tretāyām kshattriyā rājan sarve vai chakravarttinaḥ | āyushmanto mahāvīra dhanurdhara-varā yudhi | jāyante kshattriyā vīrās tretāyām vāsa-varttinaḥ | sarve varṇā mahūrāja jāyante dvāpare sati | mahotsūhā vīryavantaḥ paraspara-jayaishinaḥ | tejasā 'lpena saṃyuktāḥ krodhanāḥ puruṣhā nṛipa | lubdhā anṛitakās chaiva tishye jāyanti Bhārata | īrṣhā mānas tathā krodho māyā 'sūyā tathaiva cha | tishye bhavati bhūtānām rāgo lobhaś cha Bhārata | sankshepo vart-rājan dvāpare 'smin narādhipa |

"389. Four thousand years are specified as the duration of life in the Kṛita age,²⁷⁴ three thousand in the Tretā, and two thousand form the period at present established on earth in the Dvāpara. There is no fixed measure in the Tishya (Kali): embryos die in the womb, as well as children after their birth. Men of great strength, goodness, wisdom, and virtue were born, and born too in hundreds and thousands. In the Kṛita age men were produced opulent and beautiful, as well as munis rich in austere fervour. Energetic, mighty, righteous, voracious, beautiful, well-formed, valorous, bow-carrying, (395) heroic Kshattriyas, distinguished in battle, were born.²⁷⁵ In the Tretā all sovereigns were Kshattriyas. Heroic Kshattriyas were born in the Tretā, long-lived, great warriors, carrying bows in the fight, and living subject to authority. During the Dvāpara all castes are produced, energetic, valorous, striving for victory over one another. In the Tishya age are born men of little vigour, irascible, covetous, and mendacious. During that period, envy, pride, anger, delusion, ill-will, desire, and cupidity prevail among all beings. During this Dvāpara age there is some restriction."

As it is here stated that men of all castes were born in the Dvāpara, while Brāhmins and Kshattriyas only are spoken of as previously existing, it is to be presumed that the writer intends to intimate that no Vaiśyas or Sūdras existed during the Kṛita and Tretā ages. This accords with the account given in the passage quoted above from the Uttara Kānda of the Rāmāyaṇa, chapter 74, as well as with other texts which will be quoted below.

The following verses might be taken for a rationalistic explanation of the traditions regarding the yugas; but may be intended as nothing more than a hyperbolical expression of the good or bad effects of a king's more or less active discharge of his duties:

Sānti-parva, 2674. Kālo vā kāraṇam rājño rājā vā kāla-kāraṇam | iti te saṁśayo mā bhūd rājā kūlasya kāraṇam | daṇḍa-nītyām yadā rājā samyak kūrtsnyena varttate | tadā kṛita-yugam nāma kāla-sṛiṣṭam pravarttate | 2682. Daṇḍa-nītyām yadā rājā trīṇ aṁśān anuvarttate | chaturtham aṁśam utsṛījya tadā tretā pravarttate | 2684. Ardhaṁ tyaktvā yadā rājā nīty-arthaṁ anuvarttate | tatas tu dvāparaṁ nāma sa kālaḥ sampravarttate | 2686. Daṇḍa-nītim parityajya yadā kūrtsnyena bhūmipah | prajāḥ klišnāty ayogena pravartteta tadā kaliḥ | 2693. Rājā kṛita-yuga-sraśṭhā tretāyā dvāparasya cha | yugasya cha chaturthasya rājā bhavati kāraṇam |

"2674. The time is either the cause of the king, or the king is the cause of the time. Do not doubt (which of these alternatives is true): the king is the cause of the time. When a king occupies himself fully in criminal justice, then the Kṛita age, brought into existence by time, prevails." [Then follows a description of the results of such good government: righteousness alone is practised; prosperity reigns; the seasons are pleasant and salubrious; longevity is universal; no widows are seen; and the earth yields her increase without cultivation.] "2682. When the king practises criminal justice only to the extent of three parts, abandoning the fourth, then the Tretā prevails." [Then evil is introduced to the extent of a fourth, and the earth has to be tilled.] "2684. When the king administers justice with the omission of a half, then the period called the Dvāpara prevails." [Then evil is increased to a half, and the earth even when tilled yields only half her produce.] "2686. When, relinquishing criminal law altogether, the king actively oppresses his subjects, then the Kali age prevails." [Then the state of things, which existed in the Kṛita age, is nearly reversed.] "2693. The king is the creator of the Kṛita, Tretā, and Dvāpara ages, and the cause also of the fourth yuga."

It does not appear clearly whether we are to suppose them to have been produced in the Kṛita, or in the Tretā, as in the passage of the Rāmāyaṇa, quoted in page 119.

The next extract is on the same subject of the duties of a king, and on the yugas as forms of his action (see Manu, ix. 301, quoted above, p. 49):

Sānti-parvan, 3406. *Karma śūdre kṛishir vaiśye daṇḍa-nītiś cha rājani | Brahmacharyyaṁ tapo mantrāḥ satyaṁ chāpi dvijātishu | teshāṁ yā kshattriyo veda vastrāṇāṁ iva śodhanam*²⁷⁶ | śīla-doshān vinirharttum sa pitā sa prajāpatiḥ | kṛitāṁ tretā dvāparaṁ cha kaliś Bharatarshabha | rāja-vṛittāni sarvāni rājaiḥ yugam uchyate | chāturvarnyaṁ tathā vedāś chāturāśramyam eva cha | sarvaṁ pramūhyate, hy etad yadā rājā pramūdyati |

"3406. Labour (should be found) in a Śūdra, agriculture in a Vaiśya, criminal justice in a King, continence, austere fervour, and the use of sacred texts in a Brāhman. The Kshattriya, who knows how to separate their good and bad qualities, (as (a washerman) understands the cleansing of clothes), is a father and lord of his subjects. The Kṛita, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali, are all modes of a King's action. It is a King who is called by the name of Yuga. The four castes, the Vedas, and the four orders, are all thrown into disorder when the king is regardless."

In two of the preceding passages different colours are represented as characteristic either of particular castes (Śānti-p. verses 6934 ff.), or of particular yugas (Vana-p. verses 11241 ff.). Colours (though not ranked in the same order of goodness) are similarly connected with moral and physical conditions in verses 10058 ff. of the Śāntiparvan, of which I shall offer a few specimens :

Shad jīva-varṇāḥ paramam pramāṇaṁ kṛishṇo dhūmro nīlam athāsya madhyam | raktam punaḥ sahyataraṁ sukhaṁ tu hārīdra-varṇam susu-khaṁ cha śuklam | parantu śuklam vimalaṁ viśokaṁ gata-klamaṁ siddhyati dānavendra | gatvā tu yoni-prabhavāṇi daitya sahasraśah siddhim upaiti jīvaḥ | 10060. . . . The next passage, from the Harivaṁśa, assigns to each of the four castes a separate origin, but at the same time gives an explanation of their diversity which differs from any that we have yet encountered : unless, indeed, any one is prepared to maintain that the four principles, out of which the castes are here represented to have arisen, are respectively identical with the mouth, arms, thighs, and feet of Brahmā ! This passage, however, corresponds with one of those already quoted in associating different colours with the several castes. The question with which the passage opens refers to an account which had been given in the preceding section (verses 11799 ff.) of the creation of

mans” (brahma-vaṁśa-kara) is applied. No mention is made there of Kshattriyas or any other castes. M. Langlois, the French translator of the Harivaṁśa, remarks that the distinction between the age of the Brāhmanas and that of the Kshattriyas is an unusual one, and receives no explanation in the context. But in two of the passages which have been quoted above (1) from the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, chapter 74 (p. 119), and (2) from the Bhīṣma-parva of the Mahābhārata, verses 393 ff. (p. 149), I think we find indications that the Kṛita Yuga was regarded as an age in which Brāhmins alone existed, and that Kshattriyas only began to be born in the Tretā.

Kshattriyas, with its numerous observances, illustrated as it was by sacrifices, and described as it has been by men skilled in the art of narration. Vaiśampāyana replied: 11810. I shall describe to you that age revered for its sacrifices and distinguished for its various works of liberality, as well as for its people. Those Munis of the size of a thumb had been absorbed by the sun's rays. Following a rule of life leading to final emancipation, practising unobstructed ceremonies, both in action and in abstinence from action constantly intent upon Brahma, united to Brahma as the highest object,—Brāhmins glorious and sanctified in their conduct, leading a life of continence, disciplined by the knowledge of Brahma,—Brāhmins complete in their observances, perfect in knowledge, and contemplative,—when at the end of a thousand yugas, their majesty was full, these Munis became involved in the dissolution of the world. 11815. Then Vishṇu sprung from Brahma, removed beyond the sphere of sense, absorbed in contemplation, became the Prajāpati Daksha, and formed numerous creatures. The Brāhmins, beautiful (or, dear to Soma),²⁷⁸ were formed from an imperishable (akshara), the Kshattriyas from a perishable (kshara), element, the Vaiśyas from alteration, the Sūdras from a modification of smoke. While Vishṇu was thinking upon the castes (varṇān), Brāhmins were formed with white, red, yellow, and blue colours (varṇaiḥ).²⁷⁹ Hence in the world men have become divided into castes, being of four descriptions, Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, one in form, distinct in their duties, two-footed, very wonderful, full of energy(?), skilled in expedients in all their occupations. 11820. Rites are declared to be prescribed by the Vedas for the three (highest) castes. By that contemplation practised by the being sprung from Brahma (see v. 11815)—by that practised in his character as Vishṇu,—the Lord Prāchetasa (Daksha), i.e. Vishṇu the great contemplator (yogin), passed through his wisdom and energy from that state of meditation into the sphere of works.²⁸⁰ Next the Sūdras, produced from extinction, are destitute of rites. Hence they are not entitled to be admitted to the purificatory ceremonies, nor does sacred science belong to them. Just as the cloud of smoke which rises from the fire on the friction of the fuel, and is dissipated, is of no service in the sacrificial rite, so too the Sūdras wandering over the earth, are altogether (useless for purposes of sacrifice) owing to their birth, their mode of life devoid of purity and their want of the observances prescribed in the Veda."

The next extract gives an account at variance with all that precedes, as it does not assign to all the Brāhmans themselves the same origin, but describes the various kinds of officiating priests as having been formed from different members of Viṣṇu's body :

Harivaṁśa, 11355. Evam ekāṇave bhūte śete loke mahādyutiḥ | prachhādyā salilāṁ sarvaṁ Harir Nārāyaṇaḥ prabhuḥ | mahato rajaso madhye mahārṇava-samasya vai | virajasko mahābūhur aksharam brāhmaṇā viduḥ | ātma-rūpa-prakāśena tapasā saṁvṛitaḥ prabhuḥ | trikam āchhādyā kālāṁ tu tataḥ sushvāpa sas tadā | puruṣho yajna ity evaṁ yat param parikīrtitam | yach chānyat puruṣākhyāṁ tu tat sarvaṁ puruṣottamaḥ | ye cha yajnaparā viprā ṛitvijā iti saṁjñitāḥ | ātma-dehāt purā bhūtā yajnebhyaḥ śrūyatām tadā | 11360. Brahmāṇam paramaṁ vaktrād udgātāraṁ cha sūma-gāṁ | hotāraṁ atha chādhvaryuṁ bāhubhyām asṛijāt prabhuḥ | brāhmāṇo brāhmaṇatvāch cha prastotāraṁ cha sarvaśaḥ | tam maitravaruṇam sṛishṭvā pratishṭhātāraṁ eva cha | udarāt pratiharttāraṁ potāraṁ chaiva Bhārata | achhāvākam atherubhyām neshṭāraṁ chaiva Bhārata | pāṇibhyām athachāgnīdhram brahmaṇyaṁ chaiva yajñiyam | grāvāṇam atha bāhubhyām unnetāraṁ cha yājñikam | evam eraisha bhagavān shoḍaśaitān jagatpatiḥ | pravaktrīn sarva-yajñānām ṛitvijo 'sṛijāt uttamān | tad esha vai yajnamayaḥ puruṣho veda-saṁjñitaḥ | vedūś cha tanmayūḥ sarve sūngopanishada-kriyāḥ |

Vaisampāyana said : 1135. "Thus the glorious Lord Hari Nārāyaṇa, covering the entire waters, slept on (the world) which had become one sea, in the midst of the vast expanse of fluid²⁵¹ (rajas), resembling a mighty ocean, himself free from passion (virajaskaḥ), with mighty arms.—Brāhmans know him as the undecaying. Invested through austere fervour with the light of his own form, and clothed with triple time (past, present, and future), the Lord then slept. Puruṣottama

²⁵¹ Rajas is said in two places of the Nirukta, iv. 19, and x. 44, to have the sense of "water."

(Vishṇu) is whatever is declared to be the highest, Purusha the sacrifice, and everything else which is known by the name of Purusha. Hear how the Brāhman devoted to sacrifice, and called ṛitvījes, were formerly produced by him from his own body for offering sacrifices. 11360. The Lord created from his mouth the brāhman, who is the chief, and the udgātri, who chaunts the Sāman; from his arms the hotri and the adhvaryu. He then . . . ²⁸² created the prastotri, the maitrāvaruṇa, and the pratishthātri; from his belly the pratiharttri and the potri, from his thighs the achhāvāka and the neshtri, from his hands the agnīdhra and the sacrificial brahmaṇya, from his arms the grāvan and the sacrificial unnetri. Thus did the divine Lord of the world create these sixteen excellent ṛitvījes, the utterers of all sacrifices. Therefore this Purusha is formed of sacrifice and is called the Veda; and all the Vedas with the Vedāngas, Upanishads, and ceremonies, are formed of his essence."

SECT. XII.—Extracts from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa on the same subject.

I will conclude my quotations from the Purāṇas on the subject of the origin of mankind and of castes with a few passages from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. The first extract reproduces some of the ideas of the Purusha Sūkta²⁸³ more closely than any of the Puranic accounts yet given.

ii. 5, 34. Varsha-pūga-sahasrānte tad aṇḍam udake śayam | kāla-karma-svabhāva-stho jīvo 'jīvam ajīvayat | 35. Sa eva Purushas tasmād aṇḍam nirbhedyā nirgataḥ | sahasrorv-anghri-bāhū-akṣaḥ sahasrānana-śrīrshavān | 36. Yasyeḥāvayavair lokān kalpayanti manīṣiṇaḥ | kaṭy-

²⁸² I am unable to make a proper sense out of the words brahmaṇo brāhmaṇatvāch cha, which, however, as I learn from Dr. FitzEdward Hall, are found (with only a difference of long and short vowels) in the best MSS. to which he has access, as well as in the Bombay edition. One of the sixteen priests, the Brāhmanāchhaṁsin, is not found in the enumeration, and his name may therefore have stood at the beginning of the line. Instead of the inept reading sarvasaḥ, at the end, the author may perhaps have written vakṣasaḥ, "from his chest," as, indeed, one MS. reads in the next line. The Bombay edition reads prishthāt, "from the back," instead of śrīṣṭvā.

ādibhir adhaḥ sapta saptordhvaṃ jaghanādibhiḥ | 37. Purushasya mukham brahma kshatram etasya bāhavaḥ | ūrvor vaiśyo bhagavataḥ padbhyāṃ śūdro vyajāyata | 38. Bhūlokaḥ kalpitah padbhyām bhūvarloko 'sya nābhitaḥ | hṛidā svarloka urasā maharloko mahātmanaḥ |

“34. At the end of many thousand years the living soul which resides in time, action, and natural quality gave life to that lifeless egg floating on the water. 35. Purusha then having burst the egg, issued from it with a thousand thighs, feet, arms, eyes, faces, and heads. 36. With his members the sages fashion the worlds, the seven lower worlds with his loins, etc., and the seven upper worlds with his groin, etc. 37. The Brāhman (was) the mouth of Purusha, the Kshattriya his arms, the Vaiśya was born from the thighs, the Śūdra from the feet of the divine being. The earth was formed from his feet, the air from his navel; the heaven by the heart, and the maharloka by the breast of the mighty one.”

ii. 1, 37. Brahmānanaṃ kshattra-bhujo mahātmā viḍ-ūrur anghri-śṛita-kṛishṇa-varṇaḥ |

“The Brāhman is his mouth; he is Kshattriya-armed, that great One, Vaiśya-thighed, and has the black caste abiding in his feet.”

The next passage is more in accord with the ordinary representation, though here, too, the mystical view is introduced at the close :

iii. 22, 2. Brahmā 'srijat sva-mukhato yushmān ātma-purīṣayā | chhandomayas tapo-vidyā-yoga-yuktān alampatūn | 3. Tat-trūṇyā-srijach chūsmān doḥ-sahasrāt sahasra-pāt | hṛidayam tasya hi brahma kshatram angam prachakshate |

“Brahmā, who is formed of the Veda (chhandas), with a view to the recognition of himself, created you (the Brāhmans) who are characterized by austere fervour, science, devotion and chastity, from his mouth. For their protection he, the thousand-footed, created us (the Kshattriyas) from his thousand arms: for they declare the Brāhman to be his heart, and the Kshattriya his body.”

iii. 6, 29 ff. contains another reference to the production of the castes :

29. Mukhato 'varttata brahma Purushasya Kurādvaha | yastūn-mukhatoḍḍ varṇānām mukhyo 'bhūd brāhmaṇo guruḥ | 30. Bāhubhyo 'varttata kshattram kshattriyas tad-anuvrataḥ | yo jūtas trāyate varṇān

paurushaḥ kaṇṭaka-kshatāt | 31. Viśo 'varttanta tasyorvor loka-vṛttikarīr vibhoḥ | vaiśyas tad-udbhavo vārttām nṛṇām yaḥ samavarttayāt | 32. Padbhyām bhagavato jajñe śuśrūṣhā dharma-siddhaye | tasyām jātāḥ purā śūdro yad-vṛittyā tushyate Hariḥ | 33. Ete varṇāḥ sva-dharmena yajanti sva-guruṁ Hariṁ | śraddhayā 'tma-viśuddhyartham yaj jātūḥ saha vṛttibhiḥ |

"29. From the mouth of Purusha, o descendant of Kuru, issued divine knowledge (brahma), and the Brāhman, who through his production from the mouth became the chief of the castes and the preceptor. 30. From his arms issued kingly power (kshattra), and the Kshattriya devoted to that function, who, springing from Purusha, as soon as born defends the castes from the injury of enemies. 31. From the thighs of the Lord issued the arts,²³⁴ affording subsistence to the world; and from them was produced the Vaiśya who provided the maintenance of mankind. 32. From the feet of the divine Being sprang service for the fulfilment of duty. In it the Sūdra was formerly born, with whose function Hari is well satisfied. By fulfilling their own duties, with faith, for the purification of their souls, these castes worship Hari their parent, from whom they have sprung together with their functions."

In viii. 5, 41, we find the following:

Vipro mukhād brahma cha yasya guhyaṁ rājanya āsīd bhujayor balaṁ cha | ūrvor viḍ oja 'ngirir aveda-śūdrau prasīdatām naḥ sa mahāvibhūtiḥ |

"May that Being of great glory be gracious to us, from whose mouth sprang the Brāhman and the mysterious Veda, from whose arms came the Rājanya and force, from whose thighs issued the Viś and energy, and whose foot is no-veda (aveda) and the Sūdra."

The same work gives the following very brief account of the Arvāk-srotas creation, which is described with somewhat more detail in the passages extracted above from the Vishṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas:

iii. 20, 25. Arvāk-srotas tu navamaḥ kshattar eka-vidho nṛṇām | rajo 'dhikāḥ karma-parāḥ duḥkhe cha sukha-mūlināḥ |

²³⁴ The word so rendered is viśaḥ, which in the hymns of the Rig-veda has always the sense of "people." Here, however, it seems to have the sense assigned in the text, if one may judge from the analogy of the following verse, in which the Sūdra is said to be produced from his special function, śuśrūṣhā, "service." The Commentator explains viśaḥ = kṛishy-ādī-vyavasāyāḥ, "the professions of agriculture," etc.

"The Arvaksrotas creation was of one description,²⁸⁵ viz., of men, in whom the quality of passion abounded, who were addicted to works, and imagined that in pain they experienced pleasure."

In vi. 6, 40, a new account is given of the origin of mankind. We are there told :

Aryamṇo Mātṛikā patnī tayoś Charṣanayaḥ sutāḥ | yatra vai mānushī jātir Brahmanū chopakalpita |

"The wife of Aryaman (the son of Aditi) was Mātṛikā. The Charṣanis were the sons of this pair, and among them the race of men was formed by Brahmā." The word charṣaṇi signifies "men," or "people" in the Veda.

In the following verse (which forms part of the legend of Purūravas, quoted in the 3rd vol. of this work, pp. 27 ff.) it is declared that in the Kṛita age there was only one caste :

ix. 14, 48. Eka eva purū vedaḥ pranavaḥ sarva-vūṇmayaḥ | devo Nārāyaṇo nānya eko 'gnir varṇa eva cha | Purūravasa evāsīt trayī tretā-mukhe nṛipa |

"There was formerly but one Veda, the pranava (the monosyllable Om), the essence of all speech ; only one god, Nārāyaṇa, one Agni, and (one) caste. From Purūravas came the triple Veda, in the beginning of the Tretā."

Some of the Commentator's remarks on this text will be found in vol. iii. p. 29. He says the one caste was called "Hansa" (varṇas cha eka eva haṁso nāma), and concludes his note by remarking : "The meaning is this : In the Kṛita age when the quality of goodness predominated in men, they were almost all absorbed in meditation ; but in the Tretā, when passion prevailed, the method of works was manifested by the division of the Vedas, etc."

²⁸⁵ The Sāṅkhya Kārikā, 53, says : aṣṭa-vikalpo daivas tairgygonyas cha panchadhā bhavati mānushyas chaika-vidhaḥ samāsato bhautikaḥ sargaḥ ; which is thus translated by Mr. Colebrooke (in Wilson's Sāṅkhya Kārikā, p. 164) : "The divine kind is of eight sorts ; the grovelling is five-fold ; mankind is single in its class. This, briefly, is the world of living beings." The Commentator Gaudapāda shortly explains the words mānushyas chaikavidhaḥ by mānushayonir ekaiwa, "the source of production of mankind is one only." Vijnāna Bhikṣhu, the Commentator on the Sāṅkhya Pravachana, iii. 46, paraphrases the same words thus, mānushya-sargaḥ chaika-prakāraḥ, "the human creation is of one sort."

SECT. XIII.—Results of this Chapter.

The details which I have supplied in the course of this chapter must have rendered it abundantly evident that the sacred books of the Hindus contain no uniform or consistent account of the origin of castes; but, on the contrary, present the greatest varieties of speculation on this subject. Explanations mystical, mythical, and rationalistic, are all offered in turn; and the freest scope is given by the individual writers to fanciful and arbitrary conjecture.

First: we have the set of accounts in which the four castes are said to have sprung from progenitors who were separately created; but in regard to the manner of their creation we find the greatest diversity of statement. The most common story is that the castes issued from the mouth, arms, thighs, and feet of Purusha, or Brahmā. The oldest extant passage in which this idea occurs, and from which all the later myths of a similar tenor have no doubt been borrowed, is, as we have seen, to be found in the Purusha Sūkta; but it is doubtful whether, in the form in which it is there presented, this representation is anything more than an allegory. In some of the texts which I have quoted from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, traces of the same allegorical character may be perceived; but in Manu and the Puranas the mystical import of the Vedic text disappears, and the figurative narration is hardened into a literal statement of fact. In other passages, where a separate origin is assigned to the castes, they are variously said to have sprung from the words Bhūh, Bhuvah, Svah; from different Vedas; from different sets of prayers; from the gods, and the asuras; from nonentity (pp. 17–21), and from the imperishable, the perishable, and other principles (Harivamśa, 11816). In the chapters of the Vishṇu, Vāyu, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, where castes are described as coeval with the creation, and as having been naturally distinguished by different guṇas, or qualities, involving varieties of moral character, we are nevertheless allowed to infer that those qualities exerted no influence on the classes in whom they were inherent, as the condition of the whole race during the Kṛita age is described as one of uniform perfection and happiness; while the actual separation into castes did not take place, according to the Vāyu Purāṇa, until men had become deteriorated in the Tretā age.

Second: in various passages from the Brāhmanas, Epic poems, and Puranas, the creation of mankind is, as we have seen, described without the least allusion to any separate production of the progenitors of the four castes (pp. 23–27, and elsewhere). And whilst in the chapters where they relate the distinct formation of the castes, the Puranas, as has been observed, assign different natural dispositions to each class, they elsewhere represent all mankind as being at the creation uniformly distinguished by the quality of passion. In one of the texts I have quoted (p. 26 f.) men are said to be the offspring of Vivasvat; in another his son Manu is said to be their progenitor; whilst in a third they are said to be descended from a female of the same name. The passage which declares Manu to have been the father of the human race explicitly affirms that men of all the four castes were descended from him. In another remarkable text the Mahābhārata categorically asserts that originally there was no distinction of classes, the existing distribution having arisen out of differences of character and occupation. Similarly, the Bhāgavata Purāṇa in one place informs us that in the Kṛita age there was but one caste; and this view appears also to be taken in some passages which I have adduced from the Epic poems.

In these circumstances we may fairly conclude that the separate origination of the four castes was far from being an article of belief universally received by Indian antiquity.

I shall now proceed to enquire what opinion the writers of the older Vedic hymns appear to have entertained in regard to the origin of the race to which they themselves belonged.

CHAPTER II.

TRADITION OF THE DESCENT OF THE INDIAN RACE FROM MANU.¹

It appears from the considerations urged in the preceding chapter that in all probability the Purusha Sūkta belongs to the most recent portion of the Rig-veda Sanhitā, and that it is at least doubtful whether the verse in which it connects the four castes with the different members of the creator's body is not allegorical. And we have seen that even if that representation is to be taken as a literal account of the creation of the different classes, it cannot, in the face of many other statements of a different tenor, and of great antiquity, be regarded as expressing the fixed belief of the writers of the period immediately succeeding the collection of the hymns in regard to the origin of the social divisions which prevailed in their own time. But the notions entertained of the origin of caste at the date of the Purusha Sūkta, whatever they may have been, will afford no criterion of the state of opinion on the same subject in an earlier age; and it therefore remains to enquire whether those hymns of the Rig-veda, which appear to be the most ancient, contain either (1) any tradition regarding the origin of mankind, or of the Indian tribes; or (2) any allusion to the existence, in the community contemporary with their composition, of separate classes corresponding to those afterwards known as Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and S'ūdras; and if they embrace any reference of the latter kind, whether they afford any explanation of the manner in which these orders of men came to occupy their respective positions in society. We shall find on examination that the hymns supply some information on both these branches of enquiry.

Numerous references are undoubtedly to be found in all parts of the hymn-collection to a variety of ranks, classes, and professions; of which an account will be given in the next chapter; but no hint is anywhere discoverable, except in the single text of the Purusha Sūkta, of those classes being distinguished from each other by any original difference of race. If, however, the early Vedic Indians had all along believed in the quadruple production of their nation from the different members of Purusha, one might naturally have expected to find allusions to such a variety of birth running through the hymns. But nothing, I repeat, of this kind is to be traced. On the contrary it appears from a considerable number of passages that at least the superior ranks of the community were regarded as being of one stock, the Aryan, and as having one common ancestor. This chapter will therefore embrace, First, the texts which are found in the hymns regarding the origin of the Indian tribes, and the history of their progenitor, and Secondly those passages which occur in the Brāhmaṇas, and other later works in which the statements of the early Vedic poets on these subjects are re-echoed or developed.

SECT. I.—Manu as the progenitor of the Aryan Indians and the institutor of religious rites according to the Hymns of the Rig-veda.

In this section I shall first quote the texts which allude to Manu as father (which must of course be understood to designate him as the actual human progenitor of the authors of the hymns, and of the bulk of the people to whom they addressed themselves); and then adduce those which speak of him as the institutor of religious rites, or as the object of divine protection.

(1) The following texts are of the first class :

i. 80, 16. Yām Atharvā Manush pitā Dadhyañ dhiyam atnata | tasmin brahmāṇi pūrvathā Indre ukthā samagmata |

“Prayers and hymns were formerly congregated in that Indra, in the ceremony which Atharvan, father Manu, and Dadhyanch celebrated.”²

“Whatever prosperity or succour father Manu obtained by sacrifice, may we gain all that under thy guidance, O Rudra.”

ii. 33, 13. Yā vo bhesajā Marutaḥ śukhīni yā śantamā vṛishaṇo yā mayobhū | yāni Manur avṛiṇīta pitā naḥ tā śaṁ cha yoś cha Rudrasya vaśmi |

“Those pure remedies of yours, O Maruts, those which are most auspicious, ye vigorous gods, those which are beneficent, those which our³ father Manu chose, those, and the blessing and succour of Rudra, I desire.”

viii. 52, 1 (Sāma-veda, i. 355). Sa pūrvyo mahānām veno kratubhīr ānaje | yasya dvārā Manuḥ pitā deveshu dhiyaḥ ānaje |

“That ancient friend hath been equipped with the powers of the mighty (gods). Father Manu has prepared hymns to him, as portals of access to the gods.”⁴

“father Manu,” are explained as meaning Manuścha pitā mīnavānām, “Manu the father of men.” Sāyana, the Commentator on the Rig-veda, interprets them as meaning sarvāsām prajānām pitṛibhūto Manuścha, “Manu the father of all creatures.” In R.V., x. 82, 3, the words “our father and generator” (yo naḥ pitā janitā), are applied to Visvakarman, the creator of the universe. The word “father” in the R.V. is often applied to Dyaus, the Sky, and “mother” to the Earth, as in vi. 51 5. (Compare Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1864, pp. 55 ff.) But in these passages it is not necessary to suppose that the words are employed in any other than a figurative sense; although in a hymn to the Earth in the Atharva-veda, xii. 1, we find the following verse (the 15th): Trajāntas trayi charanti martyās tvam bibharshi dvipadas tvam chatuspadaḥ | tavame prithivi pancha-mānūvāḥ yebhyo jyotir amṛitam martyebhyaḥ udyan sūryo rasmibhīr ātanoti | “Mortals born of thee live on thee: thou supportest both bipeds and quadrupeds. Thine, o Earth, are these five races of men, these mortals on whom the sun rising, sheds undying light with his rays;”—where it might almost appear as if the poet meant to represent mankind as actually generated by the earth. Brihaspati (iv. 50, 6; vi. 73, 1) and the other gods, as Indra, are called “father,” or compared to fathers (vii. 52, 3); as are Rudra, vi. 49, 10; and the Rishi, R.V., x. 81, 1; x. 82, 1, 3, 4. S’ P. Br., i. 5, 3, 2, has Prajāpatau pitari; and Taitt. Br. iii. 9, 22, 1, Prajāpatim pitaram. In both the last places Prajāpati is referred to as the father of the gods.

The sense of the next text is less clear, but it appears at least to allude to the common designation of Manu as a father:

x. 100, 5. Yajno Manuḥ pramatir naḥ pitā hi kam |

"Sacrifice is Manu, our protecting father."

The following verse, according to the Commentator at least, speaks of the paternal or ancestral path of Manu. Professor Aufrecht thinks it need not mean more than the ancestral human path:

viii. 30. 3. Te nas trādhvam te avata te u no adhi rochata | mā naḥ pathaḥ pitryād mānavād adhi dūram naiṣṭa parāvataḥ |

"Do ye (gods) deliver, protect, and intercede for us; do not lead us far away from the paternal path of Manu."⁶

As in the preceding passages Manu is spoken of as the progenitor of the worshippers, so in the following the same persons may perhaps be spoken of as his descendants, although it is also true that the phrases employed may be merely equivalent to "children of men."

i. 68, 4. Hotā nishatto Manor apatyē sa chit nu āsām patiḥ rayinūm |

"He (Agni) who abides among the offspring of Manu as the invoker (of the gods), is even the lord of these riches."⁶

karmā | "This chief one, in consequence of the rites of the venerable sacrificers, desiring their oblation, comes,—he (Indra) as means of attaining whom Manu the preserver of all has obtained rites among these gods." Professor Benfey renders the verse, where it occurs in the Sāma-veda, thus: "He is the chief of the rich, through works the dear one enlightens him, whose doors father Manu has, and illuminates observances towards the gods." From Prof. Benfey's note to the passage (p. 230) it appears that the Commentator on the Sāma-veda explains ānaje by vyaktīkaroti ātmānam, "makes himself distinct" (herein differing from Sāyana), Manu by jñātā sarvasya = Indraḥ, "the knower of all, Indra," and ānaje, where it occurs the second time, by ūgamayati, "causes to come." Such are the differences of opinion regarding the interpretation of some parts of the hymns.

iii. 3, 6. *Agnir devebhir manushāscha jantubhis tanvāno yajnam puru-
peśasam dhiyā |*

“Agni, together with the gods, and the children (jantubhiḥ) of Manush, celebrating a multiform sacrifice with hymns,” etc.

In the following texts reference is made to the people of Manu, the word for “people” being viś, from which vaiśya, “a man of the people,” is derived:

iv. 37, 1. *Upa no Vājāḥ adhvaram Ribhukshāḥ devāḥ yāta pathibhir devayānaiḥ | yathā yajnam manusho vikshu āsu dadhidre ranvāḥ sudine-
shu ahnām |*

“Ye gods, Vājas, and Ribhukshans, come to our sacrifice by the path travelled by the gods, that ye, pleasing deities, may institute a sacrifice among these people of Manush (Manusho vikshu) on auspicious days.”

vi. 14, 2. Agnim hotāram īlate yajneshu manusho viśaḥ |

“The people of Manush praise in the sacrifices Agni the invoker.”

viii. 23, 13. *Yad vai ā viśpatiḥ śitaḥ supṛito manusho viśi | viśvā id
Agniḥ prati rakshāṁsi sedhati |*

“Whenever Agni, lord of the people,⁷ kindled, abides gratified among the people of Manush, he repels all Rakshases.”

(2.) From the preceding texts it appears that the authors of the hymns regarded Manu as the progenitor of their race. But (as is clear from many other passages) they also looked upon him as the first person by whom the sacrificial fire had been kindled, and as the institutor of the ceremonial of worship; though the tradition is not always consistent on this subject. In one of the verses already quoted (i. 80, 16) Manu is mentioned in this way, along with Atharvan and iti hi brāhmaṇam). Yūska (Nir. iii. 7) gives the following derivations of the word manushya, “man:” Manushyāḥ kasmāt | matvā karmāṁsi sivyanti | manasyamānena spṛiṣṭāḥ . . . | Manor apatyam Manusho vā | “From what are men (named)? Because after reflection they sew together works; (or) because they were created by one who reflected (or, according to Durga, “rejoiced”) . . . (or) because they are the offspring of Manu, or Manush.”

⁷ Viśpati. Compare vi. 48, 8, where it is said: viśvāsām gṛihapatiḥ viśām asi tvam Agne mātushīnam | “Agni, thou art the master of the house of all human people (or, people sprung from Manush);” and x. 80, 6, Agnim viśaḥ īlate mānushīr yāḥ Agnim Manusho Nahusho vi jātāḥ | “Human people (or, people descended from Manush) praise Agni: (people) sprung from Manush, from Nahush, (praise) Agni.” Or if manushaḥ be the nom. plur. the last clause will run thus. “men sprung from Nahush (praise) Agni.”

Dadhychan, as having celebrated religious rites in ancient times. The following further passages refer to him as a kindler of fire, and offerer of oblations :

i. 36, 19. Ni tvām Agne Manur dadhe jyotir janēya śasvate |

“Manu has placed (or ordained) thee, Agni, a light to all the people.”

i. 76, 5. Yathā viprasya Manusho havirbhīr devān ayajāḥ kavibhiḥ kariḥ san | eva hotaḥ satyatara tram adya Agne māndrayā juhvā yajasva |

“As thou, thyself a sage, didst, with the sages, worship the gods with the oblations of the wise Manush, so to-day, Agni, most true invoker, worship them with a cheerful flame.”

v. 45, 6. *Ā ita dhiyam kṛṇavāma sakhūyah . . . yāyā Manur Viśi-

“Come, friends, let us perform the prayer . . . whereby Manu conquered Viśiśipra . . .

viii. 10. 2. Yad vā yajnam Manave sammimikshathur eva it Kāṇvasya bodhatam |

“Or if ye (Aśvins) sprinkled the sacrifice for Manu, think in like manner of the descendant of Kanva.”

ix. 96, 11. Tvayā hi naḥ pitarah Soma pūrve karmāni chakruḥ paramāna dhīrah | . . . 12. Yathā apavathāḥ Manave vayodhāḥ amitrahā varivovid havishmān | eva pavasva . . .

“For through thee, O pure Soma, our early fathers, who were wise, performed their rites . . . 12. As thou didst flow clear for Manu, thou upholder of life, destroyer of foes, possessor of wealth, rich in oblations, so (now) flow clear.” . . .

x. 63, 7. Yebhyo hotrām prathamām āyeje Manuḥ samiddhāgnir manasā supta hotṛibhiḥ | tā Ādityā abhayam śarma yachhata . . .

“O ye Ādityas, to whom Manu, when he had kindled fire, presented along with seven hotṛi priests the first oblation with a prayer, bestow on us secure protection.”

x. 69, 3. “Yat te Manur yad anīkam Sumitrah samīdhe Agne tad idam navīyah”^s |

^s The S’atapatha Brāhmaṇa (i. 4, 2, 5) thus explains the words deveddho Manvid-dhah :—Manviddhah iti | Manur hy etam agre ainddha | tasmād āha “Manviddhah” iti | “The gods formerly kindled it (fire) : hence it is called ‘god-kindled.’ Manu formerly kindled it : and hence it is called ‘kindled by Manu.’” The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (ii. 34), however, explains the word Manv-iddhah from the fact that “men kindle it” (īmam hi manushyū indhate).

"That lustre of thine which Manu, which Sumitra, kindled is this same which is now renewed."

In conformity with the preceding texts, the following may be understood as declaring that the sacrificial fire had been first kindled by Manu :

i. 13, 4 (= S.V. ii. 700). Agne sukhatame rathe devān iṭitaḥ ā vaha | asi hotā Manurhitaḥ |

"O Agni, lauded, bring the gods hither in a most pleasant chariot. Thou art the invoker (of the gods) placed by Manush." ⁹

i. 14, 11. Tram hotā Manurhito 'gne yajneshu sīdasi | saḥ imam no adhvaram yaja |

"Thou, Agni, the invoker placed by Manush, art present at the sacrifices: do thou present this our oblation." (See also R.V. iii. 2, 15.)

vi. 16, 9. Tram hotā Manurhitaḥ

"Thou art the invoker placed by Manush"

viii. 19, 21. Īḷe girā Manurhitam yam devā dūtam aratim ni erire | yajishṭham harya-vāhanam |

"With a hymn I laud that adorable bearer of oblations placed by Manush,¹⁰ whom the gods have sent as a ministering messenger."

⁹ The compound word which I have here rendered "placed by Manush" is in the original Manur-hita. Professor Aufrecht would render it "given to man," and quotes i. 36, 10, in support of this view. The sense I have given is supported by i. 36, 19, where the same root, dhā, from which hita (originally dhita) comes, is used, joined with the particle nī. The same participle hita is used in vi. 16; 1, where it is said: Tram Agne yajmānām hotā sarveshām hitaḥ | devebhir mānusha jane | "Thou, Agni, hast been placed, or ordained, among the race of Manush by the gods as the invoker at all sacrifices." The fact that Agni is here said to have been placed by the gods among the race of Manush does not forbid us to suppose that there are other passages in which, either inconsistently, or from a different point of view, Agni may have been said to be placed by Manu. The compound manur-hita occurs also in the following texts, where, however, it has probably the sense of "good for man," viz.: i. 106, 5. Brihaspate sadam id naḥ sugaṁ kṛdhi sām yor yat te manur-hitam tad īmahe | "Brihaspati, do us always good: we desire that blessing and protection of thine which is good for man." (Sāyana says that here manur-hitam means either 'placed in thee by Manu, i.e., Brahmā,' or, "favourable to man." Benfey, in loco, renders "destined for man.") vi. 70, 2. Rājantī asya bhuvanasya rodasī asme retāḥ sinchataṁ yad manur-hitam | "Heaven and earth, ruling over this world, drop on us that seed which is good for man." x. 26, 5. Rishih sa yo manur-hitaḥ | "He (Pūshan) who is a rishi kind to man," etc. Professor Roth s.v. gives only the latter sense.

viii. 34, 8. Ā tvā hotā Manurhito devatrā vakshad īdyaḥ |

"May the adorable invoker placed by Manu bring thee (Indra) hither among the gods," etc.

There is also a class of passages in which the example of Manush may be referred to by the phrase manush-vat, "like Manush," or, "as in the case of Manush."¹¹ Thus in i. 44, 11, it is said :

Ni tvā yajnasya sādhanam Agne hotāram ṛitvijam manushvad deva dhīmahi |

"Divine Agni, we, like Manush, place thee, the accomplisher of the sacrifice, the invoker, the priest," etc.

v. 21, 1. Manushvat tvā ni dhīmahi Manushvat sam idhīmahi | Agne Manushvad Angiro devān devayate yaja |

"Agni, we place thee like Manush, we kindle thee like Manush. Agni, Angiras, worship the gods like Manush, for him who adores them."

vii. 2, 3. Manushvad Agnim Manunū samiddham sam adhvārāya sadam in mahema |

"Let us, like Manush, continually invoke to the sacrifice Agni who was kindled by Manu."

viii. 27, 7. Suta-somāso Varuṇa havāmahe Manushvad iddhāgnayaḥ |

"We invoke thee, Varuṇa, having poured out soma, and having kindled fire, like Manush."

viii. 43, 13. Uta tvā Bhṛiguṇat śuche Manushvad Agne āhuta | Angirasvad havāmahe | 27. Yam tvā janāsa indhate Manushvad Angirastama | Agne sa bodhi me vacaḥ |

"Like Bhṛigu, like Manush, like Angiras, we invoke thee, bright Agni, who hast been invoked. . . . 27. Agni, most like to Angiras, whom men kindle like Manush, attend to my words."

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 5, 1, 7, explains thus the word Manush-vat :¹²—Manur ha vai agre yajnena ṛje | tad anukṛitya imāḥ prajāḥ ya-

¹² The same work in the same passage thus explains the phrase Bharata-vat. "He bears (bharati) the oblation to the gods ; wherefore men say, Bharata (or 'the bearer') is Agni. Or, he is called Bharata (the 'sustainer') because, being breath, he sustains these creatures." This phrase may, however, refer to the example of King Bharata. See Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 5, 4, 14.

janto | tasmād āha “Manush-vad” iti | “Manor yajnaḥ” iti u vai ākuḥ | tasmād vā iva āhur “Manushvad” iti | “Manu formerly sacrificed with a sacrifice. Imitating this, these creatures sacrifice. He therefore says, Manushvat, ‘like Manu.’ Or, they say ‘like Manu,’ because men speak of the sacrifice as being Manu’s.”

It must, however, be admitted that Manu is not always spoken of in the hymns of the first, or only, kindler of fire or celebrator of religious rites. In i. 80, 16, already quoted, Atharvan and Dadhyanch are specified along with him as having offered sacrifice in early times.

In the following verses Atharvan is mentioned as having generated fire :

vi. 16, 13. Imam tu tyam Atharva-vad Agnim mathanti vedhasaḥ |

“The wise draw forth this Agni, as Atharvan did.”

vi. 16, 13 (= S. V. i. 9; Vāj. Sanh. xi. 32). Trām Agne pushkarād adhy Atharvā nir amanthata . . . | 14. Tam u tvā Dadhyaññ rishiḥ putraḥ idhe Atharvanaḥ |

“Agni, Atharvan drew thee forth from the lotus leaf,” etc. 14. “Thee the rishi Dadhyanch, son of Atharvan, kindled,” etc.

[In the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, the first of these verses is immediately preceded by the following words (xi. 32): Atharvā tvā prathamō nir amanthad Agne | “Atharvan was the first who drew thee forth, Agni.”]

Again it is said in the Rig-veda, x. 21, 5. Agnir jāto Atharvanā vidad viśvāni kāryā | bhuvad dūto Vivasrataḥ | “Agni, produced by Atharvan, knows all wisdom, and has become the messenger of Vivasvat.”

In i. 83, 5, Atharvan is mentioned as the earliest institutor of sacrifice: Yajnair Atharvā prathamāḥ pathas tate tataḥ sūryo vratapāḥ venāḥ ājani | “Atharvan was the first who by sacrifices opened up paths; then the friendly Sun, the upholder of ordinances, was produced,” etc.: so too in x. 92, 10. Yajnair Atharvā prathamō vi dhārayad devā dakshair Bhṛigavaḥ sam chikitrire | “Atharvan, the first, established (all things) with sacrifices. The divine Bhṛigus co-operated with their powers.”¹³

¹³ These two texts might, though not very probably, be understood to mean not that Atharvan was the first to employ sacrifice, but to use it for the purpose referred to in the context.

The next texts speak of the Bhrigus as the institutors of sacrifice by fire :

i. 58, 6. Dadhur tvā Bhrigavo mānusheshv ā rayim na chārum suhavam janebhyah | hotāram Agne |

"The Bhrigus have placed thee, o Agni, among men, as an invoker, like a beautiful treasure, and easily invoked for men," etc.

ii. 4, 2. Imam vidhanto apām sadasthe dvitā adadhur Bhrigavo vikshu Āyoh |

"Worshipping him (Agni) in the receptacle of waters, the Bhrigus placed him among the people of Āyu."

x. 46, 2. Imam vidhanto apām sadasthe paśum na nashtam padair anugman | guhā chatantam usijo namobhir ichhanto dhīrā Bhrigavo avindan |

"Worshipping him in the receptacle of waters, and desiring him with prostrations, the wise and longing Bhrigus followed him with their steps, like a beast who had been lost, and found him lurking in concealment" ¹⁴ (i. 65, 1).

In other places, the gods, as well as different sages, are mentioned as introducing or practising worship by fire, or as bringing down the sacred flame from heaven :

i. 36, 10. Yam tvā devāso manave dadhur iha yajishtham havyavāhana | yam Kanva Medhyātithir dhanaspritam yam Vrishā yam Upastutaḥ |

"Thou, o bearer of oblations, whom the gods placed here as an object of adoration to man (or Manu); whom Kanva, whom Medhyātithi, whom Vrishan, whom Upastuta (have placed) a bringer of wealth," etc. Compare vi. 16, 1, quoted above, p. 167, note 9.

iii. 5, 10. Yadī Bhrigubhyah pari Mātariśvā guhā santañ havyavāham samidhe |

"When Mātariśvan kindled for the Bhrigus Agni, the bearer of oblations, who was in concealment."

x. 46, 9. Dyāvā yam Agnim prithivī janishthām āpas Tvashtā Bhrigavo yam sahoḅhiḥ | īlenyam prathamam Mātariśvā devās tatakshur manave yajatram |

"Mātariśvan and the gods have made, as the first adorable object of worship to man (or Manu), that Agni whom heaven and earth, whom the waters, whom Tvashtṛi, whom the Bhṛigus, have generated by their powers."

¹⁴ In the following passages also the Bhrigus are mentioned as connected with the worship of Agni: i. 71, 4; i. 127, 7; i. 143, 4; iii. 2, 4; iv. 7, 1; vi. 15, 2; viii. 43, 13; viii. 91, 4; x. 122, 5.

In the 8th verse the Āyus, and in the 10th the gods, as well as men, are said to have placed Agni.

In i. 60, 1 ; i. 93, 6 ; i. 148, 1 ; iii. 2, 13 ; iii. 5, 10 ; iii. 9, 5 ; vi. 8, 4, Mātariśvan is again spoken of as the bringer or generator of fire. (Compare note 1, in p. 416, of my article "On Manu the progenitor of the Āryan Indians," in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xx. for 1863.)

But to return to Manu. Although the distinction of having been the first to kindle fire is thus, in various passages, ascribed to Atharvan or the Bhṛigus, this does not disprove the fact that in other places, it is, somewhat inconsistently, assigned to Manu ; and none of these other personages is ever brought forward as disputing with Manu the honour of having been the progenitor of the Aryan race. In this respect the Vedic tradition exhibits no variation, except that Yama also seems in some places to be represented as the first man. (See my article in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, for 1865, pp. 287 ff., and especially the words of the Atharva-veda, xviii. 3, 14. Yo mamāra prathamō marttyānām | "Who (Yama) died first of men.")

(III.) The following passages describe Manu as being the object of special favour or intervention on the part of some of the gods :

i. 112, 16. Yābhir narā Sayave yābhir Atraye yābhiḥ purā Manave gātum īshathuḥ | yābhiḥ śārīr ājatam Syūmaraśmaye tābhir u shu ūtibhir Aśvinā gatam | 18. . . . Yabhir Manum śūram īshā samāvataṁ |

"Come, Aśvins, with those succours, whereby, o heroes, ye effected deliverance for Sayu, for Atri, and formerly for Manu, whereby ye shot arrows for Syūmaraśmi. 18. . . . whereby ye preserved the hero Manu with food."¹⁵

viii. 15, 5. Yena jyotīṁshi Āyave Manave cha riveditha | mandāno asya barhiṣho vi rājasi |

"Exulting in this (exhilaration), wherewith thou didst make known the luminaries to Āyu, and to Manu, thou art lord of the sacrificial grass."

¹⁵ This passage, as far as it concerns Manu, is thus explained by Sāyaṇa : "And with those succours, whereby ye made a path, a road which was the cause of escape from poverty, by sowing barley and other kinds of grain, etc., for Manu, the royal hi of that name ; according to another text" (i. 117, 21).

When compared with the preceding verse it seems not improbable that the following text may refer to the same tradition, and that instead of Vāyave we should read Āyave :

vii. 91, 1. Kurīd anga namasā ye vṛdhāsah purā devā anavadyāsah āsan | te Vāyave (Āyave ?) Manave bādhitāya avāsayan Ushasam Sūryena |

“Certainly those gods who were magnified by worship were of old faultless. They displayed the dawn with the sun to Vāyu (Āyu ?), to Manu when distressed.

There is also a reference to the sky being displayed to Manu in the following verse, unless the word (manu) is to be there taken as an epithet of Purūravas, which does not seem a probable supposition :

i. 31, 4. Tram Agne Manave dyām avāsayaḥ Purūravase sukrīte sukṛittaraḥ |

“Thou, Agni, didst display the sky to Manu, to the beneficent Purūravas, (thyself) more beneficent.”

If Manu be taken for a proper name in vii. 91, 1, it may reasonably be understood in the same way in vi. 49, 13, where the person referred is similarly spoken of as distressed :

vi. 49, 13. Yo rajāmśi viname pāṛthivāni trīs chid Vishṇur Manave bādhitāya |

“Vishṇu who thrice measured the terrestrial regions for Manu when distressed.”

And in that case the word Manu may perhaps also be taken to denote a person in vii. 100, 4, Vichakrame prithivīm esha etām kshetrāya Vishṇur Manave daśasyan | “This Vishṇu strode over this earth, bestowing it on Manu for an abode.” Although here the general sense of “man” would make an equally good sense.

I may introduce here another text in which, from its conjunction with other proper names, it must be held that the word Manu denotes a person.

i. 139, 9. Dadhyañ ha me janusham pūrvo Angirāḥ Priyamedhaḥ Kaṇvo Atrir Manur vidus te me pūrve Manur viduḥ |

“Dadhyanç, the ancient Angiras, Priyamedha, Kaṇva, Atri, Manu, know my (Paruchhepa’s?) birth ; they, my predecessors, Manu, know it.”

There are, as we have seen, some passages in the hymns in which it is doubtful whether the words manu and manush denote an individual, or stand for man in general; and there are also texts in which the latter sense is clearly the only one that can be assigned. Such are the following :

(1.) Manu in the singular :

i. 130, 5. . . . Dhenur iva manave viśvadohaso janāya viśvadohasah |

“All-productive as a cow to man, all-productive to a person.”

v. 2, 12. Barhishmate manave śarma yaṁsad havishmate manave śarma yaṁsat |

“That he may bestow protection on the man who sacrifices, on the man who offers oblations.”

viii. 47, 4. Manor viśvasya gha id ime Ādityāḥ rāya īśate |

“These Ādityas are lords of every man’s riches”

viii. 18, 22. Ye chid hi mṛityubandhavaḥ Ādityāḥ manavaḥ smasi | pra su naḥ āyur jīvase tīretana |

“O ye Ādityas, prolong the days of us who are men who are of kin to death, that we may live.”

x. 91, 9. Yad devayanto dadhati prayāṁsi te havishmanto manaro vṛikta-barhishah |

(3.) Manush in the singular :

i. 167, 7. Guhā charantī manusho na yoshā |

“Like the wife of a man moving secretly.”

vii. 70, 2. . . . atāpi gharmo manusho duroṇe |

“Fire has been kindled in the man’s abode.”

The same phrase manusho duroṇe occurs also in viii. 76, 2; x. 40, 13; x. 104, 4; x. 110, 1. In x. 99, 7, we find the words druhvano manusho, “against the injurious man.”

(4.) Manush in the plural :

iv. 6, 11. Hotāram Agnim manusho nishedur namasyanta usijah saṁsam āyoh |

“Men offering worship, and eager, attend upon Agni the invoker, the object of man’s (or Āyu’s) praises.”

In the following passages, if the word Manu is not to be understood as denoting a person, the progenitor of men, it seems, at all events, to designate his descendants, the favoured race to which the authors of the hymns believed themselves to belong, and appears to be in some cases at least nearly synonymous with Ārya, the name by which they called men of their own stock and religion, in contradistinction to the Dasyus, a term by which we are either to understand hostile demons, or the rude aboriginal tribes :

i. 130, 8. Indraḥ samatsu yajamānam āryam prāvad viśveshu śatamūtir ājishu . . . | manave śāsad arratān tvacham kṛishṇām arandhayat | ¹⁶

“Indra who bestows a hundred succours in all conflicts . . . has preserved the Ārya in the fights. Chastising the lawless, he has subjected the black skin to the man (manave).” See S. 4. 1. 2. 17

Compare i. 117, 21, where instead of manu, or manush, the word manusha is employed :

Yavaṁ vṛikeṇa Aśvinā vapantū iṣham duhantū manushāya dasrū | abhi dasyum bakureṇa dhāmantū uru jyotiś chakrathur āryāya |

“Sowing barley with the wolf, ye, o potent Aśvins, milking out food for man (manusha), blowing away the Dasyu with the thunder-bolt (?), have made a broad light for the Ārya.” ¹⁷ See S. 4. 1. 2. 17

i. 175, 3. Tram hi śuraḥ sanitā chodayo manusho ratham | sahārān dasyum arratam oshaḥ pūtram na śochishā |

ii. 20, 6. Sa ha śruta Indro nāma deva ūrddhvo bhuvad manushe dasmatamaḥ | ava priyam arśasūnasya sahvān śiro bharad dūsasya svadhūvān | 7. Sa vṛitrahā Indraḥ kṛishṇayonīḥ purandaro dūsir airayad vi | ajanayad maṇave kshām apaścha satrū śaṁsam yajamānasya tūlot |

“The god renowned as Indra hath arisen most mighty for the sake of man. Violent, self-reliant, he has smitten down the dear head of the destructive Dāsa. 7. Indra, the slayer of Vṛittra, the destroyer of cities, has scattered the Dasyu (hosts) sprung from a black womb. He has produced for man the earth¹⁸ and the waters; he has perfectly fulfilled the aspiration of his worshipper."

vi. 21, 11. Nu me ā vācham upa yāhi vidvān viśvebhiḥ sūno sahaso yajatraiḥ | ye agnijiḥvāḥ ṛitasūpaḥ āsur ye manum chakrur uparam dasāya |

"Do thou, o wise god, son of strength, approach my hymn with all the adorable (deities), who were fire-tongued, rite-frequenting, and made man superior to the Dāsa."

viii. 87, 5. Abhi hi satya somapāḥ ubhe babhūtha rodasī | Indrāsi sūvato ṛidhaḥ patir divaḥ | 6. Tram hi śāsratinām Indra dartā purām asi | hantū dasyor manor ṛidhaḥ patir divaḥ |

"5. For thou, o true soma-drinker, hast overcome both worlds. Indra, thou art the prosperer of him who makes libations, the lord of the sky. 6. Thou, Indra, art the destroyer of all the cities, the slayer of the Dasyu, the prosperer of man, the lord of the sky."

ix. 92, 5. Tan nu satyam paramūnasya astu yatra viśve kūravah saṁnasanta | jyotir yad ahne akrīṇod u lokam prāvad manum dasyave kar abhikam |

"Let this be the true (abode) of the pure god (Soma) where all the sages have assembled; since he has made light and space for the day, has protected man, and repelled the Dasyu."

x. 49, 7. Yad mā sāvo manushaḥ āha nirṇije rīdhak kṛiṣhe dāsaṁ kṛit-vyam hathaiḥ |

"When the libation of man calls me to splendour, I tear in pieces (?) with blows the vigorous Dāsa."

x. 73, 7. Tram jaghantha Namuchim makhasyum dāsam kṛiṇvānaḥ rishaye vimāyam | tram chakartha manave syonān patḥo devatrā anjasū iva yānān |

"Thou hast slain the lusty Namuchi, making the Dāsa bereft of magic against the rishi: thou made for man beautiful paths leading as it were straightway to the gods."

It is to be observed that in none of these passages is the Brahmanical, or any other, caste singled out as having been the special object of divine protection. Men, or Āryas, are the favourites of the gods. And even in such hymns as R.V. i. 112; i. 116; i. 117; i. 119, etc., where the Āsṛins are celebrated as having interposed for the deliverance of many of their worshippers, whose names are there specified, we are nowhere informed that any of these were Brāhmanas, although reference is often made to their being rishis.¹⁹

There is one other text of considerable interest and importance, R.V. iii. 34, 9, which, although it is unconnected with Manu, may be here cited, as it connects the word ārya with the term varṇa, "colour," which in later times came to signify "caste," as applied to the Brāhmanas and other classes. It is this:

hiraṇyayam uta bhogaṁ sasāna hatvī dasyūn pra āryam varṇam āvat |*

"Indra bestowed horses, he bestowed the sun, he bestowed the many-nourishing cow, he bestowed golden wealth: having slain the Dasyu, he protected the Āryan colour." λ λ λ

It is to be observed that here the word varṇa is used in the singular. Thus all the persons coming under the designation of Ārya, are included under one class or colour, not several.²⁰

We shall see in the next chapter that, irrespective of the verse of the Purusha Sūkta, there are in the Rig-veda Sanhitā a few texts in which the Brāhmanas are mentioned alone of all the four castes, without any distinct reference being found anywhere to the second class as Rājanyas, or Kshattriyas, or to the third and fourth as Vaiśyas and Sūdras.

In the mean time I shall advert to some other phrases which are employed in the hymns, either to denote mankind in general, or to signify certain national or tribal divisions. The most important of these is that of the "five tribes," who are frequently referred to under the appellations of pancha-kṛishṭayah, pancha-kshitayah, pancha-kshitayo mānushyayah (vii. 97, 1), pancha-charshanayah, pancha-janūh, pāṇchajanyā viś (viii. 52, 7), pancha bhūma (vii. 69, 2), pancha jātū (vi. 61, 12).²¹

²¹ In iii. 49, 1, mention is made not of the five tribes, but of all the tribes: S'āmas

Some of these terms are occasionally used of the gods, as in x. 53, 4: urjāda uta yajñiyāsaḥ panchajanā mama hotraṁ jushadhvām | “Ye five tribes who eat (sacrificial) food, and are worthy of adoration, receive my oblation with favour.”²²

On this verse Yāska remarks, Nirukta, iii. 8: “Gandharvāḥ pitaro devā asurā rakshāṁsi” ity eke | “chatvāro varṇā nishādaḥ panchamaḥ” ity Aupamanyavaḥ | “Some say the word denotes the Gandharvas, fathers, gods, asuras, and rakshases. Aupamanyava says it denotes the four castes and the Nishādas.”²³

If Aupamanyava was right, the Nishādas also were admissible to the worship of the gods in the Vedic age, as the “five classes” are represented in various texts as votaries of Agni. Such are the following:

vi. 11, 4. Āyūṁ na yaṁ namasū rātaḥaryāḥ anjanti suprayasam panchajanāḥ |

“Agni, whom, abounding in oblations, the five tribes, bringing offerings, honour with prostrations, as if he were a man.”

Sāyana here defines the five tribes as “priests and offerers of sacrifices” (ṛitvig-yajamāna-lakshanāḥ).

ix. 65, 22. Ye somāsaḥ . . sunvire . . | 23. Ye vā janeshu panchasu |

mahūm Indraṁ yasmin viśvā ā krishṭayaḥ somapāḥ kūmam aryan | “Praise the great Indra, in whom all the tribes drinking soma have obtained their desire.”

²² Compare x. 60, 4. “In whose worship Ikshvāku prospers, wealthy and foe-destroying, like the five tribes in the sky (divīra pancha krishṭayaḥ). Sāyana, however, renders “His five tribes (the four castes and the Nishādas) are as (happy as) if in heaven.” Prof. Müller, Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1866, p. 462, renders, “as the five tribes in heaven.”

²³ In his note on this passage in his “Illustrations of the Nirukta,” p. 28, Prof. Roth remarks: “The conception of the five races which originally comprehended all mankind . . . is here transferred to the totality of the divine beings. Hence also arises the diversity of understanding, when the number has to be indicated.” Prof. Roth then quotes part of Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 31, which I give a little more fully from Dr. Haug’s edition: Panchajanyaṁ vai etad uktham yad vaisvadevam | sareśhām vai etat panchajanānām uktham deva-manushyūnām gandharvāpsarasām sarpanām cha pitṛyūn chu | eteshām vai etat panchajanūnām uktham | sarve enam panchajanā viduḥ | ā enim panchinyai janatūyai havino gachhanti ya evaṁ veda | “This Vaisvadeva uktha belongs to the five classes of beings. It belongs to all the five classes of gods, men, gandharvas and apsaras, serpents, and fathers. To these five classes belongs this uktha. All these five classes know him (who uses it). Those of this five-fold set of beings who are skilled in invocation come to the man who knows this.” See Dr. Haug’s Ait. Br. ii. 214, where it is said that Gandharvas and Apsaras are counted as one class.

x. 45, 6. Fiṭuṁ chid adrim abhinat parāyan janāḥ yad agnim aya-janta pancha | १२५, ५८, ५९, ६०, ६१, ६२

"He (Agni), travelling afar, clove even the strong mountain, when the five tribes worshipped Agni."

vii. 15, 2. Yat pancha charshanīr abhi nishasūda dame dame | karir grihapatir yuvā |

"The wise and youthful master of the house (Agni) who has taken up his abode among the five tribes in every house."

In vi. 61, 12, Sarasvatī is spoken of as "augmenting or prospering the five tribes" (pancha jūtā vardhayanti).

In viii. 52, 7, it is said: Yat pāñchajanyayā viśā Indre ghoshāḥ aśṛikshata | "When shouts were uttered to Indra by the people of the five tribes," etc.

In R.V. i. 117, 3, Atri is styled ṛishim pāñchajanyam, "a rishi belonging to the five tribes." In v. 32, 11, the epithet satpatih pāñchajanyah, "the good lord of the five tribes," is applied to Indra. And in ix. 66, 20, Agni is called the purified rishi, the priest of the five tribes (pāñchajanyah purohitaḥ).²⁴ ५१, ५२, ५३, ५४, ५५, ५६, ५७, ५८, ५९, ६०, ६१, ६२, ६३, ६४, ६५, ६६, ६७, ६८, ६९, ७०, ७१, ७२, ७३, ७४, ७५, ७६, ७७, ७८, ७९, ८०, ८१, ८२, ८३, ८४, ८५, ८६, ८७, ८८, ८९, ९०, ९१, ९२, ९३, ९४, ९५, ९६, ९७, ९८, ९९, १००

In other passages, however, it is far from clear that the "five races" are intended to be identified with the Aryas, or people of honourable race, to whom the authors of the hymns belonged. Such, perhaps, is the case in the following verse: ii. 2, 10. Aśmākaṁ dyumnāṁ adhi pancha kṛishṭishu uchchā svar na śusūchita duṣṭaram | "May our glory shine aloft among the five tribes, like the heaven unsurpassable." See also vi. 46, 7, to be quoted below.

On the same subject, Professor Roth remarks as follows in his Lexicon under the word kṛishṭi: "The phrase five races is a designation of all nations, not merely of the Aryyan tribes. It is an ancient enumeration, of the origin of which we find no express explanation in the Vedic texts. We may compare the fact that the cosmical spaces or points of the compass are frequently enumerated as five, especially in the following text of the A.V. iii. 24, 2: imā yāḥ pancha pradiśo mānaviḥ pancha kṛiṣṭayaḥ | 'these five regions; the five tribes sprung from Manu'; among which (regions) we should have here to reckon as the fifth the one lying in the middle (dhruvā dik, A.V. iv. 14, 8; xviii. 3, 34), that is, to regard the Aryyas as the central point, and round about them the nations of the four regions of the world. . . . According to the Vedic usage, five cannot be considered as designating an indefinite number."

²⁴ See Mahābhārata, iii. 14160, as referred to by Roth under jana, where the birth of a being of five colours, apparently a form of Agni, is described, who was generated by five rishis, and who was known as the god of the five tribes (pāñchajanya) and the producer of five races.

We cannot therefore regard the use of the term "five races" as affording any evidence of the existence of a rigidly defined caste-system at the period when it was in frequent use. The frequent reference to such a division, which fell into disuse in later times, rather proves the contrary. The caste-system was always a quadruple, not a quintuple, one; and although the Nishādas are added by Aupamanyava as a fifth division of the population, this class was esteemed too degraded to allow us to suppose that they could ever have formed part of a universally recognized five-fold division, of which all the parts appear to be regarded as standing on an equal, or nearly equal, footing.

It is supposed by Dr. Kuhn³⁵ that the "five tribes" are to be identified with the clans whose names are mentioned in the following verse:

i. 108, 8. Yad Indrāgnī Yadushu Turvaśeshu yad Druhyushv Anushu Pūrushu sthaḥ | ataḥ pari vṛiṣhanāv ā hi yātam athā somasya pibataṁ sutasya |

"If, o Indra and Agni, ye are abiding among the Yadus, Turvaśas, Druhyus, Anus, Pūrus,—come hither, vigorous heroes, from all quarters, and drink the Soma which has been poured out."

Although, however, these tribes are often mentioned separately in the Rig-veda, this is either the only, or almost the only, text in which they are all connected with one another. Their identity with the "five classes" is therefore doubtful.

There is another word employed in the Rig-veda to designate a race well known to the authors of the hymns, viz., nahush. We have already met with this term in a verse (x. 80, 6) I have quoted above, where it appears clearly to denote a tribe distinct from the descendants of Manush; and the adjective derived from it occurs in vi. 46, 7 (=

³⁵ See Weber's Indische Studien, i. 202, where Dr. Kuhn's paper in the Hall. Allg. Lit. Z. for 1846, p. 1086, is referred to.

S.V. i. 262), where also the tribes of Nahush appear to be discriminated from the five tribes, whoever these may be supposed to be. The words are these: Yad Indra nāhushishv ā ojo nṛimnām cha kṛishṭishu | yad vā pancha kshitinām dyumnam ā bhara satrā viśvāni pauṁsyā | "Indra, whatever force or vigour exists in the tribes of Nahush, or whatever glory belongs to the five races, bring it (for us); yea all manly energies together." He is the one who brought the world into being.

Professor Roth (see his Lexicon, s. v.) regards the people designated by the word nahush as denoting men generally, but with the special sense of stranger, or neighbour, in opposition to members of the speaker's own community; and he explains the words of x. 80, 6, twice referred to above, as signifying "the sons of our own people, and of those who surround us."

These descendants of Nahush, whoever they may have been, are, however, distinctly spoken of in x. 80, 6 (the passage just adverted to), as worshippers of Agni, and can scarcely, therefore, have been regarded by the Aryas as altogether aliens from their race and worship.

Setting aside, as before, the Purusha Sūkta, there are few distinct references in the hymns of the Rig-veda to the creation of men, and none at all to the separate creation of castes. The following text ascribes the generation of mankind to Agni, R.V. i. 96, 2: Sa pūrvayā nividā karyatā āyor imāḥ prajāḥ ajanayad manūnām | virasvatā chakshasā dyūm apas cha devā Agniṁ dhārayan dravinodām | "By the first nivid, by the wisdom of Āyu, he (Agni) created these children of men; by his gleaming light the earth and the waters: the gods sustained Agni the giver of riches."²⁸ He is the one who brought the world into being.

The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa introduces this verse by the following passage, ii. 33: Prajāpatir vai idam eka eva agre āsa | so 'kāmayaata "prajāyeya bhūyān syām" iti | sa tapo 'tapyata | sa vācham ayachhat | sa saṁvat-sarasya parastād vyāharad dvādaśa kṛitvah | dvādaśapadā vai eśhā nivit | etām vāva tām nividam vyāharat | tām sarvāni bhūtāny anvas-riyyanta | tad etad ṛishih paśyann abhyanūvacha "sa pūrvayā" ityādinā | "Prajāpati alone was formerly this universe. He desired 'may I be propagated, and multiplied.' He practised austere fervour. He suppressed his voice. After a year he spoke twelve times. This nivid consists of twelve words. This nivid he uttered. After it all beings were created. Beholding this the rishi uttered this verse, 'by the first nivid,' etc.

The generation of "creatures" (prajāḥ) is ascribed in various texts to different gods, in iii. 55, 19⁷ to Tvashtṛi Savitṛi; in ix. 86, 28 to Soma; in viii. 85, 6 (ya imā jajāna viśvā jātāni) to Indra. In x. 54, 3 Indra is said to have "generated the father and mother (heaven and earth) from his own body" (yan mātaraṁ cha pitaraṁ cha sākam ajanayathās tvaḥ svayūḥ); while Viśvakarman, who in x. 81, 2, 3 is said to have generated heaven and earth, is also in x. 82, 3 called "our father and generator" (yo naḥ pitā janitā). All these passages are, however, too vague to afford us any insight into the ideas of their authors regarding the creation of the human race.

SECT. II.—Legends and Notices regarding Manu from the Satapatha, Aitareya, and Taittirīya Brāhmaṇas, the Taittirīya Sanhitā, and the Chhāndogya Upanishad.

The first passage which I adduce contains the very important legend of the deluge, which has already been quoted in the 2nd vol. of this work, pp. 324 ff., and which has also been rendered into English by Professor Max Müller (Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 425 ff.) and by Professor M. Williams (Ind. Epic Poetry, p. 34), as well as into German by its earliest translator, Professor Weber, in the year 1849 (Ind. Studien, i. 163 f.).

(Manu enquired) 'From what wilt thou save me?' (The fish replied) 'A flood shall sweep away all these creatures;³⁷ from it I will rescue thee.' (Manu asked) 'How (shall) thy preservation (be effected)?' 3. The fish said: 'So long as we are small, we are in great peril, for fish devours fish; thou shalt preserve me first in a jar. When I grow too large for the jar, then thou shalt dig a trench, and preserve me in that. When I grow too large for the trench, then thou shalt carry me away to the ocean. I shall then be beyond the reach of danger.' 4. Straightway he became a large fish; for he waxes to the utmost. (He said) 'Now in such and such a year, then the flood will come; thou shalt, therefore, construct a ship, and resort to me; thou shalt embark in the ship when the flood rises, and I shall deliver thee from it.' 5. Having thus preserved the fish, Manu carried him away to the sea. Then in the same year which the fish had enjoined, he constructed a ship and resorted to him. When the flood rose, Manu embarked in the ship. The fish swam towards him. He fastened the cable of the ship to the fish's horn. By this means he passed over³⁸ this northern mountain.³⁹ 6. The fish said, 'I have delivered thee; fasten the ship to a tree. But lest the water should cut thee off whilst thou art on the mountain, as much as the water subsides, so much shalt thou descend after it.' He accordingly descended after it as much (as it subsided). Wherefore also this, viz., 'Manu's descent' is (the name) of the northern mountain. Now the flood had swept away all these creatures; so Manu alone was left here. 7. Desirous of offspring, he lived worshipping and toiling in arduous religious rites. Among these he also sacrificed with the pāka offering. He cast clarified butter, thickened milk, whey and curds, as an oblation into the waters. Thence in a year a woman was produced. She rose up as it were unctuous.⁴⁰ Clarified butter adheres to her steps. Mitra and Varuṇa met her. They said to her, 'Who art thou?' 'Manu's daughter,' (she replied). 'Say (thou art) ours,' (they rejoined). 'No,' she said, 'I am his who begot me.' They desired a share in her. She promised that, or she did not promise that; but passed onward. She came to Manu. 9. Manu said to her, 'Who art thou?' 'Thy daughter,' she replied. 'How, glorious one,' asked Manu, '(art thou) my daughter?' 'Thou hast generated me,' she said, 'from those oblations, butter, thick milk, whey and curds, which thou didst cast into the waters. I am a benediction. Apply me in the sacrifice. If thou wilt employ me in the sacrifice, thou shalt abound in offspring and cattle. Whatever benediction thou wilt ask through me, shall accrue to thee.' He (accordingly) introduced her (as) that (which comes in) the middle of the sacrifice; for that is the middle of the sacrifice which (comes) between the introductory and concluding forms. 10. With her he lived worshipping and toiling in arduous religious rites, desirous of offspring. With her he begot⁴¹ this offspring which is this offspring of Manu.⁴² Whatever benediction he asked with her, was all vouchsafed to him. This is essentially that which is Idā. Whosoever, knowing this, lives with Idā, begets this offspring which Manu begot. Whatever benediction he asks with her, is all vouchsafed to him."

⁴¹ I should observe that the same verb (prajāne) by which the generative act of Manu is here described, is in other passages of the same Brāhmaṇa (ii. 2, 4, 1; ii. 5, 1, 1; vi. 1, 1, 8; vi. 1, 3, 1; vii. 5, 2, 6; xi. 5, 8, 1) applied in another tense to the god Prajāpati, of whom it is said that he considered how he should beget progeny (sa aikṣhata 'katham nu prajāyeya). (Compare xi. 1, 6, 1.) In other parts of the same work, however, it is said that Prajāpati created (asṛijata) the waters (vi. 1, 1, 9), or creatures (prajāḥ asṛijata, vii. 4, 3, 5; x. 2, 2, 1); and the fact of the word "beget" being applied to Prajāpati, either in a figurative, or anthropomorphic sense, does not authorize us to suppose that the author of the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, in the passage before us (the legend of the deluge), intended to represent Manu as the creator of the human race, and not as their progenitor in the natural sense. (In R. V. ii. 33, 1; i. 70, 3, we find the phrase prajāyemahi prajābhīḥ | pra prajābhīr jāyate | "let us eget children," "he begets children.")

From this interesting legend we learn that, according to its author's belief, Manu was not the creator of mankind, as some later accounts considered him to have been, but himself belonged to an earlier race of living beings, which was entirely destroyed by the deluge which is described. The legend regards him as a representative of his generation, who, for some reason, perhaps his superior wisdom, or sanctity, or position, was selected out of the crowd of ordinary mortals to be rescued from the impending destruction. That he was regarded as a mere man, and not as a being of a superior order, is shown by the fact of his requiring the aid of a higher power to preserve him. A supernatural fish, apparently some divine person, conceived as taking the form of a creature which would be perfectly secure and at home in the midst of the raging waters, undertook to deliver him, and guided the ship on which he was directed to embark, through all dangers to its destined haven. No one but Manu took refuge in the ship, for he alone, the story expressly records, was preserved, while all the other living beings were overwhelmed. Finding himself the sole survivor when the waters subsided, he became desirous of progeny; and with intense devotion performed certain religious rites in the hope of realizing his wish through their efficacy. As a result of his oblations, a woman arose from the waters into which they had been cast. A male and a female now existed, the destined parents of a new race of men who sprang from their union,—a union the fruitfulness of which was assured by their assiduous practice of sacred ceremonies. From Manu and Idā, we are expressly told, the race known as that of Manu, i.e. the race of men, was produced. The legend says nothing whatever of this race being originally characterized by any distinction of castes, or about four sons, the ancestors of Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vais̥yas, and Sūdras being born to Manu and Idā. We must therefore suppose that the author of the legend intends to represent the early race of mankind, or at least the first inhabitants of Bharata-varsha, as descended from one common progenitor without any original varieties of caste, however different the professions and social position of their descendants afterwards became. We are consequently entitled to regard this legend of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as at variance with the common fable regarding the separate origin of the Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vais̥yas, and Sūdras.

The following are some other passages in which Manu and Idā are both referred to :

"Manu sought whatever upon earth was fit for sacrifice. He found butter poured out. He said, 'Who has power to employ this in sacrifice also?' Mitra and Varuṇa replied, 'We two have power to employ the cow.' They then sent forth the cow. Wherever she went forth, butter was pressed out. Hence she is called the 'butter-footed.' This is her birth . . . 3. He calls upon Idā. Animals are Idā. He calls upon animals. He calls upon them four times. For animals are four-footed. He says 'Mānavī.' For Manu first saw her. He says 'Butter-footed.' He says so, because butter was pressed from her foot. He says 'Maitrāvaruṇī.' For Mitra and Varuṇa sent her forth." (Comp. Taitt. Br. iii. 7, 5, 6.)

Taitt. S. ii. 5, 9, 1. "Agne mahān asi" ity āha | mahān hy esha yad Agniḥ | "brāhmaṇa" ity āha | brāhmaṇo hy esha | "bhārata" ity āha | esha hi derebhyo haryam bharati | "deveddha" ity āha | devāḥ hy etam aindhata | "Manviddha" ity āha | Manur hy etam uttaro derebhyah aindha |

Taitt. S. vi. 2, 5, 2 f. Trivratō vai Manur asīd dvivratā asurā ekavratā devūḥ | prātar madhyandine sāyaṁ tad Manor vratam āsīt pākayajñasya rūpam puṣṭyai | prātāścha sāyāṁcha asurānām nirmadhyam kṣūdho rūpam | tatas te parūbharan | madhyandine madhyarātre devānām tatas te 'bharan suvargaṁ lokam āyan |

"Manu performed three rites; the asuras two, the gods one. Manu's rite was in the morning, at noon, and in the evening, the form of a pākayajña for nourishment. That of the asuras was in the morning and evening, without any midday rite, a form of hunger. Hence they perished. That of the gods was at midday and midnight. Hence they prospered, and arrived at the heavenly world."

Taitt. S. vii. 5, 15, 3. Ētayā (i.e. abhijityā) vai Indram derāḥ ayājayan | tasmād "Indrasavaḥ" | etayā Manum manushyāḥ | tasmād "Manu-savaḥ" |

In Taitt. S. ii. 2, 10, 2, we find nearly the words which Kullūka quotes on Manu’s Institutes, i. 1: Yad vai kincha Manur avadat tad bhesajam | “Whatever Manu said was a remedy.”

In Satapatha Br. vi. 6, 1, 19, Manu is called a Prajāpati: “Prajāpataye Manave sāvā” iti | Prajāpatir vai Manuḥ | sa hi idam sarvam amanuta | Prajāpatir vai etad agre karma akarot | “Sāvā to Manu the lord of creatures. Manu is a lord of creatures (prajā-pati) for he thought (amanuta) all this. The lord of creatures (prajā-pati) formerly did all this work.”

The following story in its different versions also connects Manu with religious observances and represents him as very devout:

S. P. Br. i. 1, 4, 14 ff. Manor ha vai ṛishabhah ūsa | tasmīn asura-ghnī sapatna-ghnī vāk pravīṣṭā ūsa | tasya ha sma śrasathūd ravathūd asura-rākshasāni mṛidyamānāni yanti | te ha asurāḥ samūdīre “pāpaṁ vata no ’yam ṛishabhah sachate katham nva imāṁ dabhnuyāma” iti | “Kīlātūkūṭi” iti ha asura-brahmāv ūsatuḥ | tau ha ūchatuḥ “śraddhā-devo vai Manuḥ | āvām nu vedāva” iti | tau ha āgatya ūchatur “Mano yājayāva tvā” iti | “kena” iti | “anena ṛishabhena” iti | “tathā” iti | tasya ālabdhasya sū vāg apachakrāma | sū Manor eva jāyām Mūnūvim pravīṣa | tasyai ha sma yatra vadantyai śṛiṇvanti tato ha sma eva asura-rākshasāni mṛidyamānāni yanti | te ha asurāḥ samūdīre “ito vai naḥ pūpīyaḥ sachate bhūyo hi mānushī vāg vadati” iti | Kīlātūkūṭi ha eva ūchatuḥ “śraddhā-devo vai Manur āvām nu eva vedāva” iti | tau ha āgatya ūchatur “Mano yājayāva tvā” iti | “kena” iti | “enayā eva jāyayā” iti | “tathā” iti | tasyai ālabdhāyai sū vāg apachakrāma sū yajnam eva yajna-pātrāni pravīṣa | tato ha enām na śekatur nirhan-tum | sū eṣhū asura-ghnī vāg udvadati | sa yasya ha evaṁ vidushah rām atra vācham pratyudvāduyanti pūpīyāṁso ha eva asya sapatnāḥ bhavanti |

“Manu had a bull. Into it an Asura-slaying, enemy-slaying voice had entered. In consequence of this (bull’s) snorting and bellowing, Asuras and Rakshasas were continually destroyed. Then the Asuras said : ' This bull, alas, does us mischief ; how shall we overcome him ? ' Now there were two priests of the Asuras called Kilāta and Akuli. They said : ' Manu is a devout believer : let us make trial of him. ' They went and said to him, ' let us sacrifice for thee. ' ' With what (victim) ? ' he asked. ' With this bull, ' they replied. ' Be it so, ' he answered. When it had been slaughtered, the voice departed out of it, and entered into Manu's wife Manāvī. Wherever they hear her speaking, the Asuras and Rākshasas continue to be destroyed in consequence of her voice. The Asuras said : ' She does us yet more mischief ; for the human voice speaks more. ' Kilāta and Akuli said, ' Manu is a devout believer : let us make trial of him. ' They came and said to him, ' Manu, let us sacrifice for thee. ' ' With what (victim) ? ' he asked. ' With this (thy) wife, ' they replied. ' Be it so, ' he answered. When she had been slaughtered the voice departed out of her and entered into the sacrifice and the sacrificial vessels. Thence they were unable to expel it. This is the Asura-slaying voice which speaks out (when the two stones are struck with the śamyā, as a part of the ceremonial). Wretched become the enemies of that man for whom, when he knows this, they cause this voice here to reverberate."

“Manu had platters. All the Asuras, against whom he laid out the sacrifice with these were destroyed. Now Trishṭha and Varūtri were at that time the priests of the Asuras. The Asuras said to them, ‘ask for these six platters.’ These two arrived as morning guests, repeating the formula, ‘To Vāyu, o Agni, to Vāyu, o Indra.’ ‘What do you desire?’ asked Manu. ‘Give us these platters,’ they replied. He gave them to them. Taking them they smashed them in the forest. Then Manu’s cattle were standing round. The bull licked the platters. As many Asuras as heard him bellowing were destroyed. The two Asura priests came as morning guests, repeating the formula, ‘To Vāyu, o Agni, to Vāyu, o Indra.’ ‘What do you desire?’ enquired Manu. ‘Let us sacrifice for thee with this bull,’ they answered. He then came to his wife who was uttering a yajush. Her voice reached to the sky. As many Asuras as heard her speaking were destroyed. Hence a woman speaks more pleasantly by night. The two Asura priests arrived as morning guests, repeating the formula, ‘To Vāyu, o Agni, to Vāyu, o Indra.’ ‘What do you desire?’ asked Manu. ‘Let us sacrifice for thee with this thy wife (as the victim),' they replied. The fire was carried round her. Then Indra perceived, 'Trishṭha and Varūtri, the two Asura priests are depriving the devout believer Manu of his wife.' He came and said (to Manu), 'Let me sacrifice for thee with these two Asura priests (for victims).' 'No,' answered Manu, 'I am not their master.' 'The host is master of the guest,' rejoined Indra. Manu then gave them to him. (Standing) near them he was making an altar. They asked 'Who art thou?' 'A Brāhman,' he replied. 'What (class of) Brāhman,' they enquired. He rejoined (with a verse), 'Why askest thou the father or the mother of a Brāhman? If Vedic tradition is to be discovered in him, that is his father, that his grandfather.' They knew, 'this is Indra.' They fled. He threw after them the water which was there for consecration, and therewith cut off their heads. They became, (the one) a vrisha, (the other) a yavasha plant. Hence these (two plants) wither in the rains, because they were killed with water. He released her (Manu's wife) after the fire had been carried round her. By her he prospered. These are the creatures sprung from Manu. Whenever a man releases the victim offered to Agni Pātnīvata, after fire has been carried round it, he prospers with the same prosperity with which Manu prospered."

Compare with this a passage of the Taitt. Sanh. vi. 6, 6, 1. Indraḥ patniyā Manum ayājayat | tām paryagnikṛitām udasrijat | tayā Manur ārdhnōt | yat paryagnikṛitam pātnīvataṁ utsrijati yām eva Manur riddhim ārdhnōt tām eva yajamāna riddhnōti |

"Indra was sacrificing for Manu with his wife (as the victim). He released her after the fire had been carried round her. By her Manu prospered. Whenever the worshipper releases the victim offered to Agni Pātnīvata after fire has been carried round it, he prospers with the same prosperity with which Manu prospered."

47 This passage has been already translated into German by Prof. R. Roth, Journal of the German Oriental Society, vi. 244, and into English by Prof. Max Müller in his Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 423 f., and by Dr. M. Haug in his Ait. Br. vol. ii. p. 341 f.

thee that provision of a thousand⁴⁸ which has been made for the sacrifice.' He said, 'So be it.' He approached them, saying, 'Receive me, the son of Manu, ye sages.' They replied, 'With what object dost thou speak?' He said, 'Let me make known to you this sixth day; and then you shall give me this sacrificial provision of a thousand, when ye are going to heaven.' 'Let it be so,' they answered. He made them repeat these two hymns on the sixth day. They then knew the sacrifice, and the heavenly world. Hence when any one repeats these two hymns on the sixth day, it is with a view to a knowledge of the sacrifice, and to the revelation of the heavenly world. When they were going to the heavenly world, they said to him, 'This thousand, o Brāhman,⁴⁹ is thine.' As he was collecting (the thousand) a man in dark clothing rose up before him from the north, and said, 'This is mine; what remains on the spot is mine.' Nābhānedishṭha replied: 'But they have given it to me.' (The man) rejoined: 'It belongs to (one of) us; let thy father be asked.' He went to his father, who enquired: 'Have they not given thee (the thousand), my son?' 'They did give it to me,' he replied, 'but a man in dark clothes rose up before me from the north, and took it from me, saying, 'This is mine; what remains on the spot is mine.' His father said: 'It is his; but he will give it to thee.' He returned, and said (to the man): 'This is thine, reverend sir, so my father says.' (The man) replied: 'I will give it to thee, who hast spoken the truth.' Wherefore one who has this knowledge should speak only truth. That is a hymn which bestows a thousand, that Nābhānedishṭha hymn. A thousand falls to his lot, he knows the heavenly world on the sixth day—the man who knows this."

"Manu divided his property among his sons. He disinherited his son Nābhānedishṭha who was living as a Brahmachārin. He came and said, 'How hast thou disinherited me?' 'I have not disinherited thee,' replied (his father); 'these Angirases are celebrating a sacrifice; they do not know the heavenly world; declare to them this Brāhmaṇa; and when they are going to heaven, they will give thee the cattle they have.' He declared the Brāhmaṇa to them, and when they were going to heaven they gave him the cattle they had. Rudra came to him as he was on the place of sacrifice employed with the cattle and said: 'These are my cattle.' 'But,' replied Nābhānedishṭha, 'they have given them to me.' 'They have not power to do so; that which is left on the place of sacrifice is mine,' answered Rudra. Hence the place of sacrifice must not be approached. (Rudra further) said: 'Give me a share in the sacrifice, and I shall not injure thy cattle.' He offered him this libation of soma and flour. Then Rudra did not injure his cattle. Whenever any one knows this libation of soma and flour and offers it up, Rudra does not injure his cattle."⁵⁰

⁵⁰ The reader who knows German, and wishes to see an able discussion of the question, whether the legend of Nābhānedishṭha, as given in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, has any real connection with the two hymns of the Rig-veda (x. 61 and 62) which are referred to in it, and whether it contains any reminiscence, or symbolical representation, of ancient historical events, may consult Prof. Roth's paper on the subject, in the 6th vol. of the Journal of the German Oriental Society, pp. 243 ff. The learned writer settles both questions in the negative, maintaining that the legend is manufactured out of certain misinterpreted allusions in the hymns, with the view of asserting the superiority of priestly knowledge to earthly power and worldly wealth, and that there never existed either a Nābhānedishṭha or a Manu. The object which I have in view in the collection of these texts does not require that I should express any opinion on these points. I only seek to ascertain what were the traditions received by the most ancient Indian writers themselves regarding the origin of their race, and not what was the historical value of those traditions.

6, 1 ff., may perhaps also be considered as affirming the descent of men from Manu when it declares them to be the offspring of Vivasvat; since the latter is regarded as the father of Manu.

In the Chhândogya Upanishad, iii. 11, 4 (p. 178 of Bibliotheca Indica, vol. iii.) the following reference to Manu occurs:

Tad ha etad Brahmā Prajāpataye Prajāpatir Manave Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ | tad ha etad Uddālakya Arunaye putrāya jyeshthāya pitā brahma provācha |

“This (doctrine) Brahmā declared to Prajāpati, Prajāpati to Manu, Manu to (his) offspring. This sacred truth was declared to his eldest son Uddālaka Aruṇi by his father.”

The first half of this passage is repeated in viii. 15, 1, of the same work (p. 625).

In his commentary on the former of the two passages, Śankara Āchāryya gives this explanation:

Brahmā Hiranyagarbho Virāje Prajāpataye uvācha | so 'pi Manave | Manur Ikshvāku-ādibhyaḥ prajābhyaḥ provācha |

“Brahmā Hiranyagarbha declared it to the Prajāpati Virāj; he to Manu; and Manu declared it to his descendants Ikshvāku and the rest.”

In his note on the second passage, viii. 15, 1, he varies somewhat in his explanation of the personages by whom the doctrine was transmitted:

Brahmā Hiranyagarbhaḥ Paramēśvaro vā tad-dvāreṇa Prajāpataye Kaśyapāya uvācha | asāv api Manave sva-putrāya | Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ |

“Brahmā Hiranyagarbha, or the supreme Lord (Paramēśvara) through his instrumentality, declared it to the Prajāpati Kaśyapa; he to his son Manu; Manu to his descendants.”

In these two passages of the Chhândogya Upanishad Brahmā is distinguished from Prajāpati, and Prajāpati from Manu, who again is said to have handed down the doctrine, not to any one person in particular, but “to the offspring,” or “descendants” (prajābhyaḥ), apparently his own descendants. This Upanishad therefore seems to coincide in the doctrine of the hymns, and of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, that Manu was the progenitor of mankind. The Commentator, it will have been noticed, in one place declares that Prajāpati is identifiable with Virāj, and again that Kaśyapa is to be understood under that appellation. Virāj and Kaśyapa are not, however, generally regarded as the same.

Nor is Kaśyapa commonly considered to be Manu's father. In the passages from the Rāmāyaṇa, ii. 110, and Mahābhārata, quoted above, pp. 115 and 126, Kaśyapa is said to be the father of Vivasvat, and he again of Manu.

However this may be, as Manu is said to have handed down the sacred tradition to his descendants, we must suppose that those descendants included the whole of the progenitors of the Aryan Indians who were worthy of being made the depositaries of such a tradition; and must therefore conclude that the Chhândogya Upanishad agrees with the passage quoted above, p. 126, from the Mahābhārata, in recognizing Manu as the progenitor of the Brāhmins, as well as the other castes.

SECT. III.—Extracts from the Mahābhārata regarding Manu.

I have already adduced in the preceding chapter, page 126, an important passage of the Mahābhārata, Ādiparvan verses 3128 ff., in which Manu Vaivasvata is expressly declared to have been the progenitor of mankind including the four castes. A legend of the deluge, corresponding to the one which has been adduced from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, in the last section, is also to be found in the Vana-parvan of the Mahābhārata, and although it does not represent Manu as the parent from whom the human race was reproduced, but as the creator by whom the world was renewed, after the flood, I shall extract the entire text. Its style of narration is tedious, when compared with the quaint brevity of the Brāhmaṇa; but I shall condense it as much as possible in the translation. It begins thus, verse 12747 :

"12747. Mārkaṇḍeya said: There was a great rishi Manu, son of Vivasvat, majestic, in lustre equal to Prajāpati. In energy, fiery vigour, prosperity, and austere fervour he surpassed both his father and his grandfather. Standing with uplifted arm, on one foot, on the spacious Badari, he practised intense austere fervour. 12750. This direful exercise he performed, with his head downwards,⁵¹ and with unwinking eyes, for 10,000 years. Once, when, clad in dripping rags, with matted hair, he was so engaged, a fish came to him on the banks of the Chīriṇī, and spake: 'Lord, I am a small fish; I dread the stronger ones, and from them you must save me. For the stronger fish devour the weaker; this has been immemorially ordained as our means of subsistence. Deliver me from this flood of apprehension in which I am sinking, and I will requite the deed.' 12755. Hearing this, Manu, filled with compassion, took the fish in his hand, and bringing him to the water threw him into a jar bright as a moon-beam. In it the fish, being excellently tended, grew; for Manu treated him like a son. After a long time he became very large, and could not be contained in the jar. Then, seeing Manu, he said again: 'In order that I may thrive, remove me elsewhere.' 12760. Manu then took him out of the jar, brought him to a large pond, and threw him in. There he continued to grow for very many years. Although the pond was two yojanas long, and one yojana broad, the lotus-eyed fish found in it no room to move; and again said to Manu: 'Take me to Gangā, the dear queen of the ocean-monarch; in her I shall dwell; or do as thou thinkest best, (12765) for I must contentedly submit to thy authority, as through thee I have exceedingly increased.' Manu accordingly took the fish and threw him into the river Gangā. There he waxed for some time, when he again said to Manu: 'From my great bulk I cannot move in the Gangā; be gracious and remove me quickly to the ocean.' Manu took him out of the Gangā; and cast him into the sea. 12770. Although so huge, the fish was easily borne, and pleasant to touch and smell, as Manu carried him. When he had been thrown into the ocean he said to Manu: 'Great lord, thou hast in every way preserved me: now hear from me what thou must do when the time arrives. Soon shall all these terrestrial objects, both fixed and moving, be dissolved. The time for the purification of the worlds has now arrived. I therefore inform thee what is for thy greatest good. 12775. The period dreadful for the universe, moving and fixed, has come. Make for thyself a strong ship, with a cable attached; embark in it with the seven rishis, and stow in it, carefully preserved and assorted, all the seeds which have been described of old by Brāhmans.⁵² When embarked in the ship, look out for me: I shall come recognizable by my horn. So shalt thou do; I greet thee and depart. These great waters cannot be crossed over without me. 12780. Distrust not my word.' Manu replied, 'I shall do as thou hast said.' After taking mutual leave they departed each on his own way. Manu then, as enjoined, taking with him the seeds, floated on the billowy ocean in the beautiful ship. He then thought on the fish, which, knowing his desire, arrived with all speed, distinguished by a horn. When Manu saw the horned leviathan, lofty as a mountain, he fastened the ship's cable to the horn. Being thus attached, the fish dragged the ship with great rapidity, transporting it across the briny ocean which seemed to dance with its waves and thunder with its waters. Tossed by the tempests, the ship whirled like a reeling and intoxicated woman. Neither the earth, nor the quarters of the world appeared; (12790) there was nothing but water, air, and sky. In the world thus confounded, the seven rishis, Manu, and the fish were beheld. So, for very many years, the fish, unwearied, drew the ship over the waters; and brought it at length to the highest peak of Himavat. He then, smiling gently, said to the rishis, 'Bind the ship without delay to this peak.' They did so accordingly. 12795. And that highest peak of Himavat is still known by the name of Naubandhana ('the Binding of the Ship'). The friendly fish (or god, animisha) then said to the rishis, 'I am the Prajāpati Brahmā, than whom nothing higher can be reached. In the form of a fish I have delivered you from this great danger. Manu shall create all living beings, gods, asuras, MEN, with all worlds, and all things moving and fixed. By my favour and through severe austere fervour, he shall attain perfect insight into his creative work, and shall not become bewildered.' 12800. Having thus spoken, the fish in an instant disappeared. Manu, desirous to call creatures into existence and bewildered in his work, performed a great act of austere fervour; and then began visibly to create all living beings. This which I have narrated is known as the Mātsyaka Purāṇa (or 'Legend of the Fish')."

⁵² The S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa is silent as to these seeds, as well as to the seven rishis; but it is possible that the reference here made to them may have been borrowed from some other ancient source.

It will be observed that towards the close of this narrative it is stated that Manu (not Brahmā himself) was the creator of Men, as well of gods and asuras; and that no reference is made to the formation of separate castes.

The commentators seem disinclined to take this legend in its literal sense. We shall see below what reason the scholiast on the Bhāgavata Purāṇa assigns for this procedure. The following are some of the remarks of the Commentator Nīlakanṭha on the above passage of the Mahābhārata :

"'Manu,' that which imagines, denotes the consciousness of self (ahankāra), consisting in the idea that objects refer to one's self (abhimāna).⁵³ 'Vivasvat' is he who possesses the discriminating knowledge that (such and such a thing) obscures the light of the mind, i.e.

he is the Illuder, Īśvara, for the Veda⁵⁴ speaks of 'Maheśvara the Illuder.' It is the 'history,' the action, of this son of Vivasvat, that is related. It is objected, 'how can Ahankāra, which arises from ignorance, operate when ignorance is destroyed?' for when the threads are burnt the cloth no longer remains' . . . Here the embodied soul, called in this passage a 'Fish,' is only another form of the supreme Brahma. This 'Fish' is thrown by 'Manu,' who is Ahankāra, through the power of austere fervour, into gross bodies, here represented by 'a jar,' 'a pond,' etc., which gradually rise in excellence. Being at last cast into the body of Virāj, called 'the ocean,' although 'the close of the Kalpa' means the destruction of ignorance, still the embodied soul denoted by the 'Fish,' contemplating Ahankāra still remaining like the ashes of burnt cloth, then entering, along with the breath and other vital airs named 'the seven rishis,' and the works of a former birth designated as 'seeds,' into the ship which signifies its last body, and then borne along even in the period of dissolution by the embodied soul itself symbolized as a 'Fish,' by means of the 'rope' of the remaining consciousness of past perceptions (rāsana), obtaining at length through a consciousness of former perceptions, which were pure (sadvāsana), a resting-place on a mountain like the peak of Meru, represented by the Himavat (?), and finally dissolved;—the embodied soul under the figure of a 'Fish' having contemplated all this,—vanishes. For when Ahankāra has become entirely dissolved, the state of the embodied soul ceases. Then Ahankāra, after the state of the embodied soul has been dispelled, obtains the condition of Brahma; but by its consciousness of past perceptions creates the world as before. Even when the cause called ignorance has been destroyed, the effect in the shape of the semblance of the world continues for some time, like the revolution of a wheel. Such is signification of the section."

According to this allegorical interpretation "Vivasvat," father of Manu, represents Īśvara, the Illuder. "Manu" is Ahankāra, or self-consciousness. The "Fish" is the embodied soul, which fancies itself to be, but is not, distinct from the Supreme spirit. Ahankāra, denoted by 'Manu,' places the embodied soul, symbolized by the "Fish," in a variety of bodies gradually increasing in excellence, which are signified by the "jar," "pond," "Gangā," and "ocean." Although the end of the Kalpa means the removal of ignorance, still Ahankāra continues for a time; and along with the "seven rishis," who stand for the vital airs, and the "seeds," which are former works, embarks on the "ship," which is its last body, and is drawn over the ocean by the embodied soul by means of a "rope," which signifies the consciousness of former perceptions. Ahankāra at length finds a resting-place, denoted by Mount Himavat; and when it has been destroyed, the embodied soul vanishes. Ahankāra, however, passes into the form of Brahma, and, through the operation of the cause explained by the Commentator, creates the world anew.

It is scarcely necessary to remark that the narrator of the legend himself appears to have had no idea of making it the vehicle of any Vedantic allegory such as is here propounded.

The following is another version of the same legend from the Matsya Purāṇa :

"12. Formerly a heroic king called Manu, the patient son of the Sun, endowed with all good qualities, indifferent to pain and pleasure, after investing his son with the royal authority, practised intense austere fervour, (13) in a certain region of Malaya (Malabar), and attained to transcendent union with the Deity (yoga). 14. When a million years had elapsed, Brahmā became pleased and disposed to bestow a boon, which he desired Manu to choose. 15. Bowing before the father of the world the monarch said, 'I desire of thee this one incomparable boon, that when the dissolution of the universe arrives I may have power to preserve all existing things, whether moving or stationary.' 17. 'So be it,' said the Soul of all things, and vanished on the spot; when a great shower of flowers, thrown down by the gods, fell from the sky. 18. Once as, in his hermitage, Manu offered the oblation to the Manes, there fell, upon his hands, along with some water, a Supharī fish (a carp), (19) which the kind-hearted king perceiving, strove to preserve in his water-jar. 20. In one day and night the fish grew to the size of sixteen fingers, and cried, 'preserve me, preserve me.' 21. Manu then took and threw him into a large pitcher, where in one night he increased three cubits, (22) and again cried, with the voice of one distressed, to the son of Vivasvat, 'preserve me, preserve me, I have sought refuge with thee.' 23. Manu next put him into a well, and when he could not be contained even in that, (24) he was thrown into a lake, where he attained to the size of a yojana; but still cried in humble tones, 'preserve me, preserve me.' 25. When, after being flung into the Gangā he increased there also, the king threw him into the ocean. 26. When he filled the entire ocean, Manu said, in terror, 'Thou art some god, (27) or thou art Vāsudeva; how can any one else be like this? Whose body could equal 200,000 yojanas? 28. Thou art recognised under this form of a fish, and thou tormentest me, Keśava; reverence be to thee, Hrishikeśa, lord of the world, abode of the universe!' 29. Thus addressed, the divine Janārdana, in the form of a fish, replied: 'Thou hast well spoken, and hast rightly known me. 30. In a short time the earth with its mountains, groves, and forests, shall be submerged in the waters. 31. This ship has been constructed by the company of all the gods⁶² for the preservation of the vast host of living creatures. 32. Embarking in it all living creatures, both those engendered from moisture and from eggs, as well as the viviparous, and plants, preserve them from calamity. 33. When driven by the blasts at the end of the yuga, the ship is swept along, thou shalt bind it to this horn of mine. 34. Then at the close of the dissolution thou shalt be the Prajāpati (lord of creatures) of this world, fixed and moving. 35. When this shall have been done,⁶³ thou, the omniscient, patient rishi, and lord of the Manvantāra, shalt be an object of worship to the gods." 2nd Adhyāya: "1. Sūta said: Being thus addressed, Manu asked the slayer of the Asura, 'In how many years shall the (existing) Manvantara come to an end? 2. And how shall I preserve the living creatures? or how shall I meet again with thee?' The fish answered: 'From this day forward a drought shall visit the earth for a hundred years and more, with a tormenting famine. 4. Then the seven direful rays of the sun, of little power, destructive, shall rain burning charcoal. 5. At the close of the yuga the submarine fire shall burst forth, while the poisonous flame issuing from the mouth of Sankarshana (shall blaze) from Pātālā, and the fire from Mahādeva's third eye shall issue from his forehead. Thus kindled the world shall become confounded.

7. When, consumed in this manner, the earth shall become like ashes, the æther too shall be scorched with heat. 8. Then the world, together with the gods and planets, shall be destroyed. The seven clouds of the period of dissolution, called Sāmvartta, Bhīmanāda, Droṇā, Chāṇḍa, Balāhaka, (9) Vidyutpatāka, and Sṇāmbu, produced from the steam of the fire, shall inundate the earth. 10. The seas agitated, and joined together, shall reduce these entire three worlds to one ocean. 11. Taking this celestial ship, embarking on it all the seeds, and through contemplation fixed on me fastening it by a rope (12) to my horn, thou alone shalt remain, protected by my power, when even the gods are burnt up.

13. The sun and moon, I Brahmā with the four worlds, the holy river-

Narmadā,⁶⁴ the great rishi Mārkaṇḍeya, (14) Mahādeva, the Vedas, the Purāṇa with the sciences,—these shall remain with thee at the close of the Manvantara. 15. The world having thus become one ocean at the end of the Chākshusha manvantara, I shall give currency to the Vedas at the commencement of thy creation.' 16. Sūta continued: Having thus spoken, the divine Being vanished on the spot; while Manu fell into a state of contemplation (yoga) induced by the favour of Vāsudeva.

17. When the time announced by Vāsudeva had arrived, the predicted deluge took place in that very manner. Then Janārdana appeared in the form of a horned fish; (the serpent) Ananta came to Manu in the shape of a rope. 19. Then he who was skilled in duty (i.e. Manu) drew towards himself all creatures by contemplation (yoga) and stowed them in the ship, which he then attached to the fish's horn by the serpent-rope, (20) as he stood upon the ship, and after he had made obeisance to Janārdana. 21. I shall now declare the Purāṇa which, in answer to an enquiry from Manu, was uttered by the deity in the form of the fish, as he lay in a sleep of contemplation till the end of the universal inundation: Listen." The Matsya Purāṇa gives us no further information here about the progress and results of the deluge; and this narrative does not appear to be ever afterwards resumed.

⁶⁴ In the opinion of this writer, therefore, the Narmadā (Nerbudda) must have been a holier stream than the Gāṅgā: otherwise we should have expected him to select the latter as the river to be preserved at the dissolution.

“7. At the close of the past Kalpa there occurred an occasional⁶⁵ dissolution of the universe arising from Brahmā's nocturnal repose; in which the Bhūloka and other worlds were submerged in the ocean. 8. When the creator, desirous of rest, had under the influence of time been overcome by sleep, the strong Hayagrīva coming near, carried off the Vedas which had issued from his mouth. 9. Discovering this deed of the prince of the Dānavas, the divine Hari, the Lord, took the form of a Sapharī fish. 10. At that time a certain great royal rishi, called Satyavrata, who was devoted to Nārāyaṇa, practised austere fervour, subsisting on water. 11. He was the same who in the present great Kalpa is the son of Visvasvat, called Srāddhadeva,⁶⁶ and was appointed by Hari to the office of Manu. 12. Once, as in the river Kṛitamālā he was offering the oblation of water to the Pitris, a Sapharī fish came into the water in the hollow of his hands. 13. The lord of Draviḍa, Satyavrata, cast the fish in his hands with the water into the river. 14. The fish very piteously cried to the merciful king, 'Why dost thou abandon me poor and terrified to the monsters who destroy their kindred in this river?'” [Satyavrata then took the fish from the river, placed it in his waterpot, and as it grew larger and larger, threw it successively into a larger vessel, a pond, various lakes, and at length into the sea. The fish objects to be left there on the plea that it would be devoured; but Manu replies that it can be no real fish, but Vishṇu himself; and with various expressions of devotion enquires why he had assumed this disguise, verses 15–31.] The god replies: 32. “On the seventh day after this the three worlds Bhūloka, etc., shall sink beneath the ocean of the dissolution. 33. When the universe is dissolved in that ocean, a large ship, sent by me, shall come to thee. 34. Taking with thee the plants and various seeds, surrounded by the seven rishis, and attended by all existences, (35) thou shalt embark on the great ship, and shalt without alarm move over the one dark ocean, by the sole light of the rishis. When the ship shall be vehemently shaken by the tempestuous wind, fasten it by the great serpent to my horn—for I shall come near. 37. So long as the night of Brahmā lasts, I shall draw thee with the rishis and the ship over the ocean.” [The god then disappears after promising that Satyavrata shall practically know his greatness and experience his kindness, and Satyavrata awaits the predicted events, verses 38–40.] 41. “Then the sea, augmenting as the great clouds poured down their waters, was seen overflowing its shores and everywhere inundating the earth. 42. Meditating on the injunctions of the deity, Satyavrata beheld the arrival of the ship, on which he embarked with the Brāhmanas, taking along with him the various kinds of plants. 43. Delighted, the Munis said to him, ‘meditate on Keśava; he will deliver us from this danger, and grant us prosperity.’ 44. Accordingly when the king had meditated on him, there appeared on the ocean a golden fish, with one horn, a million yojanas long. 45. Binding the ship to his horn with the serpent for a rope, as he had been before commanded by Hari, Satyavrata lauded Madhusūdana.” [Verses 46–53 contain the hymn.] 54. When the king had thus spoken, the divine primeval Male, in the form of a fish, moving on the vast ocean declared to him the truth; (55) the celestial collection of Puranas, with the Sāṅkhya, Yoga, the ceremonial, and the mystery of the soul. 56. Seated on the ship with the rishis, Satyavrata heard the true doctrine of the soul, of the eternal Brahmā, declared by the god. 57. When Brahmā arose at the end of the past dissolution, Hari restored to him the Vedas, after slaying Hayagrīva. 58. And King Satyavrata, master of all knowledge, sacred and profane, became, by the favour of Viṣṇu, the son of Vivasvat, the Manu in this

Before adducing the remarks of the commentator Śrīdhara Svāmin on the passage last cited from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, I shall quote one more version of the same legend from the Agni Purāṇa.⁶⁷ It is not of any great consequence, as, though more condensed, it coincides in purport with that in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa: which of the two has bor-

Manu, the son of Vivasvat, practised austere fervour for the sake of worldly enjoyment as well as final liberation. Once, when he was offering the libation of water to the Pitris in the river Kṛitamālā, (5) a small fish came into the water in the hollow of his hands, and said to him when he sought to cast it into the stream, 'Do not throw me in, (6) for I am afraid of alligators and other monsters which are here.' On hearing this Manu threw it into a jar. Again, when grown, the Fish said to him, 'Provide me a large place.' 7. Manu then cast it into a larger vessel (?). When it increased there, it said to the king, 'Give me a wide space.' 8. When, after being thrown into a pond, it became as large as its receptacle, and cried out for greater room, he flung it into the sea. 9. In a moment it became a hundred thousand yojanas in bulk. Beholding the wonderful Fish, Manu said in astonishment: (10) 'Who art thou? Art thou Viṣṇu? Adoration be paid to thee, o Nārāyaṇa. Why, o Janārdana, dost thou bewilder me by thy illusion?' 11. The Fish, which had become incarnate for the welfare of this world and the destruction of the wicked, when so addressed, replied to Manu, who had been intent upon its preservation: (12) 'Seven days after this the ocean shall inundate the world. A ship shall come to thee, in which thou shalt place the seeds, (13) and accompanied by the rishis shalt sail during the night of Bruhmā. Bind it with the great serpent to my horn, when I arrive. 14. Having thus spoken the Fish vanished. Manu awaited the promised period, and embarked on the ship when the sea overflowed its shores. 15. (There appeared) a golden Fish, a million yojanas long, with one horn, to which Manu attached the ship, (16) and heard from the Fish the Matsya Purāṇa, which takes away sin, together with the Veda. Kṛṣṇa then slew the Dānava Hayagrīva who had snatched away the Vedas, and preserved its mantras and other portions."

The following is Śrīdhara's comment, before referred to, on the legend of the deluge, as told in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. These remarks have been well translated and explained in the preface to the 3rd volume of his edition of this Purāṇa (pp. xxxviii ff.) by M. Burnouf, whose elaborate discussion of the legend extends from p. xxiii to p. liv.

"Here we have to consider whether this was a great dissolution of the universe, or one of those which occur at the close of each day of Brahmā. If it be supposed from the expressions 'a dissolution proceeding from Brahmā' (v. 7), and 'he is the same who in this Mahā-kulpa' (v. 11), that it was a great dissolution, we reply,—no; because in a great dissolution the earth and other worlds cannot possibly remain in existence, and because this would be opposed to the words 'so long as the night of Brahmā lasts' (v. 37). Hence it might appear that it must be one of the dissolutions which occur at the end of a day of Brahmā. But this also is impossible, because it would be at variance with the Fish's words that 'the three worlds should be submerged on the seventh day,' (v. 32) suddenly, without the drought and other calamities which precede a dissolution. What is stated in the first book (iii. 15), 'at the deluge, in the Chākshusha Manvantara, he took the form of a Fish, and preserved Manu Vaivasvata, whom he placed in a ship formed of the earth,'⁶⁰ would also in that case be inconceivable; for

plave | nāvy ūropya mahimayyām apād Vaivasvatam Manum |* On this passage also

(1.) in neither of the two dissolutions could any one be placed 'in a ship in the form of the earth' (as the earth is submerged in the one case and altogether destroyed in the other); (2.) there is no dissolution of the world in the Chākshusha Manvantara; (3.) in the case supposed the existence of a seventh Manu, the son of Vivasvat would be impossible (for the fourteen Manus succeed each other in one Kalpa without the intervention of any dissolution). And in that case the command to take 'all the plants into the ship' (viii. 24, 34), would be inconceivable, since no plants or other such substances are left at such a period. Such being the fact, the narrative must be otherwise explained. It was in fact no real dissolution which is here related. But the deity, who appeared to teach Satyavrata knowledge, shewed him suddenly the semblance of a dissolution to instil into him dispassion, just as in the Vairasvata Manvantara he shewed to Mārkaṇḍeya. And if referred to this, the words 'in this Māhākālpa' will be conceivable. And consequently the words 'Then the sea was beheld overflowing its shores on every side' are spoken with reference to what Satyavrata saw (in the vision). Such is an indication of the purport of the Section."

Śrīdhara Svāmī here reasons only upon the data supplied by the particular version of the story which he found before him in the Bhāgavata, and does not seem to have extended his researches so far as to ascertain whether the legend might not exhibit some variations as narrated in other Purāṇas. If he had turned to the Matsya Purāṇa he would have found that one of his objections, viz., that drawn from the absence of any reference to the calamities supposed to precede a dissolution, did not apply to the account there given; since that narrative expressly asserts that these premonitory signs were manifested. Others of his objections apply no doubt to the other narratives as well as to that in the Bhāgavata. According to the ordinary Purāṇic theory (see above, pp. 43 ff.) fourteen Manus exist in each Kalpa, and one succeeds another without the intervention of any pralaya or dissolution. It is obviously inconsistent with this theory to represent such a dissolution. Śrīdhara remarks: Yadyapi manvantarūvasāne pralayo nāsti tathāpi kenachit kautukena Satyavratīya māyā pradarśitā | yathā "akūṇḍe Mārkaṇḍeyūya" iti drashṭavyam | "Although there is no dissolution at the end of a Manvantara, yet, through a certain sport an illusion was shown to Satyavrata, as in the other passage where it is said 'Suddenly to Mārkaṇḍeya,' etc."

as taking place either during the life of any of the Manus, or after his disappearance. It is even doubtful, or more than doubtful (Wilson's Vish. P. i. p. 50 f. and p. 44, above) whether one Manu can exist contemporaneously with another, and yet, according to the Matsya and Agni Purāṇas (see above, pp. 205 ff., 211 f.) Manu Vaivasvata is said to have lived during his predecessor's period, although the Bhāgavata avoids this difficulty by making Satyavrata the hero of the story and by representing him as being born again as Manu Vairasvata at the beginning of the next Manvantara. (M. Burnouf's Preface above referred to may be consulted for further remarks on this subject.) The authors of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas do not, however, appear to have been so sensitively alive to inconsistencies of this description as Śrīdhara. Perhaps the system of Kalpas and Manvantaras may not have been so clearly defined, or so generally current, when the older parts, at least of the Mahābhārata, were composed, as at a later period.⁷⁰ And even the Puranic writers may not have cared very much to preserve a strict congruity in all that they wrote. In fact they may have had no great faith in the authority of speculations so arbitrary and artificial as those relating to the great mundane periods to which I refer,—speculations which were derived from no higher source than previous writers of their own class. The case, however, was different with the Commentators, who lived at a later period, and who seem to have regarded the established doctrine regarding Kalpas and Manvantaras as an article of faith.

There is, however, no doubt that, for the reasons above assigned, this legend of a Flood, such as is described in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, does not fit into the system of Kalpas and Manvantaras. But what is the inference which we ought to draw from this circumstance? M. Burnouf believes (1.) that the theory of great mundane periods and periodical dissolutions of the universe was received in India from very early times (Bhāg. P. iii. Pref. p. xliii.) and (2) that it was older than the legend of a deluge, as, although the latter may have been derived from ancient tradition, the style in which it is related in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas has nothing of the archaic colouring of the Itihāsas contained in the Brāhmaṇas, and it had not, so far as he knew, been found in any work of the class last named (p. xxvii.), and was not, he anticipated, likely to be discovered there (lii.). The conclusion which he deduces from these premises, and from the absence of any tradition of any great local inundation (pp. xlviii. and li.), is that, although, as related in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, the legend of the deluge has received in some respects an Indian character (xxx. ff.; xlv. ff.), it is not in its origin Indian, (li.), but was most probably imported into Hindustan from a Semitic source, whether Hebrew or Assyrian (lii.-liv.). The first of M. Burnouf's premises, regarding the great antiquity of the system of Kalpas, Manvantaras, and mundane dissolutions, is not borne out by the Vedic hymns, or anything that has yet been found in the Brāhmaṇas (see above, pp. 45 ff.). And his anticipation that no reference to a deluge would be discovered in any of the older Indian records has proved incorrect, as is shewn by the legend of Manu quoted above (p. 181 ff.) from the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa.

Professor Weber, by whom attention was first drawn (in his Indische Studien, i. 160 ff.) to this passage, shows how materially it interferes with Burnouf's results. If there is no proof of the great antiquity of the cosmical theory which that great scholar supposes to be inconsistent with the early existence in India of any tradition of a deluge, whilst on the other hand there is distinct evidence that that tradition was actually current there at a much earlier period than he imagined, it is clear that his supposition of its having been introduced into that country from an exclusively Semitic source loses much of its probability.

The explanation by which Sridhara endeavours to maintain the consistency of the Puranic narratives and theories seems to be altogether unfounded. There is no appearance of the authors either of the Bhāgavata, or Matsya, or Agni Purāṇas having intended to represent the deluge as a mere vision. They evidently meant this narrative to be taken literally, just as much as anything else that they describe.

I shall now compare the versions of the legend given in the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas with each other, and with that quoted above from the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa.

I. The following are the peculiarities of the narrative in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa :

(1.) It makes no reference to any great mundane periods, such as Kalpas or Manvantaras.

(2.) It does not speak of a dissolution of the world (pralaya), but of a flood (augha) which swept away all living creatures except Manu.

(3.) It does not fix the number of days or years after which the flood should come.

(4.) It speaks of Manu simply, without assigning to him any patronymic, such as Vaivasvata.⁷¹

(5.) It contains no allusion to the locality in which he was when the fish came to him.

(6.) It makes no mention of the fish being thrown into any river.

(7.) It is silent as to Manu being accompanied by any rishis when he embarked on the ship, and as to his taking any seeds along with him.

(8.) It speaks of the ship as having rested on the "Northern mountain," and of a place called "Manu's Descent."

(9.) It does not say anything of any deity being incarnate in the fish.

(10.) It represents Idā as produced from Manu's oblation, and as the mother of his offspring, begotten apparently in the natural way.

It is manifest from this abstract, when compared with what follows, that the flood described in the Brāhmaṇa is distinguishable in various respects from the dissolution, or pralaya, of the later works.

II. The legend as told in the Mahābhārata agrees with that of the S. P. Br. in some, and differs from it in other particulars:

(1.) It does not specify any Kalpa or Manvantara.

(2.) It speaks of a dissolution of the universe (pralaya), and of the time of its purification by water (samprakṣhālana-kālah) having arrived.

(3.) It makes the fish declare that this event should take place speedily (achirāt), and alludes to no antecedent calamities.

⁷¹ Manu Vaivasvata is however mentioned in S. P. Br. xiii. 4, 3, 3. "Manur Vaivasvato rājā" ity āha | tasya manushyā viśah | "He says 'Manu Vaivasvata king.' Men are his subjects." Further on, xiii. 4, 3, 6, Yama Vaivasvata is spoken of as King of the Pitris. Compare R.V. x. 14, 1; 17, 1. In the Vāṅkhyā hymns attached to the R.V. iv. 1, Indra is mentioned as drinking Soma in the house of Manu Vivasvat (not Vaivasvata). In the Atharva-veda, viii. 10, 24, Manu Vaivasvata is spoken of as the calf of the cow Virūj (tasyā Manur Vaivasvato vatsah). Yama is similarly spoken of in the preceding verse. In Vāṅkhyā, iii. 1, Indra is said to have drunk Soma in Manu Sāmvarṇi's house. The connection of the words Sāvarṇya and Sāvarṇi with the word manu, "man," in R.V. x. 68, 8 f. and 11, no doubt gave rise to the idea of a Manu Sāvarṇi. See Wilson's Vishnu P. 4to. ed. pp. 266 ff., and Roth's remark in Journal Germ. Or. Soc. vi. 245 f., and R.V. x. 17, 2.

(5.) It represents the fish as coming to him when on the banks of the Chirīṇī river.

(6.) It describes the fish as thrown into the Ganges before it was taken to the sea.

(7.) It speaks of Manu as embarking on the ship with the seven rishis, and as taking with him all the seeds described by the Brāhmins.

(8.) It declares that the ship rested on the highest peak of the Himālaya, which was thence called Naubandhana.

(9.) It makes the fish reveal himself as Brahmā Prajāpati.

(10.) It describes Manu not as begetting offspring but as creating all sorts of living beings including MEN.

III. The Matsya Purāṇa agrees in some points, and differs in others from the above details.

(1.) It states that Manu, whom it styles the son of the Sun (Sahasrakiraṇātmaja, and Ravi-nandana), i.e. Manu Vaivasvata, practised austerity after making over his kingdom to his son (v. 12). One might have supposed that he could only have done this in his own Manvantara; but it is said further on (v. 34 f.) that he was informed by the fish that when the dissolution should come to an end, he should become a Prajāpati and lord of the Manvantara; and he receives a promise that he should be preserved during the dissolution (ii. 12), which, as appears from v. 15, was to take place at the end of the Chākshusha Manvantara. After this he was to create the world anew. We must therefore suppose the writer to have regarded Manu Vaivasvata as existing during the period of his predecessor, but as then occupying the inferior position of a king. This difficulty is, as I have already remarked, avoided in the Bhāgavata, which makes King Satyavrata the hero of the story.

(2.) This Purāṇa speaks of a dissolution (pralaya) and yet (i. 15 ff.) represents Manu as asking and receiving from Brahmā as a boon that when that dissolution should arrive, he should be the preserver of all things stationary and moving.

(3.) It states that a hundred years and more would elapse before the dissolution, which was to be preceded by famine and various terrific phenomena.

(4.) It represents Manu as the son of the Sun. See under head (1.).

(5.) It mentions Malaya (Malabar) as the scene of Manu's austerity, and of the apparition of the fish.

(6.) It agrees with the Mahābhārata in describing the fish as thrown into the Gangra, though at so great a distance from Malabar.

(7.) It is silent as to the seven rishis embarking on the ship, but speaks of Manu taking with him all sorts of creatures (living apparently) as well as seeds (chap. ii. v. 11).

(8.) It does not bring the narrative to a conclusion (see above, p. 207), and thus has no opportunity of saying anything of the place where the ship rested.

(9.) It speaks of Janārdana (Vishnu) as the god who was manifested in the Fish.

(10.) It refers to Manu as about to effect a creation (ii. 15), but also as preserving the existing animals and plants (ch. i. 15 ff., 31 f.; ii. 2, 19).

IV. According to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa :

(1.) The event described was an "occasional dissolution" (naimittiko layah, see above, p. 45) at the end of a Kalpa (viii. 24, 7); and yet in contradiction with this it had previously been alluded to (i. 3, 15) as occurring at the close of the Chākshusha Manvantara.

(2.) See head (1.).

(3.) The dissolution was to take place after seven days (viii. 24, 32); and no premonitory calamities are referred to.

(4.) The hero of the story is Satyavrata, king of Dravida, who was born again in the present mahākalpa as the son of Vivasvat (vv. 10, 11, 58).

(5.) The scene of the incidents, with which the narrative begins, was the river Kṛitamālā, in the country of Dravida.

(6.) The fish is not thrown into any river after it had been once taken out of the Kṛitamālā, and had grown large.

(7.) Satyavrata is commanded to take with him into the ship the seven rishis, as well as plants, seeds, and all beings (sarva-sattropa-

(8.) Nothing is said of the place where the ship rested.

(9.) Vishnu is the deity who took the form of a fish with the view of recovering the Vedas carried away by the Dānava Hayagrīva (vv. 9, 57).

(10.) No mention is made in this chapter of any creation effected by Manu: but in ix. i. an account is given of his descendants.

V. The narrative in the Agni Purāṇa agrees with that in the Bhāgavata, except in its much greater conciseness, and in making Manu Vaivasvata, and not Satyavrata, the hero of the story.

SECT. IV.—Legendary Accounts of the Origin of Castes among the Descendants of Manu and Atri, according to the Purāṇas.

We have already seen that it is distinctly affirmed in a passage quoted above (p. 126) from the Ādiparvan of the Mahābhārata, verses 3138 ff., that men of all classes, Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras were descended from Manu, a statement which is clearly at variance with the notion of their having been separately created from different members of Brahmā. This tallies with the account of the origin of castes which is found in those parts of the Purāṇas which profess to record the history of the two royal races, the solar and the lunar, which are said to have sprung from Manu Vaivasvata and Atri.

The Vishṇu Purāṇa (which is here written in prose) makes the following statement regarding Manu's descendants :

iv. 1. 4. *Sakala-jagatām anūdir ādibhūtaḥ ṛig-yajuḥ-sāmādimaya-bhagavad-Vishṇumayasya Brahmaṇo mūrttirūpam Hiranyagarbho brahmāṇḍato bhagavān Brahmā prāg babhūva | Brahmaṇas cha dakṣiṇāṅgushṭhajanmā Dakṣaḥ prajāpatiḥ | Dakṣasyāpy Aditiḥ | Aditer Vivasvān | Vivasvato Manuḥ | Manor Ikshvāku-Nṛiga-Dhrishṭa-S'aryāti-Narishyanta-Prāṁśu-Nābhāganedisṭha-Kārūsha-Prishadhrākhyāḥ putrāḥ babhūruḥ | 6. “Before the mundane egg existed the divine Brahmā Hiranyagarbha, the eternal originator of all worlds, who was the form and essence of Brahmā, who consists of the divine Vishṇu, who again is identical with

Prishadhras tu guru-go-badhūch chhūdratram āgamat |

On the same subject the Harivaṁśa tells us, verse 659 :

⁷⁴ Akinohinmayah, "not consisting of anything."

“the obvious purport of this legend, and of some that follow, is to account for the origin of the different castes from one common ancestor.”

(2.) Karūsha.—The Vishṇu Purāṇa says, iv. 1, 13:

Kārūshāt Kārūshā mahābalāḥ Kshattriyā babhūruḥ |

“From Kārūsha the Kārūshas, Kshattriyas of great power, were descended.”

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 2, 16, says:

*Kārūshād Mūnavād āsan Kārūshāḥ Kshattri-jātayaḥ | uttarāpatha-
goptāro brahmaṇyā dharma-ratsalāḥ |*

“From Karūsha, son of Manu, came the Kārūshas of the Kshattriya caste, protectors of the northern region, devout, and lovers of duty.”

(3.) Nābhāga.—The Vishṇu Purāṇa says, iv. 1, 14:

Nābhāgo Nedishṭa-putras tu vaiśyatām agamat |

“Nābhāga, the son of Nedishṭa, became a Vaiśya.”

The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa says he was the son of Dishṭa, and relates how he became a Vaiśya, by marrying the daughter of a man of that class (section cxiii. and Wilson, p. 352, note). The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 2, 23, says he became a Vaiśya in consequence of his works (Nābhāgo Dishṭa-putro 'nyaḥ karmabhir vaiśyatām gataḥ). And yet a long list of his descendants is given, and among them occurs Marutta who was a Chakravartin, or universal monarch (Vishṇu P. iv. 1. 15-17; Bhāg. P. ix. 2, 23-28; Mārka. P. cxxviii.-xxxii.). He had a grandson called Dama, of whom the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa relates that at a Svayamvara he was chosen by the daughter of the King of Daśārṇa for her husband (cxxxiv. 8), and that when the bride had been seized by three of his rejected rivals (verse 16) she was rescued by him after he had slain one of them and vanquished another (verse 53); that subsequently that same vanquished rival in revenge killed Dama's father, who had retired into the wilderness as an ascetic (cxxxv. 18). The Purāṇa in one of its recensions ends with the following curious particulars:

pituh punaḥ prāyāt sva-mandiram | Vapushmataś cha māṁsena piṇḍa-dānaṁ chakūra ha | brāhmaṇān bhojyāmāsa rakshaḥ-kula-samudbhavān |
evamvidhā hi rūjāno babhūruḥ sūrya-vaṁśa-jāḥ | anye 'pi sudhiyaḥ sūra
yajvānaḥ śāstra-kovidāḥ | vedāntam paṭhamānāms tām na sankhyātum
ihotsahe |*

“Dama then (after tearing out the heart of Vapushmat) performed with blood the rites to the manes of his father; and having thus discharged his debt to his parent, he returned home. With the flesh of Vapushmat he formed the oblation which he offered, and fed the Brāhmanas who were of Rākshasa descent. Of such character were the kings of the Solar race. There were also others who were wise, brave, priests, and skilled in the scriptures. I am unable here to enumerate those of them who studied the Vedānta.”⁷⁵

The Harivaṁśa (section xi. verse 658) tells us that “two sons of Nābhāgārishṭa, who were Vaiśyas, became Brāhmanas” (Nābhāgārishṭa-putrau dvau vaiśyau brāhmaṇatām gatau).

(4.) Dhṛiṣṭa.—Of him the Viṣṇu Purāṇa relates, iv. 2, 2 :

“From Dhṛiṣṭa sprang the Dhārṣṭaka Kṣhattriyas.”

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa says, ix. 2, 17 :

Dhṛiṣṭād Dhārṣṭam abhūt Kṣhattram brahma-bhūyam gatam kṣhitau |

“From Dhṛiṣṭa were descended the Dhārṣṭa Kṣhattriyas, who obtained Brāhmanhood⁷⁶ on earth.”

(5.) The last-named Purāṇa enumerates in verses 19 ff. of the same section the descendants of Narishyanta, among whom was Agniveśya, verse 21 :

Tato 'gniveśyo bhagavān Agniḥ srayam abhūt sutaḥ | Kūṇina iti vikhyaṭo Jātūkarnyo mahān ṛishiḥ | tato brahma-kulaṁ jātam Agniveśyāyanaṁ nṛipa | Narishyantānvayaḥ proktaḥ |

“From him (Devadatta) sprang a son Agniveśya, who was the lord Agni himself, and who was also called Kūṇina and Jātūkarnya the great rishi. From him was descended the Agniveśyāyana race of

Brāhmans. The offspring of Narishyanta has been declared." That of Dishta is next taken up.

Some of the names of Manu's sons are repeated in the subsequent narrative. Thus we find a second Prānsu named among the descendants of Nābhāga (Wilson, 352). And in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 2, 2, a second Nābhāga is mentioned as follows :

Nābhāgasyātmajo Nābhāgas tasya Ambarīshaḥ | Ambarīshasyāpi Virūpo 'bharat Virūpāt Pṛishadaśvo jajne tataś cha Rathītaraḥ | tatrāyaṁ ślokaḥ | "ete kshattrā-prasūtā vai punaś chāṅgīrasaḥ smṛitāḥ | Rathītārāṇām pravarāḥ kshattropetā drijātayaḥ" |

"The son of Nābhāga was Nābhāga ; his son was Ambarīsha. From him sprang Virūpa ; from him Pṛishadaśva ; and from him Rathītara ; regarding whom this verse is current: 'These persons sprung from a Kshattriya, and afterwards called Angīrasas, were the chief of the Rathītara, twice-born men (Brāhmans) of Kshattriya race.'"

The Bhāgavata thus explains the circumstance, ix. 6, 2 :

Rathītaraśyāprajāsyā bhāryāyām tantave 'rthitāḥ | Angīrā janayā mūsa brahmatarchasinaḥ sūtān | ete kshetre prasūtā vai punaś tv Angīrasaḥ smṛitāḥ | Rathītārāṇām pravarāḥ kshattropetā drijātayaḥ |

"Angīras being solicited for progeny, begot sons possessing Brahmanical glory on the wife of Rathītara who was childless. These persons being born of a (Kshattriya's) wife, but afterwards called descendants of Angīras, were the chief of the Rathītara, twice-born men (Brāhmans) of Kshattriya lineage."

It will be observed that in this last verse the Bhāgavata reads kshetre prasūtāḥ "born of the wife (of a Kshattriya)," instead of kshattrā-prasūtāḥ, "sprung from a Kshattriya," and thus brings this verse into a closer conformity with the one preceding it. Professor Wilson (p. 359, note) considers that the form given to the legend in the Bhāgavata "is an afterthought, not warranted by the memorial verse cited in our text." It is difficult to determine whether or not this may be the case without knowing which of the two readings in that verse is the original one.

(6.) The Vishṇu Purāṇa next proceeds to enumerate the descendants of Ikshvāku son of Manu. The representative of his line in the twenty-first generation was Harita, of whom it is said, iv. 3, 5 :

" See Prof. Wilson's note in p. 359 on this passage.

Ambarishasya Māndhātus tanayasya Yuvanāśvaḥ putro 'bhūt | tasmād Harito yato 'ngiraso Hāritāḥ |

“The son of Ambarīsha⁷⁸ son of Māndhātṛi was Yuvanāśva. From him sprang Harita, from whom the Hārita Angirases were descended.”

These words are thus paraphrased by the Commentator: “from him sprang the Hārita Angirases, Brāhmins, chief of the family of Harita” (tasmād Hāritā Angiraso dvijāḥ Harita-gotra-pravarāḥ).

The Linga Purāṇa, quoted by Prof. Wilson, states the same thing:

Harito Yuvanāśvasya Hāritā yata ūtmajūḥ | ete hy Angirasaḥ pakṣhe kshattropetā dvijātayaḥ |

“The son of Yuvanāśva was Harita, of whom the Hāritas were sons. They were on the side of Angiras, twice-born men (Brāhmins) of Kshattriya lineage.”

And the Vāyu Purāṇa tells us with some variation:

Harito Yuvanāśvasya Hāritā bhūrayaḥ smṛitāḥ | ete hy Angirasaḥ putrāḥ kshattropetā dvijātayaḥ |

“Harita was the son of Yuvanāśva: (after whom) many persons were called Hāritas. These were the sons of Angiras, twice-born men (Brāhmins) of Kshattriya race.”

This may mean that they were begotten by Angiras, as is said by the Bhāgavata (see above) to have been the case with Rathītara's sons. In that case, however, as Nābhāga and Ikshvāku were brothers and Rathītara was only the fifth in descent from Nābhāga, whilst Harita was the twenty-first after Ikshvāku,—Angiras (if we suppose one and the same person be meant in both cases) must have lived for sixteen generations!

Such are the remarkable notices given in the Purāṇas of the rise of different castes among the descendants of some of the sons of Manu. Vaivasvata the legendary head of the solar line of kings. I shall now add some similar particulars connected with the lunar dynasty.

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa (iv. 6, 2 ff.) Atri was the son of Brahmā, and the father of Soma (the moon), whom Brahmā installed as the sovereign of plants, Brāhmins and stars⁷⁹ (aśeṣhaushadhi-dvijanakṣatrāṇām ādhipatyē 'bhyasechayat). After celebrating the rājasūya sacrifice, Soma became intoxicated with pride, and carried off Tārā

⁷⁹ See Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1865, p. 135 ff.

(Star), the wife of Bṛihaspati the preceptor of the gods, whom, although admonished and entreated by Brahmā, the gods, and rishis, he refused to restore. Soma's part was taken by Uśanas; and Rudra, who had studied under Angiras, aided Bṛihaspati (Angirasaścha sakūśopalabdha-vidyo bhagavān Rudro Bṛihaspateḥ sākūśyam akarot)⁶⁰ A fierce conflict ensued between the two sides, supported respectively by the gods and the Daityas, etc. Brahmā interposed, and compelled Soma to restore Tāra to her husband. She had, however, in the mean time become pregnant, and bore a son Budha (the planet Mercury), of whom, when strongly urged, she acknowledged Soma to be the father. Purūravas, as has been already mentioned, was the son of this Budha by Ilā, the daughter of Manu. The loves of Purūravas and the Apsaras Urvaśī are related in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 1, 1;⁶¹ in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, iv. 6, 19 ff.; in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 14;⁶² and in the Harivaṃśa, section 26. The Mahābhārata, Ādip. sect. 75, alludes to Purūravas as having been engaged in a contest with the Brāhmins. This passage will be quoted hereafter. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, iv. 7, 1, Purūravas had six sons, of whom the eldest was Āyus. Āyus had five sons: Nahusha, Kṣhatravṛiddha, Rambha, Rūji, and Anenas. The narrative proceeds (iv. 8, 1):

Kṣhatravṛiddhāt Sunahotraḥ⁶³ putro 'bhavat | Kāśa-Leśa-Gṛitsamādās trayo 'syābhavan | Gṛitsamadasya Saunakāś chāturvārṇya-pravarṭtāyitā 'bhūt | Kāśasya Kāśirājaś tato Dīrghatamāḥ putro 'bhavat | Dhanvantariś Dīrghatamaso 'bhūt |

"Kṣhatravṛiddha had a son Sunahotra, who had three sons, Kāśa, Leśa, and Gṛitsamada. From the last sprang Saunaka, who originated the system of four castes.⁶⁴ Kāśa had a son Kāśirāja, of whom again Dīrghatamas was the son, as Dhanvantari was of Dīrghatamas."

⁶¹ This passage is translated by Professor Müller in the Oxford Essays for 1856, pp. 62 f.; and the legend has been formed on the basis of the obscure hymn in the R.V. x. 95, in which the two names of Purūravas and Urvaśī occur as those of the interlocutors in a dialogue.

⁶² A short quotation has been already made from this narrative. See above, p. 158.

⁶³ Both my MSS. read Sunahotra. Professor Wilson has Suhotra.

The Vayu Purāṇa, as quoted by Professor Wilson (V. P. 4to. ed. p. 406), expresses the matter differently, thus :

Putro Ḡṛitsamadasya cha Sunako yasya Saunakaḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ kshatriyās chaiva vaiśyāḥ śūdrās tathaiva cha | etasya vaṁse samudbhūtā vichitraiḥ karmabhir dvijāḥ |

“The son of Ḡṛitsamada was Sunaka, from whom sprang Saunaka. In his family were born Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, twice-born men with various functions.”⁸⁵

Putro Ḡṛitsamadasyāpi Sunako yasya Saunakāḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ kshatriyās chaiva vaiśyāḥ śūdrās tathaiva cha |

“The son of Ḡṛitsamada was Sunaka, from whom sprang the Saunakas, Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras.”

Something similar is said of Ḡṛitsamati (who was the son of a Suhotra, although not the grandson of Kshattravṛiddha) in a following section, the 32nd of the same work, verse 1732 :

Sa chāpi Vitathaḥ putrān janayāmāsa pancha vai | Suhotraṁ cha Suhotāram Gayāṁ Gargāṁ tathaiva cha | Kapilāṁ cha mahātmānam Suhotrasya suta-dvayam | Kāśakaś cha mahāsattvas tathā Ḡṛitsamatir nripaḥ | tathā Ḡṛitsamateḥ putrā brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyāḥ viśaḥ |

“Vitatha was the father of five sons, Suhotra, Suhotri, Gaya, Garga, and the great Kapila. Suhotra had two sons, the exalted Kāśaka, and King Ḡṛitsamati. The sons of the latter were Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, and Vaiśyas.”

The Bhagavata Purāṇa, ix. 17, 2 f., has the following notice of Kshattravṛiddha's descendants :

Kshattravṛiddha-sutasyāsan Suhotrasyāmajās trayāḥ | Kāśyaḥ Kuśo Ḡṛitsamadaḥ iti Ḡṛitsamadād abhūt | Sunako Saunako yasya bahvrichaḥ pravarō muniḥ |

“Suhotra, son of Kshattravṛiddha, had three sons, Kāśya, Kuśa, and Ḡṛitsamada. From the last sprang Sunaka, and from him Saunaka, the eminent Muni, versed in the Rig-veda.”

⁸⁵ On this Professor Wilson remarks, note, p. 406 : “The existence of but one caste in the age of purity, however incompatible with the legend which ascribes the origin of the four tribes to Brahmā, is everywhere admitted. Their separation is assigned to different individuals, whether accurately to any one may be doubted ; but the notion indicates that the distinction was of a social or political character.”

It is to be observed that this Gṛitsamada, who is here described as belonging to the regal lineage of Purūravas, is the reputed rishi of many hymns in the second Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda. Regarding him the Commentator Sāyaṇa has the following remarks in his introduction to that Maṇḍala :

Maṇḍala-drashṭā Gṛitsamadaḥ ṛishiḥ | sa cha pūrvam Āngirasa-kule Sunahotrasya putraḥ san yajña-kāle 'surair gṛihītaḥ Indreṇa mochitaḥ | paśchāt tad-vachanenaiva Bhṛigu-kule Sunaka-putro Gṛitsamada nāmā 'bhūt | tathā chānukramaṇikā "Yañ Āngirasaḥ Saunahotro bhūtvā Bhārgavaḥ Saunako 'bhavat sa Gṛitsamado dritiyam maṇḍalam apaśyad" iti | tathā tasyaiva Saunakasya vachanam ṛishy-anukramaṇe "tram Agne" iti | "Gṛitsamadaḥ Saunako Bhṛigutām gataḥ | Saunahotro prakṛityā tu yaḥ Āngirasa uchyate" iti | tasmād maṇḍala-drashṭā Saunako Gṛitsamadaḥ ṛishiḥ |

"The seer (i.e. he who received the revelation) of this Maṇḍala was the rishi Gṛitsamada. He, being formerly the son of Sunahotra in the family of the Āngirases, was seized by the Asuras at the time of sacrifice and rescued by Indra. Afterwards, by the command of that god, he became the person named Gṛitsamada, son of Sunaka, in the family of Bhṛigu. Thus the Anukramaṇikā (Index to the Rig-veda) says of him : 'That Gṛitsamada, who, having been an Āngirasa, and son of Sunahotra, became a Bhārgava and son of Sunaka, saw the second Maṇḍala.' So, too, the same Saunaka says in his Ṛishi-anukramaṇa regarding the Maṇḍala beginning with 'Thou, o Agni' :—' Gṛitsamada son of Sunaka who is declared to have been naturally an Āngirasa, and the son of Sunahotra, became a Bhṛigu.' Hence the seer of the Maṇḍala is the rishi Gṛitsamada son of Sunaka."

It will be noticed that (unless we are to suppose a different Gṛitsamada to be intended in each case) there is a discrepancy between the Purāṇas on the one hand, and Sāyaṇa and the Anukramaṇikā on the other ; as the Purāṇas make Gṛitsamada the son of Sunahotra or Sunahotra, and the father of Sunaka ; whilst the Anukramaṇikā, followed by Sāyaṇa, represents the same personage as having been, indeed, originally the son of Sunahotra of the race of Angiras, but as having afterwards become, by what process does not appear, the son of Sunaka of the race of Bhṛigu.

In his translation of the Rig-veda (ii. 207 f.) Professor Wilson refers to a legend about King Vītahavya in the Anuśāsana-parvan of the Ma-hābhārata (verses 1944–2006) which gives a different account of Gṛitsamada's parentage. It begins: Sṛiṇu rājān yathā rājā Vītahavyo mahāyusāḥ | rājarshir durlabham prāpto brāhmaṇyaṁ loka-satkrītam | "Hear, o king, how the renowned Vītahavya, the royal rishi, attained the condition of Brāhmaṇhood venerated by mankind, and so difficult to be acquired." It happened that Divodāsa, King of Kāśī (Benares) was attacked by the sons of Vītahavya, and all his family slain by them in battle. The afflicted monarch thereupon resorted to the sage Bhārādvāja, who performed for him a sacrifice in consequence of which a son named Pratardana was born to him. Pratardana, becoming an accomplished warrior, was sent by his father to take vengeance on the Vītahavyas. They rained upon him showers of arrows and other missiles, "as clouds pour down upon the Himālaya"⁸⁶ (abhyavarshanta rājānam himavantam ivāmbudāḥ); but he destroyed them all, and "they lay with their bodies besmeared with blood, like kinsuka-trees⁸⁷ cut down" (apatan rudhirūdrāṅgā nikṛittā iva kiṁśukāḥ). Vītahavya himself had now to fly to another sage, Bhṛigu, who promised him protection. The avenger Pratardana, however, followed and demanded that the refugee should be delivered up:

Asyedānīm badhād adya bhaviṣhyāmy anṛiṇaḥ pituḥ | tam uvācha kṛipāviṣṭo Bhṛigur dharma-bhṛitām varāḥ | "nehāsti kṣhattriyaḥ kaśchit sarve hīme dvijātayaḥ" | etat tu vachanaṁ śrutvā Bhṛigos tathyam Pratardanaḥ | pādāv upasprīṣya śanaiḥ prahṛiṣṭo vākyam abravīt | evam apy asmi bhagavan kṛitakṛītyo na saṁśayaḥ | tyūjīto hi mayā jātīm esha rājā Bhṛigūdvaḥ | tatus tenābhyhanujnāto yayau rājā Pratardanaḥ | yathā-gatam mahārāja muktvā viśham ivoragaḥ | Bhṛigor vachana-mātrena sa cha brahmarshitām gataḥ | Vītahavyo mahārāja brahmarūditvam eva cha | tasya Gṛitsamadaḥ putro rūpenendra ivāparaḥ | "Śakras tram" iti yo daityair nigrihītaḥ kilūbhavat | ṛigrede varttate chūgryā śrutir yasya mahātmanaḥ | yatra Gṛitsamado "brahman" brāhmaṇaiḥ sa mahīyato | sa brahmachārī viprarshīḥ śrīmān Gṛitsamado bhavat |

"Pratardana says: 'By the slaughter of this (Vītahavya) I shall

now, to-day, be acquitted of my debt to my father.' Bhṛigu, the most eminent of religious men, filled with compassion, answered: 'There is no Kshattriya here: all these are Brāhmans.' Hearing this true assertion of Bhṛigu, Pratardana was glad, and gently touching the sage's feet, rejoined: 'Even thus, o glorious saint, I have gained my object for I have compelled this King (i.e. Rājanya) to relinquish his caste.' King Pratardana then, after receiving the sage's salutations, departed, as he came, like a serpent which has discharged its poison while Vīṭahavya by the mere word of Bhṛigu became a Brāhman-rishi, and an utterer of the Veda. Gṛitsamada, in form like a second Indra, was his son; he was seized by the Daityas, who said to him, 'Thou art Śakra' (Indra). In the Rig-veda the texts (śruti) of this great rishi stand first.⁸⁸ There Gṛitsamada is honoured by the Brāhmans (with the title of) 'Brāhmān.' This illustrious personage was a Brahmachārin, and a Brāhman-rishi."

According to the enumeration of Gṛitsamada's family, which follows here, Śunaka was his descendant in the twelfth generation, and Śaunaka in the thirteenth. The story concludes with these words:

*Evam vipratvam agamad Vīṭahavyo narādhipaḥ | Bhṛigoḥ prasādā
rājendra kshattriyaḥ kshattriyarshabha |*

"Thus did King Vīṭahavya, a Kshattriya, enter into the condition of Brāhmanhood by the favour of Bhṛigu."

In the next chapter we shall again notice Vīṭahavya among the Kshattriyas who are declared by tradition to have been the authors of Vedic hymns.

King Divodāsa was the sixth in descent from Kāśa brother of Gṛitsamada. Of him the Harivaṁśa states, section 32, verse 789 f.:

*Divodāsasya dāyādo brahmarshir Mitrāyur nṛipaḥ | Maitrāyaṇas
tataḥ Soma Maitreyās tu tataḥ smṛitāḥ | ete vai saṁśritāḥ paksham
kshattropetās tu Bhārgavāḥ |*

"The son of Divodāsa was the King Mitrāyu a Brāhman-rishi. From him sprang Soma Maitrāyaṇa, from whom the Maitreyas received their name. They, being of Kshattriya lineage, adhered as Bhārgavas to the side (of the latter)."

⁸⁸ If I have correctly interpreted this verse, and if by "first" we are to understand first in order, it does not accurately represent the state of the case: as the hymns of Gṛitsamada only appear in the second Maṇḍala.

The twentieth in descent from the same Kāśa, brother of Gṛītsamada, was Bhārgabhūmi, of whom the Vishṇu Purāṇa says, iv. 8, 9 :

Bhārgasya Bhārgabhūmiḥ | tataś chāturvarṇya-pravṛtṭiḥ | ity ete Kāśayo bhūpatayaḥ kathitāḥ |

“The son of Bhārga was Bhārgabhūmi, from whom the four castes originated. Thus have the kings called Kāśis been declared.”

In two passages of the Harivaṃśa, names identical, or nearly so, are found, but with a different progenitor in each case, in reference to which a similar statement is made. The first is in section 29, verse 1596 :

Veṇuhotra-sutaś chāpi Bhargo nāma prajēśvaraḥ | Vatsasya Vatsabhūmis tu Bhṛigubhūmis tu Bhārgavāt | ete hy Angirasasḥ putrā jātā vaṃśe 'tha Bhārgave | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyā vaiśyās trayasḥ putrāḥ⁸⁹ sahasraśaḥ |

“The son of Veṇuhotra was King Bharga. From Vatsa sprang Vatsabhūmi, and Bhṛigubhūmi from Bhārgava. These descendants of Angiras were then born in the family of Bhṛigu, Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, and Vaiśyas three (classes of) descendants in thousands.”

The second passage is in the 32nd section, verse 1752 :

Sukumārasya putras tu Satyaketur mahārathaḥ | suto 'bhavad mahatejā rājā parama-dhārmikāḥ | Vatsasya Vatsabhūmis tu Bhārgabhūmis tu Bhārgavāt | ete hy Angirasasḥ putrā jātā vaṃśe 'tha Bhārgave | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyā vaiśyāḥ śūdrās cha Bharatarshabha |

“The warrior Satyaketu was the son of Sukumāra, and a prince of great lustre and virtue. From Vatsa sprang Vatsabhūmi, and Bhārgabhūmi from Bhārgava. These descendants of Angiras were then born in the family of Bhṛigu, Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras.”

The parallel passage in the Vāyu Purāṇa, as quoted by Professor Wilson, p. 409, has names which are mostly different :

Veṇuhotra-sutaś chāpi Gārgyo vai nāma viśrutaḥ | Gārgyasya Gārgabhūmis tu Vatsa Vatsasya dhīmataḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyās chaiva trayasḥ putrāḥ sudhārmikāḥ |

“The son of Veṇuhotra was the renowned Gārgya. Gārgabhūmi was the son of Gārgya; and Vatsa of the wise Vatsa. Brāhmans and Kshattriyas were the virtuous sons of these two.”⁹⁰

⁹⁰ In regard to these passages the reader may consult the remarks of Professor

Another son of Āyus (son of Purūravas) was Rambha, of whom the Bhāgavata Purāṇa says, ix. 17, 10 :

Rambhasya Rabhasaḥ putro Gabhīraś chākriyas tataḥ | tasya kshettre brahma jajne śṛiṇu vaṁśam Ancnasaḥ |

“The son of Rambha was Rabhasa, from whom sprang Gabhīra and Akriya. From his wife Brāhmans were born : here now the race of Ancnas” (another son of Āyus).

Of the same Rambha the Viṣṇu Purāṇa says (iv. 9, 8), Rambhas to anapatyō 'bharat | “Rambha was childless.”

Another son of Āyus, as we have seen, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, iv. 8, 1, was Nahusha. He had six sons (V. P. iv. 10, 1), of whom one was Yayāti. The sons of the latter were Yadu, Turvasu, Druhyu, Anu, and Pūru (Ibid. iv. 10, 2).⁹¹ One of these five, Anu, had, as we are told, in the twelfth generation a son called Bali, of whom the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, iv. 18, 1, relates :

Hemāt Sutapās tasmād Balir yasya kshettre Dīrghatamasū Anga-Banga-Kalinga-Suhma-Puṇḍrākhyam Bāleyaṁ kshattram ajanyata |

“From Hema sprang Sutapas ; and from him Bali, on whose wife⁹² Bāleya Kshattriyas (i.e. Kshattriyas of the race of Bali), called Anga, Banga, Kalinga, Suhma, and Puṇḍra were begotten by Dīrghatamas.”

Professor Wilson (p. 445, note 12) quotes from the Vāyu Purāṇa a statement regarding the same person that he had “sons who founded the four castes” (putrān chāturvarṇya-karūn) ; and refers to a passage in the Matsya Purāṇa, in which Bali is said to have obtained from

Wilson, p. 409, note 16, where a commentator (on the Brāhma Purāṇa, or the Hari-vaṁśa) is quoted, who says that in the passage from these works “another son of Vatsa the father of Alarka is specified, viz., Vatsabhūmi ; while Bhūrgava is the brother of Vatsa ; and that (the persons referred to were) Angirases because Gālava belonged to that family, and (were born in the family) of Bhṛigu, because Viśvāmitra belonged to it” (Vatsasya Alarka-pituh putrāntaram ūha “Vatsabhūmir” iti | “Bhūrgavād” Vatsa-bhrūtuh | “Angiraso” Gālavasya Angirasatvūt | “Bhūrgave” Viśvāmitrasya Bhūrgavatvūt). The Viṣṇu Purāṇa, iv. 8, 6, says that Vatsa was one of the names of Prataḍana, son of Divodāsa, a descendant of Kūsa, and a remote ancestor of Bhūrgabhūmi. See however Professor Wilson’s note 13, p. 408. It is possible that the resemblance of the word Bhūrga to Bhūrgava may have occasioned the descendants of the former to be connected with the family of Bhṛigu.

Brahmā the boon that he should “establish the four fixed castes” (chaturō niyatān varṇāṃs tvaṃ sthāpayeti).

The Harivaṃśa gives the following account of Bali, in the course of which the same thing is stated; section 31, verses 1682 ff.:

*Phenūt tu Sutapā jajne sutaḥ Sutapasō Baliḥ | jāto mānusha-yonau tu
sa rājā kānchaneshudhiḥ | mahāyogī sa tu Balir babhūva nṛipatiḥ purā |

śāntim parāṃ yayau | tasyaite tanayāḥ sarve kshettrajā muni-pungavāt |
sambhūtā Dīrghatapasāḥ Sudeshṇāyām mahaujausaḥ |*

“From Phena sprang Sutapas; and the son of Sutapas was Bali. He was born of a human mother, this prince with the golden quiver; but King Bali was of old a great yogin. He begot five sons, who were the heads of races upon the earth. Anga was first born, then Vanga, Suhma, Puṇdra and Kalinga; such are the names of the Kshatriyas descended from Bali (Bāleyāḥ). There were also Bāleya Brāhmanas, founders of his race upon the earth. By Brahmā, who was pleased, the boon was granted to Bali that he should be a great yogin, should live the entire length of a Kalpa, should be invincible in battle, should have pre-eminence in virtue, should have the power of beholding the whole three worlds, should have a superiority in begetting progeny, should be unequalled in strength, and should comprehend the essential principles of duty. And being thus addressed by the Lord in these words, ‘Thou shalt establish the four regulated castes,’ King Bali attained supreme tranquillity. All these sons, the offspring of his wife, were begotten on Sudeshṇā by the glorious muni Dīrghatapas.”⁹³

Apratiratha is recorded as being a descendant of Pūru (another of Yayāti's sons), in the thirteenth generation (Wilson, p. 448). Of him it is related, Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 19, 2 :

Ṛṭeyoḥ Rantināraḥ putro 'bhūt | Tamsam Apratiratham Dhruvam cha Rantināraḥ putrān acāpa | Apratirathāt Kaṇvaḥ | tasyāpi Medhātithiḥ | yataḥ Kaṇvāyanā dvijā babhūbhuh | Tamsor Anilas tato Dushyantādyaś chatvāraḥ putrā babhūruḥ | Dushyantācch chakrarartti Bharato 'bharat |

"Ṛṭeyu had a son Rantināra, who had Tansu, Apratiratha and Dhruva for his sons. From Apratiratha sprang Kaṇva. His son was Medhātithi; from whom the Kāṇvāyana Brāhmins were descended. From Tansu sprang Anila, who had four sons, Dushyanta, and others. From Dushyanta sprang the emperor Bharata."

With some variations the Bhāgavata Purāṇa says, ix. 20, 1 :

Pūrora vaṁśam pravakṣyāmi yatra jāto 'si Bhārata | yatra rājārshayo vaṁsyā brahma-vaṁśyaś cha jajnire | . . . 6. Ṛṭeyoḥ Rantibhāro 'bhūt trayas tasyātmaḥ nṛipa | Sumatir Dhruvo 'pratirathaḥ Kaṇvo 'pratirathāmajaḥ | tasya Medhātithis tasmāt Praskaṇvādya dvijātayaḥ | putro 'bhūt Sumater Raibhyo Dushyantas tat-suto mataḥ |

"I shall declare the race of Pūru from which thou hast sprung, o Bhārata; and in which there have been born royal rishis, and men of Brahmanical family . . . 6. From Ṛṭeyu sprang Rantibhāra; who had three sons, Sumati, Dhruva, and Apratiratha. Kaṇva was the son of the last; and the son of Kaṇva was Medhātithi, from whom the Praskaṇvas and other Brāhmins were descended."

A little further on, in the chapter of the Vishṇu Purāṇa just quoted (iv. 19, 10), Kaṇva and Medhātithi are mentioned as having had a different parentage from that before assigned, viz., as being the son and grandson of Ajamiḍha, who was a descendant in the ninth generation of Tansu, the brother of Apratiratha :

Ajamiḍhāt Kaṇvaḥ | Kaṇvād Medhātithir yataḥ Kāṇvāyanā dvijāḥ | Ajamiḍhasyānyaḥ putro Bṛihadishuḥ |

"From Ajamiḍha sprang Kaṇva: from Kaṇva Medhātithi, from whom were descended the Kāṇvāyana Brāhmins. Ajamiḍha had another son Bṛihadishu."⁶⁴

On this last passage Professor Wilson observes, p. 452, note : "The copies agree in this reading, yet it can scarcely be correct. Kaṇva has already been noticed as the son of Apratiratha." But the compiler of the Purāṇa may here be merely repeating the discordant accounts which he found in the older authorities which he had before him.

Regarding Ajamīdha the Bhāgavata says, ix. 21, 21 :

Ajamīdhasya vaṁśyāḥ syuḥ Priyamedhādayo dvijāḥ | Ajamīdhād Bṛihadishuḥ |

"Priyamedha and other Brāhmins were descendants of Ajamīdha. From Ajamīdha sprang Bṛihadishu."

The Viṣṇu Purāṇa (iv. 19, 16) gives the following account of Mudgala, a descendant of Ajamīdha in the seventh generation :

Mudgalāccha Maudgalyāḥ kṣhattropetā dvijātayo babhūvuh | Mudgalād Bahvaśvo Bahvaśvād Divodāso 'halyā cha mithunam abhūt | Saradvato 'halyāyām Sātānando 'bharat |

"From Mudgala were descended the Maudgalya Brāhmins of Kshatriya stock. From Mudgala sprang Bahvaśva; from him again twins, Divodāsa and Ahalyā. Sātānanda was born to Saradvat⁶⁵ by Ahalyā."

Similarly the Bhāgavata Purāṇa says, ix. 21, 33 f. :

Mudgalād brahma nirṛitām gotram Maudgalya-sanjñitam | mithunam Mudgalād Bhārmīyād Divodāsaḥ pumān abhūt | Ahalyā kanyakā yasyām Sātānandas tu Gautamāt |

"From Mudgala sprang Brāhmins, the family called Maudgalyas. To the same father, who was son of Bharmyaśva, were born twins, Divodāsa, a male, and Ahalyā, a female child, who bore Sātānanda to Gautama."

The words of the Matsya Purāṇa on the same subject, as quoted by Professor Wilson, p. 454, note 50, are :

Mudgalasyāpi Maudgalyāḥ kṣhattropetā dvijātāyāḥ | ete hy Angirasaḥ pakshe saṁsthitāḥ Kaṇva-Mudgalāḥ |

"From Mudgala sprang the Maudgalyas, Brāhmins of Kshatriya stock. These Kaṇva and Mudgalas stood on the side of Angiras."

a third consisting of Nīla, etc., and a fourth consisting of Riksha, etc." The last two sons of Ajamīdha are mentioned further on, Nīla in v. 15, and Riksha in v. 18, of the same chapter of the V. P.

The Harivaṁśa, section 32, verse 1781, thus notices the same family :

*Mudgalasya tu dāyādo Maudgalyaḥ sumahāyaśūḥ | ete sarve mahāt-
māno kshattropetū dvijātayaḥ | ete hy Angirasaḥ pakṣaṁ saṁśritāḥ
Kāṇva-Mudgalāḥ | Maudgalyasya suto jyeshṭho brahmarshiḥ sumahāyaśūḥ |*

“The renowned Maudgalya was the son of Mudgala. All these great personages were Brāhmanas of Kshattriya descent. These Kāṇvas and Mudgalas adhered to the side of Angiras. Maudgalya's eldest son was a celebrated Brahman-rishi.”

Regarding Kshemaka, a future descendant of Ajamīdha in the 31st generation, the Vishṇu Purāṇa says, iv. 21, 4 :

ma-kshattrasya yo yonir⁹⁶ vaṁśo rājarshi-satkṛitah | Kshemakam prāpya
rājānaṁ sa saṁsthāṁ prāpsyate kalau |*

“From him (Khaṇḍapāṇi) shall spring Niramitra; and from him Kshemaka; regarding whom this verse (is current): ‘The race, consecrated by royal rishis, which gave birth to Brāhmanas and Kshattriyas, shall terminate in the Kali age, after reaching King Kshemaka.’”

The corresponding verse quoted by Professor Wilson (p. 462, note 24) from the Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇas substitutes devarshi, “divine rishis,” or “gods and rishis,” for the rājarshi, “royal rishis,” of the Vishṇu Purāṇa. The verse in question is there described as anuvāṁśa-sloka ‘yaṁ gīto vipraiḥ purātanaḥ, “a genealogical verse sung by ancient Brāhmanas.”

According to the details given from the Purāṇas in this section several persons, Gṛtsamada, Kāṇva, Medhātithi, and Priyamedha, to whom hymns of the Rig-veda are ascribed by Indian tradition as their rishis, were of Kshattriya descent.

In the line of the same Tansu, brother of Apratiratha, we find in the sixth generation a person named Garga, of whom the Vishṇu Purāṇa relates, iv. 19, 9 :

Gargāt S'iniḥ | tato Gūrgyūḥ S'ainyūḥ kshattropetū dvijātayo babhūvuḥ |

“From Garga sprang Sini; from them were descended the Gūrgyas and Sainyas, Brāhmanas of Kshattriya race.”⁹⁷

Similarly the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 21, 19, says:

Gargūt S'inis tato Gārgyaḥ kshattrād brahma hy avarttata |

"From Garga sprang S'ini; from them Gārgya, who from a Kshatriya became a Brāhman."⁹⁸

The Vishṇu Purāṇa records a similar circumstance regarding the family of Mahāvīryya, the brother of Garga (iv. 19, 10):

Mahāvīryyād Urukshayo nāma putro 'bhūt | tasya Trayyarūṇa-Pushkarīṇau Kapiś cha putra-trayam abhūt | tach cha tritayam api paśchād vipratām upajagāma |

"Mahāvīryya had a son named Urukshaya; who again had three sons, Trayyarūṇa, Puskarin, and Kapi; and these three⁹⁹ afterwards entered into the state of Brāhmans (i.e. became such)."

The Bhāgavata states, ix. 21, 19 f.:

Duritakshayo Mahāvīryyāt tasya Trayyārūṇiḥ Kaviḥ | Pushkarārūṇiṭy atra ye brāhmaṇa-gatim gatāḥ |

"From Mahāvīryya sprang Duritakshaya. From him were descended Trayyarūṇi, Kavi, and Pushkarārūṇi, who attained to the destination of Brāhmans."¹⁰⁰

According to the Matsya Purāṇa also, as quoted by Professor Wilson (451, note 22), "all these sons of Uruksha (sic) attained the state of Brāhmans" (Urukshataḥ sutā hy ete sarve brāhmaṇatām gatāḥ); and in another verse of the same Purāṇa, cited in the same note, it is added: Kāvyānām tu varā hy ete trayāḥ proktā maharshayah | Gargāḥ Sankṛitayāḥ Kāvyā kshattropetā dvijātayah | "These three classes of great rishis, viz. the Gargas, Sankṛitis, and Kāvyas, Brāhmans of Kshatriya race, are declared to be the most eminent of the Kāvyas, or descendants of Kavi." The original Garga was, as we have seen, the brother of Mahāvīryya, the father of Kavi, or Kapi; while, according to the

Garga-vaṁśyavūt S'ini-vaṁśyavūch cha samūkhyūtaḥ | kshattriyā eva kenachit karanena brāhmaṇās cha babhūvuh | "They were called Gārgyas and S'ainyas because they were of the race of Gārga and S'ini. Being indeed Kshatriyas they became Brāhmans from some cause or other."

⁹⁹ Unless Professor Wilson's MSS. had a different reading from mine, it must have been by an oversight that he has translated here, "The last of whom became a Brāhman."

Vishṇu Purāṇa (iv. 19, 9), and Bhāgarata Purāṇa (ix. 21, 1), Sankṛiti was the son of Nara, another brother of Mahavīrya.

The series of passages just quoted is amply sufficient to prove that according to the traditions received by the compilers of the ancient legendary history of India (traditions so general and undisputed as to prevail over even their strong hierarchical prepossessions), Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, and even Vaiśyas and Sūdras, were, at least in many cases, originally descended from one and the same stock. The European critic can have no difficulty in receiving these obscure accounts as true in their literal sense; though the absence of precise historical data may leave him without any other guide than speculation to assist him in determining the process by which a community originally composed for the most part of one uniform element, was broken up into different classes and professions, separated from each other by impassable barriers. On the other hand, the possibility of this common origin of the different castes, though firmly based on tradition, appeared in later times so incredible, or so unpalatable, to some of the compilers of the Purāṇas, that we find them occasionally attempting to explain away the facts which they record, by statements such as we have encountered in the case of the Kings Rathītara and Bāli, that their progeny was begotten upon their wives by the sages Angiras and Dīrghatamas, or Dīrghatapas; or by the introduction of a miraculous element into the story, as we have already seen in one of the legends regarding Gṛitsamada, and as we shall have occasion to notice in a future chapter in the account of Viśvāmitra.

CHAPTER III.

ON THE MUTUAL RELATIONS OF THE DIFFERENT CLASSES OF INDIAN SOCIETY ACCORDING TO THE HYMNS OF THE RIG-AND ATHARVA-VEDAS.

In the last chapter I have attempted to shew that in general the authors of the hymns of the Rig-veda regarded the whole of the Aryan people, embracing not only the priests and chiefs, but the middle classes also of the population, as descended from one common father, or ancestor, whom they designate by the name of Manu. This reference to a common progenitor excludes, of course, the supposition that the writers by whom it is made could have had any belief in the myth which became afterwards current among their countrymen, that their nation consisted of four castes, differing naturally in dignity, and separately created by Brahmā.

In that chapter I proposed to leave for further consideration any specific notices which the Rig-veda might contain regarding the different classes of which the society contemporary with its composition was made up. On this consideration I now enter. As that great collection of hymns embodies numerous references, both to the authors themselves and to the other agents in the celebration of divine worship, it may be expected to supply, incidentally or indirectly, at least, some information respecting the opinion which these ministers of religion entertained of themselves, and of the ecclesiastical and civil relations in which they stood to the other sections of the community. I shall now endeavour to shew how far this expectation is justified by an examination of the Rig-veda.

It will be understood, from what I have already (pp. 7 and 11 ff.) written on the subject of that one hymn of the Rig-veda in which the four castes are distinctly specified, i.e. the Purusha Sūkta, that in the enquiry, which I am now about to undertake, I confine myself in the first instance to those hymns which for any reason (see p. 4, above) appear to be the most ancient, leaving out of account until afterwards, all those compositions which, like the one just mentioned, are presumably of a later age.

It will, I think, be found on investigation that not only the older hymns, but the great bulk of the hymns, supply no distinct evidence of the existence of a well defined and developed caste-system at the time when they were composed.

SECT. I.—On the signification of the words brāhmān, brāhmana, etc., in the Rig-veda.

As the Rig-veda Sanhitā is made up almost entirely of hymns in praise of the gods, it was not to be anticipated that it should furnish any systematic or detailed explanations on the points which form the object of our enquiry. But as was natural in compositions of the early and simple age to which these hymns belong, they do not always confine themselves to matters strictly connected with their principal subject, but indulge in occasional references to the names, families, personal merits, qualifications, relations, circumstances, and fortunes of the poets by whom they were produced, or of their patrons or other contemporaries, or of their predecessors.

I have, in another volume of this work,¹ enquired into the views which the authors of the hymns appear to have held on the subject of their own authorship. The conclusion at which I arrived was, that they did not in general look upon their compositions as divinely inspired, since they frequently speak of them as the productions of their own minds (vol. iii. pp. 128-140). But although this is most commonly the case (and especially, as we may conjecture, in regard to the older hymns), there is no doubt that they also attached a high value to these productions, which they describe as being acceptable to the gods (R.V. v. 45, 4; v. 85, 1; vii. 26, 1, 2; x. 23, 6; x. 54, 6; x. 105,

8), whose activity they stimulated (iii. 34, 1; vii. 19, 11), and whose blessing they drew down. In some of the hymns a supernatural character or insight is claimed for the rishis (i. 179, 2; vii. 76, 4; iii. 53, 9; vii. 33, 11 ff.; vii. 87, 4; vii. 88, 3 ff.; x. 14, 15; x. 62, 4, 5), and a mysterious efficacy is ascribed to their compositions (vol. iii. pp. 173 f.) The rishis called their hymns by various names, as arka, uktha, rich, gir, dhī, nītha, nivid, mantra, mati, sūkta, stoma, vāch, vachas, etc. etc.; and the also applied to them the appellation of brahma in numerous passages.² That in the passages in question brahma has generally the sense of hymn or prayer is clear from the context of some of them (as in i. 37, 4; viii. 32, 27, where the word is joined with the verb gāyata, "sing," and in vi. 69, 7, where the gods are supplicated to hear the brahma), as well as from the fact that the poets are said (in i. 62, 13; v. 73, 10; vii. 22, 9; vii. 31, 11; x. 80, 7) to have fashioned or generated the prayer, in the same way as they are said to have fashioned or generated hymns in other texts (as i. 109, 1; v. 2, 11; vii. 15, 4; viii. 77, 4; x. 23, 6; x. 39, 14), where the sense is indisputable; while in other places (iv. 16, 21; v. 29, 15; vi. 17, 13; vi. 50, 6; vii. 61, 6; x. 89, 3) new productions of the poets are spoken of under the appellation of brahma.

That brahma has the sense of hymn or prayer is also shown by the two following passages. In vii. 26, 1, it is said: Na somaḥ Indram asuto mamūda na abrahmāno maghavānaṁ sūtasaḥ | tasmai ukthaṁ janaye yaj jujoshad nṛivad navīyaḥ śrinavad yathā naḥ | 2. Ukthe ukthe somaḥ Indram mamūda nīthe nīthe maghavānaṁ sūtasaḥ | yad im̐ sabādhaḥ pitaraṁ na putrūḥ samāna-dakṣhāḥ arase havante | "Soma unless poured out does not exhilarate Indra; nor do libations without hymns (abrahmānaḥ). I generate for him a hymn (uktha) which he will love, so that like a man he may hear our new (production). 2. At each hymn (uktha) the soma exhilarates Indra, at each psalm (nītha) the libations (exhilarate) Maghavat, when the worshippers united, with one effort, invoke him for help, as sons do a father."³ Again in x. 105, 8, it is said: Ava no r̥ijindā śiśhi r̥ichā canema an̥richaḥ | na abrahmā r̥idhag joshati tve | "Drive away our calamities. With a hymn (r̥ichā) may we slay the men who are hymnless (an̥richaḥ). A sacrifice without prayer (abrahmā) does not please thee well."

I have said that great virtue is occasionally attributed by the poets to their hymns and prayers; and this is true of those sacred texts when called by the name of brahma, as well as when they receive other appellations, such as mantra. Thus it is said, iii. 53, 12, Viśvāmitrasya rakshati brahma idam Bhūrataṁ janam | "This prayer (brahma) of Viśvāmitra protects the tribe of Bharata;" v. 40, 6, Gūḥam sūryaṁ tamasā apavratena turīyena brahmaṇā arindad Atriḥ | "Atri with the fourth prayer (brahmaṇā) discovered the sun concealed by unholy darkness;" vi. 75, 19, Brahma varma mama antaram | "Prayer (brahma) is my protecting armour;" vii. 33, 3, Eva id nu kam dūśarājne Sudāsam pravad Indro brahmaṇā vo Vasishṭhāḥ | "Indra preserved Sudās in the battle of the ten kings through your prayer, o Vasishṭhas." In ii. 23, 1, Brahmaṇaspati is said to be the "great king of prayers" (jyeshṭharājam brahmaṇām) (compare vii. 97, 3), and in verse 2, to be the "generator of prayers" (janitā brahmaṇām); whilst in x. 61, 7, prayer is declared to have been generated by the gods (svādhyo ajanayan brahma devāḥ). Compare vii. 35, 7.

Brāhmān in the masculine is no doubt derived from the same root as brāhmān neuter, and though differing from it in accent⁴ as well as gender, must be presumed to be closely connected with it in signification, just as the English "prayer" in the sense of a petition would be with "prayer," a petitioner, if the word were used in the latter sense. As, then, brāhmān in the neuter means a hymn or prayer, brāhmān in the masculine must naturally be taken to denote the person who composes or repeats a hymn or prayer. We do not, however, find that the composers of the hymns are in general designated by the word hymns are unacceptable to Indra, the poet does not add that he is himself a priest, or that he is attended by one, but that he generates a hymn; and the same sense is required by what follows in the second verse. Accordingly we find that Śāyana explains abrahmāṇaḥ by stotra-kīnūḥ, "destitute of hymns." The same sense is equally appropriate in the next passage cited, x. 105, 8. On iv. 16, 9, where abrahmā is an epithet of dasyu, "demon," Śāyana understands it to mean "without a priest," but it may mean equally well or better, "without devotion, or prayer."

brāhmān, the name most commonly applied to them being ṛishi, though they are also called vipra, vedhas, kavi, etc. (see vol. iii. of this work, pp. 116 ff.). There are, however, a few texts, such as i. 80, 1; i. 164, 35; ii. 12, 6; ii. 39, 1; v. 31, 4; v. 40, 8; ix. 113, 6, etc., in which the brāhmān may or must be understood as referred to in the capacity of author of the hymn he utters. So, too, in ii. 20, 4, and vi. 21, 8, a new composer of hymns seems to be spoken of under the appellation of nutānasya brāhmānyataḥ; and in ii. 19, 8, the Ṛitsamadas are referred to both as the fabricators of a new hymn (manma navīyaḥ) and as (brāhmānyāntaḥ) performing devotion.⁵ In three passages, vii. 28, 2; vii. 70, 5, and x. 89, 16, the brāhmā and brāhmāni, "prayer" and "prayers," or "hymn" and "hymns," of the rishis are spoken of; and in vii. 22, 9, it is said, "that both the ancient and the recent rishis have generated prayers" (ye cha pūrve ṛishayo ye cha nūtnāḥ Indra brāhmāni janayanta viprāḥ). In i. 177, 5, we find brāhmāni karoḥ, "the prayers of the poet." The fact that in various hymns the authors speak of themselves as having received valuable gifts from the princes their patrons, and that they do not there allude to any class of officiating priests as separate from themselves, would also seem to indicate an identity of the poet and priest at that early period.

The term brahman must therefore, as we may conclude, have been originally applied (1) to the same persons who are spoken of elsewhere in the hymns as ṛishi, kavi, etc., and have denoted devout worshippers and contemplative sages who composed prayers and hymns which they themselves recited in praise of the gods. Afterwards when the ceremonial gradually became more complicated, and a division of sacred functions took place, the word was more ordinarily employed (2) for a minister of public worship, and at length came to signify (3) one particular kind of priest with special duties. I subjoin a translation of the different passages in which the word occurs in the Rig-veda, and I have attempted to classify them according as it seems to bear, in each case, the first, second, or third of the senses just indicated. This, however, is not always an easy task, as in many of these texts there is nothing to fix the meaning of the term with precision, and one signification easily runs into another, and the same person may be at once the author and the reciter of the hymn.

x. 77, 1. (In this passage, the sense of which is not very clear, the word brāhmān appears to be an epithet of the host of Maruts.)

x. 85, 3. Somam manyate papivān yat sampiṁshanti oshadhim | somaṁ yam brahmāno vidur na tasya aśnāti kaśchana | 16. Dve te cakre Sūrye brahmāno ṛituthā viduḥ | atha ekaṁ chakraṁ yad guhā tad addhātayaḥ id viduḥ | 34. . . . Sūryāṁ yo brahmā vidyāt sa id vādḥuyam arhati |

"A man thinks he has drunk soma when they crush the plant (so called). But no one tastes of that which the brāhmāns know to be soma (the moon). 16. The brāhmāns rightly know, Sūryā, that thou hast two wheels; but it is sages (addhātayaḥ) alone who know the one wheel which is hidden. 34. The brāhmān who knows Sūryā deserves the bride's garment."¹⁰

x. 107, 6. Tam eva ṛishiṁ tam u brahmānam āhur yajnanyaṁ sāma-gām uktha-śāsam | sa śukrasya tanvo veda tisraḥ yaḥ prathamam dakṣiṇayā rarādha |

"They call him a rishi, him a brāhmān, reverend, a chanter of Sāma verses (sāma-gām), and reciter of ukthas,—he knows the three forms of the brilliant (Agni)—the man who first worshipped with a largess."

Even in later times a man belonging to the Kshattriya and Vaiśya castes may perform all the Vedic rites. Any such person, therefore, and consequently a person not a Brāhman might, according to this verse, have been called, though, no doubt, figuratively, a priest (brahmā).

¹⁰ See Dr. Haug's Ait. Br. vol. i. Introduction, p. 20.

x. 117, 7. . . . Vadan brahmā avadato vaniṣyān prīnann āpir aprīnanta abhi syāt |

"A *brāhmān*¹¹ who speaks is more acceptable than one who does not speak: a friend who is liberal excels one who is illiberal."¹²

x. 125, 5. Yaṁ kāmaya taṁ tam ugraṁ kṛinomi tam brahmānaṁ tam ṛishiṁ taṁ sumedhām |

"I (says Vāch) make him whom I love formidable, him a brāhman, him a rishi, him a sage."

This would seem to prove that sometimes, at least, the brāhmān was such not by birth or nature, but by special favour and inspiration of the goddess. In this passage, therefore, the word cannot denote the member of a caste, who would not be dependent on the good will of Vāch for his position.

II. In the passages which follow the word brāhmān does not seem to signify so much a "sage or poet," as a "worshipper or priest."

i. 10, 1. Gāyanti tvā gāyatrīṇo archanti arkam arkīṇaḥ | brahmānas tvā Satakrato ud vaṁśam iva yemire |

"The singers sing thee, the hymnners recite a hymn, the brāhmāns, o Satakratu, have raised thee up like a pole."¹³

i. 33, 9. Amanyamānūn abhi manyamūnair nir brahmabhir adhamo dasyum Indra |

"Thou, Indra, with the believers, didst blow against the unbelievers, with the brāhmāns thou didst blow away the Dasyu."¹⁴

i. 101, 5. Yo viśvasya jagataḥ prānatas patir yo brahmane prathamogāḥ avindat | Indro yo dasyūn adharūn avatīrat . . .

"Indra, who is lord of all that moves and breathes, who first found the cows for the brāhmān, who hurled down the Dasyu."

i. 108, 7. Yad Inḍrāgnī madathaḥ sve durone yad brahmaṇi rūjani vā yajatrā | ataḥ pari ṛiṣiṇāṁ ā hi yūtam athā somasya pibataṁ sutasya |

"When, o adorable Indra and Agni, ye are exhilarated in your own

¹¹ The word here seems clearly to indicate an order or profession, as the silent priest is still a priest.

"Dirghatamas, son of Mamatā, being decrepit in his tenth lustre, (though) a brāhmān, becomes the charioteer of (or is borne upon) the waters which are hastening to their goal."

(Professor Aufrecht understands this to mean that Dirghatamas is verging towards his end, and thinks there is a play on the word "charioteer" as an employment not befitting a priest.)

ii. 39, 1. . . . Ḡṛidhrā iva vrikshaṁ nidhimantam aha | brahmānū iva, vidathe ukthaśāsā . . . |

¹⁵ A distinction of orders or professions appears to be here recognised. But in v. 64, 7, a rishi and a rājan are distinguished much in the same way as a brāhmān and rājan are in i. 108, 7: Sa na jīyate Maruto na hanyate na sṛedhati na vyathate na rishyati | na asya rūyaḥ upa dasyanti na ūtayaḥ rishim vā yaṁ rājanaṁ vā sushūdatha | "That man, whether rishi or prince, whom ye, o Maruts, support, is neither conquered nor killed, he neither decays nor is distressed, nor is injured; his riches do not decline, nor his supports." Compare v. 14, where it is said: Yugaṁ rayim marutaḥ spārha-vīram yūyam rishim avatha sāma-vīram | yūyam arvantam Bharatāya vājāṁ yūyam dhattha rājanaṁ śrushiṁmantam | "Ye, o Maruts, give riches with desirable men, ye protect a rishi who is skilled in hymns; ye give a horse and food to Bharata, ye make a king prosperous." In iii. 43, 6, reference is found to Viśvāmitra, or the author, being made by Indra both a prince and a rishi (kuvid mā gopāṁ karase janasya kuvid rājānam maghavann rjīteḥin | kuvid mā rishim papivāṁsaṁ sutasya).

“Put away that which requires expiation (?). Distribute money to the brāhmāns. . . . 35. Behold the forms of Sūryā. But the brāhmān purifies them.”

x. 141, 3. Somaṁ rājānam avase Agniṁ gīrbhir havāmahe | Ādityān Vishnuṁ Sūryam brahmāṇāṁ cha Brihaspatim |

“With hymns we invoke to our aid king Soma, Agni, the Adityas, Vishnu, Sūrya, and Brihaspati, the brāhmān.”

III. In the following passages the word brāhmān appears to designate the special class of priest so called, in contradistinction to hotṛi, udgātṛi, and adhvaryu.

ii. 1, 2 (= x. 91, 10). Tava Agne hotraṁ tava potram ṛitviyāṁ tava neshṭraṁ tvam id agnid ṛitūyataḥ | tava praśūstraṁ tram adhvarīyasi brahmā cha asi grihapatiś cha no dame | 2. Tram Agne Indro vṛishabhaḥ satām asi tvam Vishnur urugāyo namasyaḥ | tram brahmā rayivid Brahmanaspate tvam vidharttaḥ sachase purandhyā |

“Thine, Agni, is the office of hotṛi, thine the regulated function of potṛi, thine the office of neshṭṛi, thou art the agnidh of the pious man, thine is the function of praśāṣṭṛi, thou actest as adhvaryu, thou art the brāhmān, and the lord of the house in our abode. 2. Thou, Agni, art Indra, the chief of the holy, thou art Vishnu, the wide-stepping, the mother a grinder of corn” (kūrur ahaṁ tato bhishag upala-prakṣhīnī nānā). Unfortunately there is nothing further said which could throw light on the relations in which the different professions and classes of society stood to each other.

adorable, thou, o Brahmanaspati, art the brāhmān, the possessor of wealth, thou, o sustainer, art associated with the ceremonial."

iv. 9, 3. Sa sadma pari nīyate hotā mandro divishṭishu | uta potā nī shīdati | 4. Uta gnā Agnir adhware uta grihapatir dame | uta brahmā nī shīdati |

"He (Agni) is led round the house, a joyous hotri at the ceremonies, and sits a potri. 4. And Agni is a wife (i.e. a mistress of the house) at the sacrifice, and the master of the house in our abode, and he sits a brāhmān."

x. 52, 2. Ahañ hotā nī asīdañ yaṇyān viśve devāḥ maruto mā junanti | ahar ahar Aśvinā ādhvaryavañ vām brahmā samid bhavati sā ahutir vām |

(Agni says) "I have sat down an adorable hotri; all the gods, the Maruts, stimulate me. Day by day, ye Aśvins, I have acted as your adhvaryu; the brāhmān is he who kindles the fire: this is your invocation."

I shall now bring forward the whole of the texts in which the word brāhmāna, which, no doubt, originally meant a son, or descendant, of a brāhmān, occurs in the Rig-veda.²⁵ They are the following:

i. 164, 45. Chatvāri vāk parimitā padāni tāni vidur brāhmanāḥ ye manishinaḥ | guhā trīni nihitā na ingayanti turīyam vācho manushyaḥ vadanti |

"Speech consists of four defined grades. These are known by those *brāhman*s who are wise. They do not reveal the three which are esoteric. Men speak the fourth grade of speech."

This text is quoted and commented upon in Nirukta xiii. 9.

vi. 75, 10. *Brāhmanāsaḥ pitarāḥ somyāsaḥ śive no dyāvā-prithivī ane-
hasā | Pūshā naḥ pātu durityād ritāvridhaḥ . . . |*

"May the brāhman fathers, drinkers of soma, may the auspicious, the sinless, heaven and earth, may Pūshan, preserve us, who prosper by righteousness, from evil, etc."

. vii. 103, 1 (= Nirukta 9, 6). Saṁvatsaram śasayānāḥ brāhmaṇāḥ vrata-chārīṇaḥ | vācam Parjanya-jinvitām pra maṇḍūkāḥ avādishuḥ | 7. Brāhmaṇāso atirātre na some saro na pūrnam abhito vadan-taḥ | saṁvatsarasya tad ahaḥ pari śṭha yad maṇḍūkāḥ prāvṛṣiṇam babhūva | 8. Brāhmaṇāsaḥ somino vācam akrata brahma kṛinvantāḥ parivatsarīnam | adhvaryavo gharmināḥ sishvidānāḥ āvir bhavanti guhyā ke chit |

'After lying quiet for a year, those rite-fulfilling *brāhmaṇas*²⁶ the frogs have (now) uttered their voice, which has been inspired by Parjanya 7. Like brāhmaṇas at the Atirātra soma rite, like (those brāhmaṇas) speaking round about the full pond (or soma-bowl²⁷), you, frogs, surround (the pond) on this day of the year, which is that of the autumnal rains. 8. These soma-offering brāhmaṇas (the frogs) have uttered their voice, performing their annual devotion (brahma); these adhvaryu priests sweating with their boiled oblations (or in the hot season) come forth from their retreats like persons who have been concealed."

x. 16, 6. Yat te kṛiṣṇaḥ śakunaḥ ātutoda pipilāḥ sarpaḥ uta vā śvā-vaḍaḥ | Agniḥ tad viśvād agadaṁ karotu Somaś cha yo brāhmaṇūn āviveṣa |

"Whatever part of thee any black bird, or ant, or serpent, or wild beast has mutilated, may Agni cure thee of all that, and Soma who has entered into the brāhmaṇas."²⁸

“When, o Bṛihaspati, men first sent forth the earliest utterance of speech, giving a name (to things), then all that was treasured within them, most excellent and pure, was disclosed through love. 2. Where-ever the wise,—as if cleansing meal with a sieve,—have uttered speech with intelligence, their friends recognize acts of friendliness; good fortune dwells in their speech.” 3. Through sacrifice they came upon ²⁹ I cannot pretend that I am satisfied with some parts of the translation I have attempted of this very difficult hymn; but I give it such as it is, as the interpretation of the Vedic poems is still to a certain extent tentative. Verses 4 and 5 are explained in Sāyana's Introduction to the Rig-veda, pp. 30 f. of Müller's edition. I am indebted here, as elsewhere, to Prof. Aufrecht for his suggestions.

And one man, seeing, sees not speech, and another, hearing, hears her not; ⁸² while to a third she discloses her form, as a loving well-dressed wife does to her husband. 5. They say that one man has a sure defence in (her ⁸³) friendship; he is not overcome even in the conflicts (of discussion). But that person consorts with a barren delusion who has listened to speech without fruit or flower. 6. He who abandons a friend who appreciates friendship, has no portion whatever in speech. All that he hears, he hears in vain, for he knows not the path of righteousness. 7. Friends gifted both with eyes and ears have proved unequal in mental efforts. Some have been (as waters) reaching to the face or armpit, while others have been seen like ponds in which one might bathe. 8. When *brāhman*s who are friends strive (?) together in efforts of the mind produced by the heart, ⁸⁴ they leave one man behind through their acquirements, whilst others walk about boasting to be *brāhmān*s. (This is the sense Professor Aufrecht suggests for the word ohabrahmānāḥ. Professor Roth s.v. thinks it may mean "real priests." The author of Nirukta xiii. 13, explains it as meaning "reasoning priests," or "those of whom reasoning is the sacred science.") 9. The men who range neither near nor far, who are neither (reflecting) *brāhman*s nor yet pious worshippers at libations,—these, having acquired speech, frame their web imperfectly, (like) female

King Soma,³⁸ unenvious, first gave back the brāhmān's wife; Varuṇa and Mitra were the inviters; Agni, the invoker, brought her, taking her hand. 3. When restored, she had to be received back by the hand, and they then proclaimed aloud, 'This is the brāhmān's wife;' she was not committed to a messenger to be sent:—in this way it is that the kingdom of a ruler (or Kshattriya) remains secured to him.³⁹ 4. Those ancient deities, the Rishis, who sat down to perform austerities, spoke thus of her, 'Terrible is the wife of the brāhmān; when approached, she plants confusion in the highest heaven.'⁴⁰ 5. The *Brahmachārin*⁴¹ (religious student) continues to perform observances. He becomes one member⁴² of the gods. Through him Bṛihaspati obtained his wife, as the gods obtained the ladle which was brought by Soma. 6. The gods gave her back, and men gave her back; kings, performing righteousness, gave back the brāhmān's wife. 7. Giving back the brāhmān's wife, delivering themselves from sin against the gods, (these kings) enjoy the abundance of the earth, and possess a free range of movement."

This hymn is repeated in the Atharva-veda with the addition of ten more verses which I shall quote in the next section.

I shall here state summarily the remarks suggested by a perusal of the texts which I have quoted, and the conclusions which they appear to authorize regarding the relation of the Vedic poets and priests to the other classes of the Indian community at the time when the earlier hymns of the Rig-veda were composed.

First: Except in the Purusha Sūkta (translated above in pp. 9 ff.) there is no distinct reference in the hymns to any recognised system of four castes.

Second: In one text (iii. 34, 9, see p. 176) where mention is made of the Āryan "colour," or "race," all the upper classes of the Indian community are comprehended under one designation, as the Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas as well as the Brāhmanas were always in after-times regarded as Āryas (see above, p. 176.)

Third: The term brāhmāna occurs only in eight hymns of the Rig-veda, besides the Purusha Sūkta, whilst brāhmān occurs in forty-six. The former of these words could not therefore have been in common use at the time when the greater part of the hymns were composed. The term rājanya is found only in the Purusha Sūkta; and kshattriya in the sense of a person belonging to a royal family, a noble, occurs only in a few places, such as x. 109, 3.⁴⁸ The terms Vaiśya and Sūdra are only found in the Purusha Sūkta, although viś, from which the former is derived, is of frequent occurrence in the sense of "people" (see p. 14, above).

Fourth: The word brāhmān, as we have seen, appears to have had at first the sense of "sage," "poet;" next, that of "officiating priest;" and ultimately that of a "special description of priest."

Fifth: In some of the texts which have been quoted (particularly i. 108, 7; iv. 50, 8 f.; viii. 7, 20; viii. 45, 39; viii. 53, 7; viii. 81, 30; ix. 112, 1; x. 85, 29) brāhmān seems to designate a "priest by profession."

Sixth: In other places the word seems rather to imply something peculiar to the individual, and to denote a person distinguished for genius or virtue (x. 107, 6), or elected by special divine favour to receive the gift of inspiration (x. 125, 5).

Seventh : Brāhmāṇa appears to be equivalent to brāhmā-putra, "the son of a brāhmān" (which, as we have seen, occurs in ii. 43, 2), and the employment of such a term seems necessarily to presuppose that, at the time when it began to become current, the function of a brāhmān, the priesthood, had already become a profession.

The Rig-veda Sanhitā contains a considerable number of texts in which the large gifts of different kinds bestowed by different princes on the authors of the hymns are specified, and these instances of bounty are culogized.

Of these passages R.V. i. 125 ; i. 126 ; v. 27 ; v. 30, 12 ff. ; v. 61, 10 ; vi. 27, 8 ; vi. 45, 31 ff. ; vi. 47, 22 ff. may be consulted in Prof. Wilson's translation ; and a version of R.V. x. 107, which contains a general encomium on liberality will be found in the article entitled "Miscellaneous Hymns from the Rig- and Atharva-vedas," in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1866, p. 32 f. The following further texts, which describe the presents given by different princes to the rishis, viz. vii. 18, 22 ff. ; viii. 3, 21 ff. ; viii. 4, 19 ff. ; viii. 5, 37 ff. ; viii. 6, 46 ff. ; viii. 19, 36 f. ; viii. 21, 17 f. ; viii. 24, 29 f. ; viii. 46, 21 ff. ; viii. 54, 10 ff. ; viii. 57, 14 ff. ; x. 33, 4 ff. ; x. 62, 6 ff. ; x. 93, 14 f. are translated in the article "On the relations of the priests to the other classes of Indian Society in the Vedic age" in the same Journal for 1866, pp. 272 ff., to which I refer.

On the other hand the hymns of the Rig-veda contain numerous references to persons who, if not hostile, were at least indifferent and inattentive to the system of worship which the rishis professed and inculcated ; and niggardly in their offerings to the gods and their gifts to the priests. The article to which I have just referred contains (pp. 286 ff.) a long list of such passages, from which I extract the following :

i. 84, 7. Yañ ekaḥ id vidayate vasu marttāya dāsushe | īśāno apratiṣkutaḥ Indro anga | 8. Kadū martyam arūdhasam padā kshumpam iva sphurat | kadū naḥ śusruvad girāḥ Indro anga |

"Indra, who alone distributes riches to the sacrificing mortal, is lord and irresistible. 8. When will Indra crush the illiberal man like a bush with his foot? when will he hear our hymns?"

i. 101, 4. . . . vīṣoś chid Indro yo asunvato vadhaḥ . . . |

“Indra, who is the slayer of him, however strong, who offers no libations.”

i. 122, 9. Jano yo Mitrā-varuṇāv abhidhruḡ apo na vāṁ sunoti akṣhṇa-yādhruk | svayaṁ sa yakṣmaṁ hṛdaye ni dhatte ūpa yad iṁ hoṭrābhir ritārā |

“The hostile man, the malicious enemy, who pours out no libations to you, o Mitra and Varuṇa, plants fever in his own heart, when the pious man has by his offerings obtained (your blessing).”

i. 125, 7. Mā prīṇanto duritam enaḥ ā aran mā jārishuḥ sūrayaḥ suratāsaḥ | anyas teshāṁ paridhir astu kaś chid aprīṇantam abhi saṁ yantu śokāḥ |

“Let not the liberal suffer evil or calamity; let not devout sages decay; let them have some further term; let griefs befall the illiberal (aprīṇantam).

i. 182, 3. Kim atra dasrā kṛiṇuthaḥ kim ūsāthe jano yaḥ kaśchid ahavir mahīyate | ati kramishṭam juratam paṇer asum jyotir viprāya kṛiṇutaṁ vachasyate |

“What do ye here, o powerful (Aśvins)? why do ye sit (in the house of) a man who offers no oblation, and (yet) is honoured? Assail, wear away the breath of the niggard, and create light for the sage who desires to extol you.”

ii. 23, 4. Sunītibhir nayasi trāyase janaṁ yas tubhyaṁ dāśad na tam aṁho aśnavat | brahma-dviṣas tapano manyumīr asi Bṛihaspate mahi tat te mahitvanam |

“By thy wise leadings thou guidest and protectest the man who worships thee; no calamity can assail him. Thou art the vexer of him who hates devotion (brahma-dviṣaḥ), and the queller of his wrath: this, o Bṛihaspati, is thy great glory.”

iv. 25, 6. . . . na asushver āpir na sakhā na jūmir dushprāvyo avahantā id avāchaḥ | 7. Na revatā paṇinū sakhyam Indro asunvatā suta-pāḥ saṁ grīṇite | ā aśya vedaḥ khidati hanti nagnaṁ vi sushtraye paktaye kevalo 'bhūt |

“Indra is not the relation or friend or kinsman of the man who offers no libations; he is the destroyer of the prostrate irreligious man. 7. Indra, the soma-drinker, accepts not friendship with the wealthy niggard who makes no soma-libations; but robs him of his riches, and slays him when stripped bare, whilst he is the exclusive patron of the man who pours out soma and cooks oblations."

vi. 44, 11. . . . jahi asushvīn pra vṛiha aprīnataḥ |

"Slay (o Indra) those who offer no libations; root out the illiberal."

viii. 53, 1. Ut tvā mandantu stomāḥ kṛinushva rūdho adriṇaḥ | ava brahma-dvisho jahi | pādū pañin arūdhaso ni badhasva mahān asi | na hi tvā kaśchana prati |

"Let our hymns gladden thee; give us wealth, o thunderer. Slay the haters of devotion. 2. Crush with thy foot the niggards who bestow nothing. Thou art great; no one is comparable to thee."

It seems evident, then, from these texts (and there are many more of the same tenor), that the irreligious man, the parcus deorum cultor et infrequens, was by no means a rare character among the Āryas of the Vedic age, and that the priests often found no little difficulty in drawing forth the liberality of their contemporaries towards themselves and in enforcing a due regard to the ceremonials of devotion. And if we consider, on the other hand, that the encomiums on the liberality of different princes to the poets and priests which are contained in the passages to which I before adverted, are the production of the class whose pretensions they represent, and whose dignity they exalt, we shall, no doubt, see reason to conclude that the value of the presents bestowed has been enormously exaggerated, and make some deduction from the impression which these texts are calculated to convey of the estimation in which the priests were held at the time when they were composed. But after every allowance has been made for such considerations, and for the state of feeling indicated by the complaints of irreligion and illiberality of which I have cited specimens, it will remain certain that the brāhmān, whether we look upon him as a sage and poet, or as an officiating priest, or in both capacities, was regarded with respect and reverence, and even that his presence had begun to be considered as an important condition of the efficacy of the ceremonial. Thus, as we have already seen, in i. 164, 35, the brāhmān is described as the highest heaven of "speech;" in x. 107, 6, a liberal patron is called a rishi and a brāhmān, as epithets expressive of the most distinguished eulogy; in x. 125, 5, the goddess Vāch is said to make the man who is the object of her special affection a brāhmān and a rishi; in vi. 45 7; vii. 7, 5; viii. 16, 7; and ix. 96, 6, the term brāhmān is applied honorifically to the gods Indra, Agni, and Soma; in iv. 50, 8, 9, great prosperity is declared to attend the prince by whom a brāhman is employed, honoured, and succoured; and in iii. 53, 9, 12; v. 2, 6; vii. 33, 2, 3, 5; and vii. 83, 4, the highest efficacy is ascribed to the intervention and intercession of this class of functionaries.

Again, whatever exaggeration we may suppose in the texts which eulogize the liberality of princely patrons, in regard to the value of the presents bestowed, there is no reason to doubt that the ministers of public worship, who possessed the gift of expression and of poetry, who were the depositaries of all sacred science, and who were regarded as the channels of access to the gods, would be largely rewarded and honoured.⁴⁴

⁴⁴ It is to be observed that, in these eulogies of liberality, mention is nowhere made of *Brāhman*s as the recipients of the gifts. In two places, viii. 4, 20, and x. 33, 4, a rishi is mentioned as the receiver. In later works, such as the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, on the contrary, the presents are distinctly connected with *Brāhman*s. Thus it is said in that work, ii. 2, 2, 6: Dvayāḥ vai devāḥ devāḥ aha eva devāḥ atha ye brāhmaṇāḥ śusruvāṃso 'nūchānūs te manushya-devāḥ | teshāṃ dvedhā vibhaktāḥ eva yajnaḥ āhutayaḥ eva devānām dakṣiṇāḥ manushya-devānām brāhmaṇānām śusruvu-śhām anūchānānām | āhutibhir eva devān prīṇāti dakṣiṇibhir manushya-devān brāhmaṇān śusruvuśho 'nūchānān | te enam ubhaye devāḥ prītūḥ sudhāyām dadhati | "Two kinds of gods are gods, viz. the gods (proper), whilst those *Brāhman*s who have the Vedic tradition, and are learned, are the human gods. The worship (yajna) of these is divided into two kinds. Oblations constitute the worship offered to the gods, and presents (dakṣiṇā) that, offered to the human gods, the *Brāhman*s, who possess the Vedic tradition and are learned. It is with oblations that a man gratifies the gods, and with presents that he gratifies the human gods, the *Brāhman*s, who possess the Vedic tradition, and are learned. Both these two kinds of gods, when gratified, place him in a state of happiness" (sudhāyām); (or "convey him to the heavenly world," as the expression is varied in the parallel passage of the same work, iv. 3, 4, 4). It is similarly said in the Taitt. Saṃh. i. 7, 3, 1: Parokṣaḥ vai anye devāḥ iṣyante pratyakṣam anye | yad yajate ye eva devāḥ parokṣam iṣyante tān eva tad yajati | yad anvāhāryam āharaty ete vai devāḥ pratyakṣam yad brāhmaṇān tān eva tena prīṇāti | atha dakṣiṇa eva aśvā eśā | atho yujnasya eva vīdhīram apīdadhātī yad vai yajnasya kvīram yad vīśīṣṭam tad anvāhāryeṇa anvāharati | tad anvāhāryasya anvāhāryatvam | devadūtāḥ vai ete yad rītviḥ yad anvāhāryam āharati devadūtān eva prīṇāti | "Some gods are worshipped in their absence, and others in their presence. It is to those gods who are worshipped in their absence that the sacrificer offers the oblation which he presents. And it is these gods who are visible, i.e. the *Brāhman*s, whom he gratifies with the anvāhārya (present of cooked rice) which he afterwards brings. Now this anvāhārya is the present (dakṣiṇā) connected with it (the sacrifice). Then he covers over the faults of the sacrifice. Whatever in it is excessive or defective, that he removes by means of the anvāhārya. In this consists the nature of that offering. These officiating priests are the messengers of the gods; and it is the messengers of the gods whom the sacrificer gratifies with this anvāhārya gift which he presents."

It is further clear, from some of the texts quoted above (ii. 1, 2; iv. 9, 3; x. 52, 2), as well as i. 162, 5, and from the contents of hymns ii. 36; ii. 37; ii. 43; and x. 124, 1,⁴⁵ that in the later part of the Vedic era, to which these productions are probably to be assigned, the ceremonial of worship had become highly developed and complicated, and that different classes of priests were required for its proper celebration.⁴⁶ It is manifest that considerable skill must have been required for the due performance of these several functions; and as such skill could only be acquired by early instruction and by practice, there can be little doubt that the priesthood must at that period have become a regular profession.⁴⁷ The distinction of king or noble and priest appears to be recognized in i. 108, 7, as well as in iv. 50, 8, 9; whilst in v. 47, 7, 14, a similar distinction is made between king and rishi; and it is noticeable that the verse, in other respects nearly identical, with which the 36th and 37th hymns of the eight maṇḍala respectively conclude, ends in the one hymn with the words, "Thou alone, Indra, didst deliver Trasadasyu in the conflict of men, magnifying prayers" (brahmāṇi vardhayan); whilst in the other the last words are, "magnifying (royal) powers" (kshattrāṇi vardhayan), as if the former contained a reference to the functions of the priest, and the latter to those of the prince. (Compare viii. 35, 16, 17.)

While, however, there thus appears to be every reason for supposing that towards the close of the Vedic period the priesthood had become a profession, the texts which have been quoted, with the exception of the verse in the Purusha Sūkta (x. 90, 12), do not contain anything which necessarily implies that the priests formed an exclusive caste, or, at least, a caste separated from all others by insurmountable barriers, as in later times. There is a wide difference between a profession, or even a hereditary order, and a caste in the fully developed Brahmanical sense.

⁴⁷ In regard to the great importance and influence of the priests, see Müller's Ano. Sansk. Lit. pp. 485 ff.

Even in countries where the dignity and exclusive prerogatives of the priesthood are most fully recognized (as in Roman Catholic Europe), the clergy form only a profession, and their ranks may be recruited from all sections of the community. So, too, is it in most countries, even with a hereditary nobility. Plebeians may be ennobled at the will of the sovereign. There is, therefore, no difficulty in supposing that in the Vedic era the Indian priesthood—even if we suppose its members to have been for the most part sprung from priestly families—may have often admitted aspirants to the sacerdotal character from other classes of their countrymen. Even the employment of the word brāhmaṇa in the Rig-veda does not disprove this. This term, derived from brahman, “priest,” need not, as already intimated, signify anything further than the son or descendant of a priest (the word brahmaputra, “son of a priest,” is, as we have seen, actually used in one text),—just as the rājanya means nothing more than the descendant of a king or chief (rājan), a member of the royal family, or of the nobility.

The paucity of the texts (and those, too, probably of a date comparatively recent) in which the word brāhmaṇa occurs, when contrasted with the large number of those in which brāhmān is found, seems, as I have already observed, to prove conclusively that the former word was but little employed in the earlier part of the Vedic era, and only came into common use towards its close. In some of these passages (as in vii. 103, 1, 7, 8; x. 88, 19) there is nothing to shew that the Brāhman is alluded to as anything more than a professional priest, and in vii. 103, the comparison of frogs to Brāhmans may seem even to imply a want of respect for the latter and their office.⁴⁵ In other places (i. 164, 45, and x. 71, 8, 9) a distinction appears to be drawn between intelligent and unintelligent Brāhmans, between such as were thoughtful and others who were mere mechanical instruments in carrying on the ceremonial of worship,⁴⁶ which, certainly points to the existence of a sacerdotal class. In another passage (x. 97, 22) the importance of a Brāhman to the proper performance of religious rites appears to be clearly expressed. In x. 109, where the words brāhmān (passim) and brāh- mana (in verse 4) seem to be used interchangeably—the inviolability of Brāhman's wives, the peril of interfering with them, and the blessing attendant on reparation for any outrage committed against them, are referred to in such a way as to shew at once the loftiness of the claim set up by the Brāhmins on their own behalf, and to prove that these pretensions were frequently disregarded by the nobles. In x. 16, 6, the Brāhmins are spoken of as inspired by Soma, and in vi. 75, 10, the manes of earlier Brāhmins are reckoned among those divine beings who have power to protect the suppliant. But in none of these texts is any clear reference made to the Brāhmins as constituting an exclusive caste or race, and nothing whatever is said about their being descended from an ancestor distinct from those of the other classes of their countrymen.

SECT. II.—Quotations from the Rig-veda, the Nirukta, the Mahābhārata, and other works, to shew that according to ancient Indian tradition, persons not of priestly families were authors of Vedic hymns, and exercised priestly functions.

But in addition to the negative evidence adduced in the preceding section, that during the age to which the greater part of the hymns of the Rig-veda are referable, the system of castes had, to say the least, not yet attained its full development, we find also a considerable amount of proof in the hymns themselves, or in later works, or from a comparison of both, that many of the hymns either were, or from a remote antiquity were believed to be, the productions of authors not of sacerdotal descent; and that some of these persons also acted as priests. The most signal instance of this kind is that of Viśvāmitra; but from the abundance of the materials which exist for its illustration I shall reserve it for the next chapter, where I shall treat of the contests between the Brāhmins and the Kshattriyas.

In later times, when none but Brāhman priests were known, it seemed to be an unaccountable, and—as contradicting the exclusive sacerdotal pretensions of the Brāhmins—an inconvenient circumstance, that priestly functions should have been recorded as exercised by persons whom tradition represented as Rājanyas; and it therefore became necessary to explain away the historical facts, by inventing miraculous legends to make it appear that these men of the royal order had been in reality transformed into Brāhman, as the reward of their superhuman merits and austerities—an idea of which we shall meet with various illustrations in the sequel. The very existence, however, of such a word as rājarshi, or “royal rishi,” proves that Indian tradition recognized as rishis or authors of Vedic hymns persons who were considered to belong to Rājanya families. A number of such are named (though without the epithet of rājarshi) in the Anukramaṇikā or index to the Rīg-veda; but Sāyaṇa, who quotes that old document, gives them this title. Thus, in the introduction to hymn i. 100, he says: Atra anukramyate “sa yo ṛishā ’ekonā Vārshāgirāḥ Rījrāśvāmbarīsha-Sahadeva-Bhayamāna-Surādhasaḥ” iti | Ṛishāgiro mahārājasya putrabhūtāḥ Rījrāśvādayaḥ pancha rājarshayaḥ sadehaṁ sūktāṁ dadriṣuḥ | atas te asya sūktasya ṛishayaḥ | uktaṁ hy ārshūnukramanyām “sūktāṁ sa yo ṛishety etat pancha Vārshāgirāḥ viduḥ | niyuktāḥ nūmadheyaiḥ svair api ‘chaitat tyad’ iti ṛicki” iti | “It is said in the Anukramaṇikā, ‘Of this hymn (the rishis) are Rījrāśva, Ambarīsha, Sahadeva, Bhayamāna, and Surādhas, sons of Ṛishāgir.’ Rījrāśva and others, sons of King Ṛishāgir, in all five rājarshis, saw this hymn in a bodily form. Hence they are its rishis (or seers). For it is declared in the Ārsha Anukramaṇī: ‘The five sons of Ṛishāgir, who are mentioned by name in the verse beginning “this praise” (the 17th), know this hymn.’” The 17th verse is as follows: Etat tyat te Indra ṛishne ukthaṁ Vārshāgirāḥ abhi grinanti rūdhaḥ | Rījrāśvaḥ prashṭibhir Ambarīshaḥ Sahadevo Bhayamānaḥ Surādhaḥ | “This hymn the Vārshāgiras, Rījrāśva, with his attendants, and Ambarīsha, Sahadeva, Bhayamāna, and Surādhas, utter to thee, the vigorous, o Indra, as their homage;” on which Sāyaṇa repeats the remark that these persons were rājarshis (etat ukthaṁ stotraṁ rūdhaḥ saṁrūdhaḥ tvat-pṛiti-hetuṁ Vārshāgirāḥ Ṛishāgiro rājnaḥ putrāḥ Rījrāśvādayo ’bhi grinanti ābhimukhyena vadanti | . . . Rījrāśvaḥ etat-sanjño rājarshiḥ prashṭibhiḥ pārśva-sthair anyair ṛishibhiḥ saha Indram astaut | ke te pārśva-sthāḥ | Ambarīshūdayaś chatvāro rājarshayaḥ). Ambarīsha is also said to be the rishi of ix. 98. Again, “Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa, a Rājarshi,” is said by Sāyaṇa on R. V. iv. 42, to be the rishi of that hymn (Purukutsasya putras Trasadasyuḥ rājarshiḥ | . . . atrānukramaṇikā ‘mama dvitā’ daśa Trasadasyuḥ Paurukutsayaḥ). In the 8th and 9th verses Trasadasyu is thus mentioned: Asmākam atra pitaras te āsan sapta ṛishayo Daurgahe badhyamāne | te ā

ayajanta Trasadasyum asyāḥ Indraṁ na vṛittraturam arddhadevam | 9. Purukutsāni hi vām adūśad havyebhir Indrā-varuṇā namobhiḥ | atha rājānaṁ Trasadasyum asyāḥ vṛittrahanaṁ dadathur arddhadevam | 8.

“These seven rishis were our fathers. When the son of Durgaha was bound they gained by sacrifice for her (Purukutsāni) a son Trasadasyu, a slayer of foes, like Indra, a demigod. 9. Purukutsāni worshipped you, o Indra and Varuṇa, with salutations and obeisances; then ye gave her king Trasadasyu, a slayer of enemies, a demigod.” I give Sāyaṇa’s note on these verses: “Purukutsasya mahishī Daurgahe bandhana-sthite | patyāv arājakaṁ dṛishṭvā rāshṭram putrasya lipsayā | yadṛichhayā samāyātān saptarshīn paryapūjayat | te cha prītāḥ punaḥ prochur ‘yajendrā-varuṇau bhṛīsam’ | sū chendra-varuṇāv ishṭvā Trasadasyum ajījanat | itihāsam imaṁ jānann rīshir brūte rīchāv iha” | atha asmākam atra asminn arājake deśe asyām prithivyām vā pitarāḥ pālayitūrah utpādakās te āsann abhavan | ete saptarshayah prasiddhāḥ Daurgahe Durgahasya putre Purukutse badhyamāne dṛiḍham pūśair yasmād asyāḥ asyai Purukutsānyai Trasadasyum āyajanta prādur Indrā-Varuṇayor anugrahāt | “The queen of Purukutsa, when her husband, the son of Durgaha, was imprisoned, seeing the kingdom to be destitute of a ruler, and desirous of a son, of her own accord paid honour to the seven rishis who had arrived. And they, again, being pleased told her to sacrifice to Indra and Varuṇa. Having done so she bore Trasadasyu. Knowing this story, the rishi utters these two verses;” which Sāyaṇa then explains. Similarly Sāyaṇa says on v. 27: “Tryarūṇa son of Trivṛishṇa, Trasadasyu son of Purukutsa, and Āśvamedha son of Bharata, these three kings conjoined, are the rishis of this hymn; or Atri is the rishi” (Atrānukramaṇikā | “Anasvantā shaṭ Traivṛishṇa-paurukutsyau drau Tryarūṇa-Transadasyū rājānau Bhārataś cha Āśvamedhaḥ | . . . ‘na ātmā ātmane dadyād’ iti sarvāśv Atriṁ kechit” . . . Trivṛishṇasya putras Tryarūṇaḥ Purukutsasya putras Trasadasyur Bharatasya putro’śvamedhaḥ ete trayo’pi rājānaḥ sambhūya asya sūktasya rīshayah | yadvā Atrir eva rīshih). The Anukramaṇikā, however, adds that according to some, as “no one would give gifts to himself, none of the princes mentioned as donors could be the author; but Atri must be the rishi.” As the hymn is spoken by a fourth person, in praise of the liberality of these kings, it is clear they cannot well be its authors. And a similar remark applies to iv. 42, 8 f. However, the Hindu tradition, being such as it is, is good proof that kings could, in conformity with ancient opinion, be rishis. Trasadasyu and Trayarūṇa are also mentioned as the rishis of ix. 110.⁵⁰ The rishis of iv. 43 and iv. 44 are declared by Sāyaṇa, and by the Anukramaṇikā, to be Purumīḥa, and Ajamīḥa, sons or descendants of Suhotra (iv. 43, Atrānukramaṇikā 'kaḥ u śaśrat' sapta Purumīḥajamīḥau Sauhotrau tv Āśvināṇi hi | iv. 44, Purumīḥajamīḥāu eva rishī). Though these persons are not said by either of these authorities to be kings, yet in the Viṣṇu and Bhāgavata Purāṇas the latter is mentioned as being of royal race, and a tribe of Brāhmins is said to have been descended from him (see above p. 227). In the sixth verse of iv. 44, the descendants of Ajamīḥa are said to have come to the worship of the Āśvins (naro yad rām Āśvinā stomam āvan sadhastutim Ajamīḥāso agman). The following hymns, also, are said by tradition to have had the undermentioned kings for their rishis, viz.: vi. 15, Vītahavya (or Bharadvāja); x. 9, Sindhudvīpa, son of Ambarisha (or Trisīras, son of Tvasṭri); x. 75, Sindhukshit, son of Priyamedha; x. 133, Sudās, son of Pijavana; x. 134, Māndhātṛi, son of Yuvanāśva (see above, p. 225); x. 179, Sibi, son of Uśinara, Pratardana, son of Divodāsa and king of Kāśī (see above, p. 229), and Vasumanas, son of Rohidaśva; and x. 148 is declared to have had Prithī Vainya⁵¹ as its rishi. In the fifth verse of that hymn it is said: Srudhi havam Indra śūra Prithyāḥ uta stavase Venyasya arkaiḥ | "Hear, o heroic Indra, the invocation of Prithī; and thou art praised by the hymn of Venya." In viii. 9, 10, also, Prithī Vainya is mentioned at the same time with three rishis: Yad vām Kakshivān uta yad Vyaśvaḥ rishir yad vām Dīrghatamāḥ juhāva | Prithī yad vām Vainyaḥ sadaneshu eva id ato Āśvinā chetayethām | "Whatever oblation (or invocation) Kakshivāt has made to you, or the rishi Vyaśva, or Dīrghatamas, or Prithī, son of Vena, in the places of sacrifice, take notice of that, o Aśvins." Here Sāyaṇa refers to Pṛithi as "the royal rishi of that name."

⁵⁰ In the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, as we have seen above, p. 237. Trayyārūṇa, Pushkarin, and Kapi are said to have been sons of Urukshaya, and all of them to have become Brāhmins; and in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Trayyarūṇi, Pushkarārūṇi, and Kapi are said to have all become Brāhmins.

From the details I have supplied it is clear that in many cases the evidence is against the supposition that the princes to whom the hymns are ascribed were in reality their authors. The only instances in which the authorship seems to be established by the tenor of the hymns themselves are those of the Vārshagiras, or, at all events, that of Pṛithi. But, as has been already remarked, the fact that ancient Hindu tradition recognizes royal rishis as the authors of hymns is sufficient to prove that such cases were not unknown. Even if we were to suppose that flattery had any share in the creation of these traditions, it no doubt proceeded upon the belief of those who put them into circulation, that in earlier times the distinction between the priests and other classes was not so sharply defined as in their own day.

I proceed, however, to the case of Devāpi, in which the materials for forming a judgment are more adequate and satisfactory, and prove that he was not merely a rishi but an officiating priest.

In the Anukramanikā, R.V. x. 98 is ascribed to him as its author; and Yāska states as follows in the Nirukta, ii. 10 :

Tatra itihāsam ūchakshate | Devāpiś cha Ārṣṭiṣheṇaḥ S'antanuś cha Kauravyau bhrātaraū babhūvatuḥ | sa S'antanuḥ kanīyān abhishechayānchakre | Devāpiś tapaḥ pratipede | tataḥ S'antanoh rājye dvādaśa varshāni devo na vavarsha | tam ūchur brāhmaṇāḥ "adharmas trayā charito jyeshṭham bhrūtaram antariṭya abhishechitam | tasmāt te devo na varshati" iti | sa S'antanur Devāpiṁ śiśiksha rājyena | tam uvācha Devāpiḥ "purohitas te 'sāni yājayāni cha tvā" iti | tasya etad varsha-kāmasūktam | tasya eṣhū bhavati |

"Here they relate a story. Devāpi son of Rishṭiṣheṇa, and Santanu, belonged to the race of Kuru and were brothers. Santanu, who was the younger, caused himself to be installed as king, whilst Devāpi betook himself to austere fervour. Then the god did not rain for twelve years of Santanu's reign. The Brāhmaṇs said to him: 'Thou hast practised unrighteousness in that, passing by thy elder brother, thou hast caused thyself to be installed as king. It is for this reason that the god does not rain.' Santanu then sought to invest Devāpi with the sovereignty; but the latter said to him: 'Let me be th purohita and perform sacrifice for thee.' This hymn, expressing a desire of rain, is his. The following verse is part of it."

Yāska then quotes a verse of R.V. x. 98, the whole of which is as follows :

"Approach, Bṛhaspati,⁵³ to my worship of the gods, whether thou art Mitra, Varuṇa, Pūshan, or art attended by the Ādityas, Vasus, or Maruts: cause Parjanya to rain for Santanu. 2. ⁵² Compare R.V. ii. 1, 2.

⁵³ It looks as if Agni were here to be understood by Bṛhaspati, see verses 9-12. In R.V. ii. 1, 4 ff. Agni is identified with Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Aṁśa, Tvashṭri, Rudra, Pūshan, Savitṛi, Bhaga.

in thy mouth.' 3. Place in our mouth, o Bṛihaspati, a brilliant hymn, powerful, and spirited, whereby we two may solicit rain for Santanu. The drop full of sweetness has descended on us from the sky. 4. May the drops full of sweetness come down upon us: give us, o Indra, a thousand waggon-loads (of them?). Perform the function of a hotṛi, sacrifice in due form, worship the gods with an oblation, o Devāpi. 5. The rishi Devāpi, son of Rishṭishēṇa, performing the function of a hotṛi, knowing (how to gain) the goodwill of the gods, has discharged from the upper to the lower ocean those waters of the sky which fall in rain. 6. The waters remained shut up by the gods in this upper ocean: they rushed forth when released by the son of Rishṭishēṇa, when discharged by Devāpi into the torrents.⁵⁴ 7. When Devāpi, placed in front of Santanu (as his purohita), chosen for the office of hotṛi, fulfilling his function, kindled (the fire),—then, granting the prayer for rain which was heard by the gods, Bṛihaspati gave him a hymn. 8. Do thou, o Agni, whom the man⁵⁵ Devāpi the son of Rishṭishēṇa has inflamed and kindled,—do thou, delighted, with all the the gods, send hither the rain-bearing Parjanya. 9. Former rishis have approached thee with their hymns; and all (approach) thee, o god, much-invoked, in their sacrifices: give us thousands of waggon-loads: come, thou who art borne by red horses,⁵⁶ to our sacrifice. 10. These ninety-nine thousands of waggon-loads (of wood and butter?) have been thrown into thee, o Agni, as oblations. Through them grow, hero, to (the bulk of) thy former bodies;⁵⁷ and stimulated, grant us rain from the sky. 11. (Of) these ninety thousands give, o Agni, a share to the vigorous Indra. Knowing the paths which rightly lead to the gods, convey the oblation (?) to the deities in the sky. 12. Overcome, o Agni, our enemies, our calamities; drive away sickness, and rakshases. From this great ocean of the sky discharge upon us an abundance of waters."

The fact of Devāpi being reputed as the author of this hymn, and as the purohita and hotṛi of his brother, seems to have led the legendary writers to invent the story of his becoming a Brāhman, which (as men-

Tatrārṣtīṣheṇaḥ Kauravya brāhmanyam saṁśita-vrataḥ | tapasā mahatā rājan prāptavān ṛishi-sattamaḥ | Sindhudvīpas cha rājarshir Devāpiś cha mahātāpāḥ | brāhmanyam labdhavān yatra Viśvāmitras tathā munih | mahātāpasvī bhagavān ugra-tejūḥ mahātāpāḥ | . . . 2287. 2281. "There the most excellent rishi Ārṣtīṣheṇa, constant in his observances, obtained Brāhmanhood by great austere fervour; as did also the royal rishi Sindhudvīpa,⁵⁸ and Devāpi great in austere fervour, and the glorious muni Viśvāmitra, of great austere fervour and fiery vigour." Some other particulars of Ārṣtīṣheṇa are given further on: 2287. "Formerly in the Kṛita age the most excellent Brāhman Ārṣtīṣheṇa dwelt constantly in his preceptor's family, devoted to incessant study; but could not complete his mastery of science or of the vedas.⁵⁹ Being in consequence discouraged, he betook himself to intense austere fervour. By this means he acquired the incomparable Vedas, and became learned and perfect. . . . At the same place of pilgrimage the majestic Sindhudvīpa and Devāpi obtained the great distinction of Brāhmanhood."

It will be observed that here Ārṣtīṣheṇa is, in opposition to the authority of the Nirukta, made a distinct person from Devāpi.

⁵⁸ This prince also, as we have seen above, is mentioned among those Rājanyas who composed Vedic hymns.

In a note to his (French) translation of the Rig-veda, M. Langlois (vol. iv. 502) supposes that the hymn above translated (x. 98), like the Purusha Sūkta, is very much posterior in date to the other hymns in the collection. The names of Devāpi and Sāntanu indicate, he thinks, as the date of its composition, a period not far preceding that of the great war of the Mahābhārata. Professor Weber, on the other hand, considers (Indische Studien, i. 203) that the Sāntanu and Devāpi mentioned in that work (Ādi-parvan, 3750 f.) cannot be the same as the persons alluded to in the Rigveda, because their father was Pratīpa, not Rishṭishena; and because he thinks it doubtful whether a prince who preceded the Pāṇḍavas by only two generations could have been named in the Rig-veda, and appear there as an author of hymns.

*Pratīpasya trayāḥ putrāḥ jajñire Bharatarshabha | Devāpiḥ S'āntanuś
chaiva Vāhlikas mahārathāḥ | Devāpiś cha pravavrāja teshām dharmā-
hitepsayā | S'āntanuś cha mahīm lebhe Vāhlikas cha mahārathāḥ |*

“Three sons were born to Pratīpa, viz. Devāpi, Sāntanu, and Vāhlika the charioteer. Of these Devāpi, desiring the benefits of religious excellence, became an ascetic; whilst Sāntanu and Vāhlika obtained (the rule of) the earth.”

The Harivaṁśa gives a different story about the same Devāpi, verse 1819 :

*Pratīpo Bhīmasenāt tu Pratīpasya tu S'āntanuḥ | Devāpir Vāhlikas
chaiva trayāḥ eva mahārathāḥ | 1822. Upādhyūyas tu devānām
Devāpir abhavad muniḥ | Chyavanasya kṛitāḥ putrāḥ ishṭas chāsīd mahātmanah |*

“Pratīpa sprang from Bhīmasena; and Sāntanu, Devāpi, and Vāhlika were the three chariot-driving sons of Pratīpa. . . . 1822. Devāpi became a muni, and preceptor of the gods, being the adopted son of Chyavana, by whom he was beloved.”

The Vishṇu Purāṇa (iv. 20, 7 ff.) concurs with the preceding authorities in making Devāpi and Sāntanu to be sons of Pratīpa, and descendants of Kuru, and his son Jahnu. It repeats the legend given in the Nirukta of the country of Sāntanu being visited by a drought of twelve years duration, in consequence of his having assumed the royal authority while his elder brother lived. And although, as will be seen, the sequel of the story is widely different from that recorded by the Nirukta, the earlier incidents in the two narratives are so similar, that it would appear to have been the intention of the Puranic writer to identify the Devāpi and Sāntanu whose history he relates with the persons of the same names, although of different parentage, mentioned in Yaska's work. He may, however, possibly have transferred an older legend to more recent personages. The passage of the Vishṇu Purāṇa is as follows:

Nirukta, the earlier incidents in the two narratives are so similar, that it would appear to have been the intention of the Puranic writer to identify the Devāpi and Sāntanu whose history he relates with the persons of the same names, although of different parentage, mentioned in Yaska's work. He may, however, possibly have transferred an older legend to more recent personages. The passage of the Vishṇu Purāṇa is as follows :

have been revered from time without beginning; and when the elder brother has fallen, the younger is no longer chargeable with the offence of pārivettrya (i.e. of marrying before his elder brother). When he had been so addressed, Śāntanu returned to his capital, and exercised the royal authority. And although his eldest brother Devāpi continued to be degraded by having uttered words opposed to the doctrines of the Veda, the god Parjanya rained in order to produce a harvest of all sorts of grain."

Can the compiler of the Purāṇa have deviated from the conclusion of this history as found in the Nirukta, and given it a new turn, in order to escape from the conclusion that a Rājanya could officiate as a purohita?

The same story is briefly told in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 22, 14-17.

In the Udyogaparvan of the Mahābhārata, on the other hand, Devāpi's virtues and orthodoxy are extolled in the highest terms, and his exclusion from the throne is ascribed solely to his being a leper, v. 5054:

*Devāpis tu mahātejās tvag-doshī rāja-sattamaḥ | dhārmikāḥ satya-vādī

"But the glorious Devāpi, a most excellent prince, righteous, veracious, and obedient to his father, was a leper. He was esteemed by the inhabitants both of town and country, honoured by the good, beloved by all, both young and old, eloquent, true to his engagements, devoted to the welfare of all creatures, and conformed to the commands of his father, and of the Brāhmins." [The king his father grew old and was making preparations for the investiture of his successor; but public opinion was opposed to the devolution of the royal authority on a leper, however virtuous]. "The Brahmins and aged men, together with the dwellers both in town and country, all restrained him from the investiture of Devāpi. The king, learning their opposition, was choked with tears, and bewailed his son's fate. Thus Devāpi was eloquent, acquainted with duty, true to his promise, and beloved by the people, but vitiated by leprosy. The Brāhmins forbade the king (to make Devāpi his successor), saying, 'the gods do not approve a king who labours under any corporeal defect.' . . . Perceiving that the king (his father) was hindered (from carrying out his wishes) Devāpi retired to the forest."

*Dilipasya Pratipastu tasya putrās trayāḥ smṛitāḥ | Devāpiḥ Śāntanuś

"The son of Dilipa was Pratipa, of whom three sons are recorded, Devāpi, Śāntanu, and Bāhlika. The sons of the last were the seven Bāhliśvara kings. But the Muni Devāpi was rejected by the people. The rishis enquired: 'why was that prince rejected by the people? what faults were alleged against him?' Sūta replied: 'the prince was leprous, and they paid him no respect. Who knows the designs of the gods towards the Kshattriya race?'"

No more is said of Devāpi in this passage.⁶¹ The Vishṇu Purāṇa has the following further curious particulars regarding him, iv. 24, 44 ff.:

Ikshvāku, filled with the power of intense contemplation (mahāyoga) are abiding in the village of Kalāpa, continuing to exist as seeds in the family of Manu; they shall come hither in the (next) Kṛita age, and re-establish the Kshattriya race. According to this order the earth is enjoyed by the sons of Manu throughout the three ages called Kṛita, Tretā, and Dvāpara. But during the Kali certain persons remain upon earth as seeds (of a future race), as Devāpi and Maru now exist."

According to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 22, 17, it is the lunar race, which had perished in the Kali age, that Devāpi is to restore in the future Kṛita (soma-rañśe kalau naśhte kṛitāu sthāpayishyati).

⁶⁴ I am indebted for an additional copy of this section of the Matsya Purāṇa (of which some account is given by Prof. Aufrecht in his Catalogue, p. 41), to the kindness of Mr. Griffith, Principal of Queen's College, Benares, who, at my request, has caused it to be collated with various other MSS. existing in Benares. I have not thought it necessary to exhibit all the various readings in the part I have quoted.

⁶⁷ Two MSS. have Turavīta.

⁶⁸ This word is divided into two in the MS.

⁶⁹ Two MSS. have, instead, Svaśravas and Tamasyavat.

⁷⁰ Unless some of the words I have taken as names are really epithets, fifteen persons are enumerated here.

⁷² This is the total of several lists, some of which I have omitted.

It will be observed from a comparison of this extract with the details previously given, that some of the rājarshis, or rishis of royal blood, such as Ārṣtishēṇa, Vitahavya, Pṛithu (the same as Pṛithī) are spoken of as belonging to the family of Bhṛigu, while others of the same class, such as Māndhātṛi, Ambarisha, Yuvanāśva, Purukutsa, are reckoned among the Angirases. Viśvāmitra and his descendants are merely designated as Kuśikas without any specific allusion to their Rājanya descent; but Manu, Iḍa, and Purūravas, are distinctly recognized as being as once authors of hymns and Kshattriyas; and, what is more remarkable, three Vaiśyas are also declared to have been sacred poets. These traditions of an earlier age, though scanty in amount, are yet sufficient to show that in the Vedic times the capacity for poetical composition, and the prerogative of officiating at the service of the gods, were not regarded as entirely confined to men of priestly families.

SECT. III.—Texts from the Atharva-veda illustrating the progress of Brāhmanical pretensions.

I have already quoted (in pp. 21 and 22) three short passages from the Atharva-veda regarding the origin of the Brāhman and Kshattriya castes. I shall now bring forward some other texts from the same collection which show a much greater development of the pretensions of the priests to a sacred and inviolable character than we meet in any part of the Rig-veda, if the 109th hymn of the tenth book (cited above) be excepted.

I shall first adduce the 17th hymn of the fifth book, to which I have already alluded, as an expansion of R.V. x. 109.

Atharva-veda v. 17. (Verses 1–3 correspond with little variation to verses 1–3 of R.V. x. 109). 4. Yām āhus “tūrakū eshū vikeśī” iti ducheḥhunām grāmam avapadyamānām | sū brahma-jāyā vi dunoti rāsh-ṭram yatra prūpādi śasah ulkushimān | (verses 5 and 6 = verses 5 and 4 of R.V. x. 109). 7. Ye garbhāḥ avapadyante jagad yach chāpalupyate | virāḥ ye trīhyante mitho brahma-jāyā hinasti tām | 8. Uta yat patayo daśa striyāḥ pūrve abrahmanāḥ | brahmā ched hastam agrahīt sa eva patir ekadhā | 9. Brāhmaṇaḥ eva patir na rājanyo na vaiśyaḥ | tat sūryaḥ prabruvann eti panchabhyo mānavebhyāḥ | (Verses 10 and 11 = verses 6 and 7 of R.V. x. 109). 12. Nāsyā jāyā śatavāhi kalyāṇi talpam

“ 4. That calamity which falls upon the village, of which they say, ‘this is a star with dishevelled hair,’ is in truth the brāhmān’s wife, who ruins the kingdom; (and the same is the case) wherever (a country) is visited by a hare attended with meteors. 7. Whenever any miscarriages take place, or any moving things are destroyed, whenever men slay each other, it is the brāhmān’s wife who kills them. 8. And when a woman has had ten former husbands not brāhmāns, if a brāhmān take her hand (i.e. marry her), it is he alone who is her husband. 9. It is a Brāhmaṇ only that is a husband, and not a Rājanya or a Vaiśya. That (truth) the Sun goes forward proclaiming to the five classes of men (pañcabhyo mānavebhyah), 12. His (the king’s) wife does not repose opulent (śatavāhi) and handsome upon her bed in that kingdom where a brāhmān’s wife is foolishly shut up. 13. A son with large ears (vikārṇaḥ) and broad head is not born in the house in that kingdom, etc. 14. A charioteer with golden neckchain does not march before the king’s hosts⁷³ in that kingdom, etc. 15. A white horse with black ears does not make a show yoked to his (the king’s) chariot in that kingdom, etc. 16. There is no pond with blossoming lotuses⁷⁴ in his (the king’s) grounds in that kingdom where, etc. 17. His (the king’s) brindled cow is not milked by his milkmen in that kingdom, etc. 18. His (the king’s) milch cow does not thrive, nor does his ox endure the yoke, in that country where a Brāhmaṇ passes the night wretchedly without his wife.”

This hymn appears to show that, however extravagant the pretensions of the Brāhmāns were in other respects, they had, even at the comparatively late period when it was composed, but little regard to the purity of the sacerdotal blood, as they not only intermarried with women of their own order, or even with women who had previously lived single, but were in the habit of forming unions with the widows of Rājanyas or Vaiśyas,⁷⁵ if they did not even take possession of the wives of such men while they were alive.⁷⁶ Even if we suppose these women to have belonged to priestly families, this would only show that it was no uncommon thing for females of that class to be married to Rājanyas or Vaiśyas—a fact which would, of course, imply that the caste system was either laxly observed, or only beginning to be introduced among the Indians of the earlier Vedic age. That, agreeably to ancient tradition, Brāhmins intermarried with Rājanya women at the period in question, is also distinctly shewn

⁷⁶ This latter supposition derives a certain support from the emphasis with which the two verses in question (A. V. v. 17, 8, 9) assert that the Brāhman was the only true husband. Whence, it may be asked, the necessity for this strong and repeated asseveration, if the Rājanya and Vaiśya husbands were not still alive, and prepared to claim the restoration of their wives? The verses are, however, explicable without this supposition.

It is to be observed, however, that no mention is here made of S'ūdras as a class with which Brāhmins intermarried. S'ūdras were not Āryas, like the three upper classes. This distinction is recognised in the following verse of the A.V. xix. 62, 1: "Make me dear to gods, dear to princes, dear to every one who beholds me, both to S'ūdra and to Ārya." (Unless we are to suppose that both here and in xix. 32, 8, ārya = a Vaiśya, and not ārya, is the word). In S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, Kāṇva Sākhā (Adhvara Kāṇḍa, i. 6), the same thing is clearly stated in these words (already partially quoted above, p. 176), for a copy of which I am indebted to Prof. Müller: Tan na sarva eva prapadyeta na hi devūḥ sarveṇaiva sangachhante | ārya eva brāhmaṇo vā kshattriyo vā vaiśyo vā te hi yajniyāḥ | no eva sarveṇaiva samvadeta na hi devāḥ sarveṇaiva samvadante āryeṇaiva brāhmaṇena vā kshattriyena vā vaiśyena vā te hi yajniyāḥ | yady enam s'ūdreṇa samvādo vindet "ittham enam nichukshva" ity anyam brūyūd eshu dīkshitasyopachārah. "Every one cannot obtain this (for the gods do not associate with every man), but only an Ārya, a Brāhman, or a Kshattriya, or a Vaiśya, for these can sacrifice. Nor should one talk with everybody (for the gods do not talk with every body), but only with an Ārya, a Brāhman, or a Kshattriya, or a Vaiśya, for these can sacrifice. If any one have occasion to speak to a S'ūdra, let him say to another person, 'Tell this man so and so.' This is the rule for an initiated man."

In the corresponding passage of the Mādhyandina Sākhā (p. 224 of Weber's edition) this passage is differently worded.

From Manu (ix. 149-157; x. 7 ff.) it is clear that Brāhmins intermarried with S'ūdra women, though the offspring of those marriages was degraded.

See also the stories of the rishi Syāvāśva, who married the daughter of king Rathavīti, as told by the commentator on Rig-veda, v. 61, and given in Professor Wilson's translation, vol. iii. p. 344.

The next hymn, from the same work, sets forth with great liveliness and vigour the advantages accruing to princes from the employment of a domestic priest. पूरोहिता

"1. May this prayer of mine be successful; may the vigour and strength be complete, may the power be perfect, undecaying, and victorious of those of whom I am the priest (purohita). 2. I fortify their kingdom, and augment their energy, valour, and force. I break the arms of their enemies with this oblation. 3. May all those who fight against our wise and prosperous (prince) sink downward, and be prostrated. With my prayer I destroy his enemies and raise up his friends. 4. May those of whom I am the priest be sharper than an axe, sharper than fire, sharper than Indra's thunderbolt. 5. I strengthen their weapons; I prosper their kingdom rich in heroes. May their power be undecaying and victorious. May all the gods foster their designs.

6. May their valorous deeds, o Maghavat, burst forth ; may the noise of the conquering heroes arise ; may their distinct shouts, their clear yells, go up ; may the gods, the Maruts, with Indra as their chief, march forward with their host. 7. Go, conquer, ye warriors ; may your arms be impetuous. Ye with the sharp arrows, smite those whose bows are powerless ; ye whose weapons and arms are terrible (smite) the feeble. 8. When discharged, fly forth, o arrow, sped by prayer. Vanquish the foes, assail, slay all the choicest of them ; let not one escape."

The two following hymns from the same collection declare the guilt, the peril, and disastrous consequences of oppressing Brāhmanas, and robbing them of their property. The threats and imprecations of haughty sacerdotal insolence could scarcely be expressed more energetically.

"1. King, the gods have not given thee (this cow) to eat. Do not, o Rājanya (man of royal descent), seek to devour the Brāhman's cow, which is not to be eaten. 2. The wretched Rājanya, unlucky in play, and self-destroyed, will eat the Brāhman's cow, saying, 'Let me live to-day, (if I can) not (live) to-morrow.' 3. This cow, clothed with a skin, contains deadly poison, like a snake. Beware, Rājanya, of this Brāhman's (cow); she is ill-flavoured, and must not be eaten. 4. She takes away his regal power, destroys his splendour, consumes him entire like a fire which has been kindled. The man who looks upon the Brāhman as mere food to be eaten up, drinks serpent's poison. 5. Indra kindles a fire in the heart of that contemner of the gods who smites the Brāhman, esteeming him to be inoffensive, and foolishly covets his property. Heaven and earth abhor the man who (so) acts. 6. A Brāhman is not to be wronged, as fire (must not be touched) by a man who cherishes his own body. The wicked (?) man who thinks the priests' food is sweet while he is eating it, swallows (the cow) bristling with a hundred sharp points, but cannot digest her. 8. The priest's tongue is a bow-string, his voice is a barb, and his windpipe is arrow-points smeared with fire. With these god-directed, and heart-subduing bows, the priest pierces the scorers of the gods. 9. Brāhmans bearing sharp arrows, armed with missiles, never miss their mark when they discharge a shaft. Shooting with fiery energy and with anger, they pierce (the enemy) from afar. 10. “1. The Sṛinjayas, descendants of Vītahavya, waxed exceedingly; they almost touched the sky; but after they had injured Bhṛigu, they were overwhelmed. 2. When men pierced Bṛihatsāman, a Brāhman descended from Āngiras, a ram with two rows of teeth swallowed their children. 3. Those who spit, or throw filth (?) upon a Brāhman, sit eating hair in the midst of a stream of blood. 4. So long as this Brāhman's cow is cut up (?) and cooked, she destroys the glory of the kingdom; no vigorous hero is born there. 5. It is cruel to slaughter her; her ill-flavoured flesh is thrown away. When her milk is drunk, that is esteemed a sin among the Forefathers. 6. Whenever a king, fancying himself mighty, seeks to devour a Brāhman, that kingdom is broken up, in which a Brāhman is oppressed. Becoming eight-footed, four-eyed, four-eared, four-jawed, two-faced, two-tongued, she (the cow) shatters the kingdom of the oppressor of Brāhmans. 8. (Ruin) overflows that kingdom, as water swamps a leaky boat: calamity smites that country in which a priest is wronged. 9. Even trees, o Nārada, repel, and refuse their shade to, the man who claims a right to the property of a Brāhman. This (property), as king Varuṇa hath said, has been turned into a poison by the gods. No one who has eaten a Brāhman's cow continues to watch (i.e. to rule) over a country. 11. Those nine nineties (of persons) whom the earth shook off, when they had wronged the priestly race, were overwhelmed in an inconceivable manner (see verse 12 of the preceding hymn). 12. The gods have declared that the cloth wherewith a dead man's feet are bound shall be thy pall, thou oppressor of priests. 13. The tears which flow from a persecuted man as he laments,—such is the portion of water which the gods have assigned to thee, thou oppressor of priests. 14. The gods have allotted to thee that portion of water wherewith men wash the dead, and moisten beards. 15. The rain of Mitra and Varuṇa does not descend on the oppressor of priests. For him the battle has never a successful issue; nor does he bring his friend into subjection."

The attention of the reader is directed to the intensity of contempt and abhorrence which is sought to be conveyed by the coarse imagery contained in verses 3, and 12-14, of this last hymn.

There is another section of the same Veda, xii. 5, in which curses similar to those in the last two hymns are fulminated against the oppressors of Brāhmans. The following are specimens:

Atharva-veda, xii. 5, 4. Brahma padarūyam brāhmaṇo 'dhipatiḥ
 5. Tūm ādadānasya brahma-garīm jinato brāhmaṇān kṣhattriyaśya

“4. Prayer (brāhmān) is the chief (thing); the Brāhman is the lord (adhipati). 5. From the Kshattriya who seizes the priest's cow, and oppresses the Brāhman, (6) there depart piety, valour, good fortune, (7) force, keenness, vigour, strength, speech, energy, prosperity, virtue, (8) prayer (brāhmān), royalty, kingdom, subjects, splendour, renown, lustre, wealth, (9) life, beauty, name, fame, inspiration and expiration, sight, hearing, (10) milk, sap, food, eating, righteousness, truth, oblation, sacrifice, offspring, and cattle;—(11) all these things depart from the Kshattriya who seizes the priest's cow. 12. Terrible is the Brāhman's cow, filled with deadly poison. . . . 13. In her reside all dreadful things, and all forms of death, (14) all cruel things, and all forms of homicide. 15. When seized, she binds in the fetters of death the oppressor of priests and despiser of the gods.”

A great deal more follows to the same effect, which it would be tiresome to quote.

I subjoin some further texts, in which reference is made to brāhmāns.

In xix. 22, 21 (= xix. 23, 30) it is said:

*Brahma-jyeshṭhā sambhṛitā vīryāṇi brahmāgre jyeshṭhaṁ divam ātatāna |
bhūtānām brahmā prathamo ha jajne tenūrkhati brahmaṇā sparaddhitūṁ
kaḥ* |

“Powers are collected, of which prayer (or sacred science, brāhmān) is the chief. Prayer, the chief, in the beginning stretched out the sky. The priest (brāhmān) was born the first of beings. Who, then, ought to vie with the brāhmān.”

A superhuman power appears to be ascribed to the brāhmān in the following passages,—unless by brāhmān we are to understand Bṛihaspati :—

xix. 9, 12. *Brahmā Prajāpatir Dhātū lokāḥ vedāḥ sapta-rishayo
'gnayaḥ | tair me kṛitāṁ vastyayanam Indro me śarma yachhatu brahmā
me śarma yachhatu* |

“May a prosperous journey be granted to me by prayer, Prajāpati, Dhātṛi, the worlds, the Vedas, the seven rishis, the fires; may Indra grant me felicity, may the brāhmān grant me felicity.”

xix. 43, 8. Yatra brahma-vido yānti dīkshayā tapasā saha | brahmā mā tatra nayatu brahmā brahma dadhātu me | brahmaṇe svāhā.

“May the brāhmān conduct me to the place whither the knowers of prayer (or of sacred science) go by initiation with austerity. May the brāhmān impart to me sacred science. Svāhā to the brāhmān.”

The wonderful powers of the Brahmachārin, or student of sacred science, are described in a hymn (A.V. xi. 5), parts of which are translated in my paper on the progress of the Vedic Religion, pp. 374 ff.

And yet with all this sacredness of his character the priest must be devoted to destruction, if, in the interest of an enemy, he is seeking by his ceremonies to effect the ruin of the worshipper.

v. 8, 5. Yam amī puro dadhire brahmānam apabhūtaye | Indra sa me adhaspadaṁ tam pratyasyāmi mṛityave |

“May the brāhmān whom these men have placed in their front (as a purohita) for our injury, fall under my feet, o Indra; I hurl him away, to death (compare A.V. vii. 70, 1 ff.).

SECT. IV.—Opinions of Professor R. Roth and Dr. M. Haug regarding the origin of caste among the Hindus.

I shall in this section give some account of the speculations of Prof. R. Roth and Dr. M. Haug on the process by which they conceive the system of castes to have grown up among the Indians.

The remarks which I shall quote from Prof. Roth are partly drawn from his third “Dissertation on the Literature and History of the Veda,” p. 117, and partly from his paper on “Brahma and the Brāhmans,” in the first volume of the Journal of the German Oriental Society.⁷⁸ He says in the latter essay: “The religious development of India is attached through the course of three thousand years to the word brāhmā. This conception might be taken as the standard for estimating the progress of thought directed to divine things, as at every step taken by the latter, it has gained a new form, while at the same time it has always embraced in itself the highest spiritual acquisition of the nation. . . . The original signification of the word brāhmā, as we easily discover it in the Vedic hymns, is that of prayer; not praise or thanksgiving, but that invocation which, with the force of the will directed to God, seeks to draw him to itself, and to receive satisfaction from him. . . . From this oldest sense and form of brāhmā (neuter) was formed the masculine noun brahmā, which was the designation of those who pronounced the prayers, or performed the sacred ceremonies; and in nearly all the passages of the Rig-veda in which it was thought that this word must refer to the Brahmanical caste, this more extended sense must be substituted for the other more limited one. . . . From this sense of the word brahmā, nothing was more natural than to convert this offerer of prayer into a particular description of sacrificial priest: so soon as the ritual began to be fixed, the functions which were before united in a single person, who both prayed to the gods and sacrificed to them, became separated, and a priesthood interposed itself between man and God.”⁷⁹

Then further on, after quoting R.V. iv. 50, 4 ff. (see above, p. 247), Prof. Roth continues: “In this manner here and in many places of the liturgical and legal books, the promise of every blessing is attached to the maintenance of a priest by the king. Inasmuch as he supports and honours the priest, the latter ensures to him the favour of the gods. So it was that the caste of the Brāhmans arose and attained to power and consideration: first, they were only the single domestic priests of the kings; then the dignity became hereditary in certain families; finally a union, occasioned by similarity of interests, of these families in one larger community was effected; and all this in reciprocal action with the progress made in other respects by theological doctrine and religious worship. Still the extension of the power which fell into the hands of this priestly caste would not be perfectly comprehensible from this explanation alone. The relation of spiritual superiority in which the priests came to stand to the kings was aided by other historical movements."

⁷⁹ In his third Dissertation on the Literature and History of the Veda, Prof. Roth remarks: “In the Vedic age, access to the gods by prayer and sacrifice was open to all classes of the community; and it was only the power of expressing devotion in a manner presumed to be acceptable to the deities, or a readiness in poetical diction, that distinguished any individual or family from the mass, and led to their being employed to conduct the worship of others. The name given to such persons was purohita, one ‘put forward;’ one through whose mediation the gods would receive the offering presented. But these priests had as yet no especial sanctity or exclusive prerogative which would render their employment imperative.”

Professor Roth then proceeds: "When—at a period more recent than the majority of the hymns of the Rig-veda—the Vedic people, driven by some political shock, advanced from their abodes in the Punjab further and further to the south, drove the aborigines into the hills, and took possession of the broad tract of country lying between the Ganges, the Jumna, and the Vindhya range; the time had arrived when the distribution of power, the relation of king and priest, could become transformed in the most rapid and comprehensive manner. Principalities separated in such various ways, such a division into tribes as had existed in the Punjab, were no longer possible here, where nature had created a wide and continuous tract with scarcely any natural boundaries to dis sever one part from another. Most of those petty princes who had descended from the north with their tribes must here of necessity disappear, their tribes become dissolved, and contests arise for the supreme dominion. This era is perhaps portrayed to us in the principal subject of the Mahābhārata, the contest between the descendants of Pāṇḍu and Kuru. In this stage of disturbance and complication, power naturally fell into the hands of those who did not directly possess any authority, the priestly races and their leaders, who had hitherto stood rather in the position of followers of the kings, but now rose to a higher rank. It may easily be supposed that they and their families, already honoured as the confidential followers of the princes, would frequently be able to strike a decisive stroke to which the king would owe his success. If we take further into account the intellectual and moral influence which this class possessed in virtue of the prerogative conceded to, or usurped by, them, and the religious feeling of the people, it is not difficult to comprehend how in such a period of transition powerful communities should arise among the domestic priests of petty kings and their families, should attain to the highest importance in every department of life, and should grow into a caste which, like the ecclesiastical order in the middle ages of Christianity, began to look upon secular authority as an effluence from the fulness of their power, to be conferred at their will; and how, on the other hand, the numerous royal families should sink down into a nobility which possessed, indeed, the sole right to the kingly dignity, but at the same time, when elected by the people, required inauguration in order to their recognition by the priesthood, and were enjoined above all things to employ only Brāhmans as their counsellors."

In order to render the probability of this theory still more apparent, Professor Roth goes on to indicate the relations of the other castes to the Brāhmans. The position which the three superior classes occupied in the developed Brahmanical system was one of gradation, as they differed only in the extent of their religious and civil prerogatives, the Kshattriya being in some respects less favoured than the Brāhman, and the Vaiśya than the Kshattriya. With the Sūdras, on the other hand, the case was quite different. They were not admitted to sacrifice, to the study of the Vedas, or to investiture with the sacred cord. From this Professor Roth concludes that the three highest castes stood in a closer connection with each other, whether of descent, or of culture, than any of them did to the fourth. The Indian body politic, moreover, was complete without the Sūdras. The Brāhman and Kshattriya were the rulers, while the Vaiśyas formed the mass of the people. The fact of the latter not being originally a separate community is confirmed by the employment assigned to them, as well as by their name Vaiśya, derived from the word Viś, a word which in the Veda designates the general community, especially considered as the possessor of the pure Aryan worship and culture, in contradistinction to all barbarian races. Out of this community the priesthood arose in the manner above described, while the Kshattriyas were the nobility, descended in the main from the kings of the earlier ages. The fourth caste, the Sūdras, consisted, according to Prof. Roth, of a race subdued by the Brahmanical conquerors, whether that race may have been a branch of the Arian stock which immigrated at an earlier period into India, or an autochthonous Indian tribe.

In his tract on the origin of Brāhmanism, from which I have already quoted (see above, pp. 11 and 14), Dr. Haug thus states his views on this question: "It has been of late asserted that the original parts of the Vedas do not know the system of caste. But this conclusion was prematurely arrived at without sufficiently weighing the evidence. It is true the caste system is not to be found in such a developed state; the duties enjoined to the several castes are not so clearly defined as in the Law Books and Purāṇas. But nevertheless the system is already known in the earlier parts of the Vedas, or rather presupposed. The barriers only were not so insurmountable as in later times." (p. 6). This view he supports by a reference to the Zend Avesta, in which he finds evidence of a division of the followers of Ahura Mazda into the three classes of Atharvas, Rathæsthas, and Vāstrya fshuyans, which he regards as corresponding exactly to the Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, and Vaiśyas of India. The Atharvas, or priests, in particular formed a class or even a caste; they had secrets which they were prohibited from divulging; they were the spiritual guides of their nation, and none but the son of a priest could become a priest—a rule which the Parsis still maintain. From these facts, Dr. Haug deduces the conclusion that the nation of which both the Indo-Arians and the Perso-Arians originally formed a part had been divided into three classes even before the separation of the Indians from the Iranians; and he adds (p. 7): "From all we know, the real origin of caste appears to go back to a time anterior to the composition of the Vedic hymns, though its development into a regular system with insurmountable barriers can be referred only to the latest period of the Vedic times."

I shall furnish a short analysis of some other parts of Dr. Haug's interesting tract. He derives (p. 7) the word brāhmaṇa from brāhmān (neuter), which originally meant "a sacred song, prayer," as an effusion of devotional feeling. Brāhmā was the "sacred element" in the sacrifice, and signified "the soul of nature, the productive power." The Brahmanic sacrifices had production as their object, and embraced some rites which were intended to furnish the sacrificer with a new spiritual body wherewith he might ascend to heaven, and others calculated to provide him with cattle and offspring (p. 8). The symbol of this brāhmā, or productive power, which must always be present at the sacrifice, was a bunch of kuśa grass, generally called Veda (a word alternating with brāhmā), which, at the sacrifice, was passed from priest to another, and given to the sacrificer and his wife. The corresponding symbol of twigs used by the Parsis was called in Zend bāresma, which Dr. Haug considers to have been originally the same as brāhmā (p. 9). As it was essential to the success of these sacrifices that every portion of the complicated ceremonial should be accurately performed, and as mistakes could not be avoided, it became necessary to obviate by an atonement (prāyaścitti) the mischief which would otherwise have ensued; and the priest appointed to guard against or expiate such mistakes, when committed by the other priests—the hotṛi, adhvaryu, and udgātṛi—was called, “from the most ancient times,” the brāhmān (masculine),¹ who was a functionary pre-eminently supplied with brāhmā (neuter) or sacred knowledge, and thereby connected “with the soul of nature, the cause of all growth, the last cause of all sacrificial rites” (p. 10). The office of brāhmān was not one to which mere birth gave a claim, but had to be attained by ability and study. The descendants of these brāhmān priests were the Brāhmans, and the speculations of the most eminent brāhmān priests on divine things, and especially on sacrificial rites, are contained in the works called Brāhmaṇas (p. 12). Dr. Haug considers that no such a class as that of the brāhmān priests existed at the early period when the ancestors of the Hindus separated from those of the Parsis in consequence of religious differences. The few rites preserved by the Parsis as relics of the remotest antiquity closely resemble those of the Brāhmans. Dr. Haug finds that in the Homa ritual of the former (corresponding to the Soma ceremony of the latter) only two priests, called Zota and Raspi or Rathwi, are required, whom he recognises as corresponding to the Hotṛi and Adhvaryu of the latter. So long as the rites were simple, no brāhmān priest was wanted; but when they became complicated and multiform, the necessity for such a functionary arose. And it was only then that the sons of the brāhmāns, i.e. the Brāhmans, could rise through the possession of sacred knowledge, derived from their fathers, to great power, and form themselves into a regular caste. The development of these ceremonies out of their primitive simplicity into the complexity and multiformity which they ultimately assumed must, Dr. Haug thinks, have been the work of many centuries. This transformation must have taken place in the region bordering on the Sarasvatī, where the expansion of the Brahmanical system, and the elevation of the Brāhmans to full spiritual supremacy, is to be sought, before the Indo-Arians advanced south-eastwards into Hindostan proper (p. 14). The ascendancy of the Brāhmans was not however attained without opposition on the part of the kings (p. 18). Dr. Haug concludes by relating the reception of Viśvāmitra into the order of Brāhmans, and by giving some account of the rishis and the several classes into which they were divided.

As the question is generally stated by Dr. Haug in pages 6 and 12 ff., the difference between him and other European scholars is one of age and not of principle, for neither party admits any distinction of race or congenital diversity between the three superior castes or classes.

CHAPTER IV.

EARLY CONTESTS BETWEEN THE BRAHMANS AND KSHATTRIYAS.

I proceed to give some legendary illustrations of the struggle which no doubt occurred in the early ages of Hindu history between the Brāhmans and the Kshattriyas, after the former had begun to constitute a fraternity exercising the sacerdotal profession, but before the respective provinces of the two classes had been accurately defined by custom, and when the members of each were ready to encroach on the prerogatives claimed as their own exclusive birthright by the other.

SECT. I.—Manu's Summary of refractory and submissive monarchs.

I shall begin with the following passage, which we find in the Institutes of Manu, vii. 38 ff., regarding the impious resistance, as the lawgiver considered it, of certain monarchs to the legitimate claims of the priests, and the dutiful behaviour of others.

38. Vṛiddhāṁś cha nityaṁ seveta viprān veda-vidāḥ śuchīn | vṛiddha-sevī hi satatāṁ rakshobhir api pūjyate | 39. Tebhyo 'dhigachhed vina-yaṁ vinītātmā 'pi nityasaḥ | vinītātmā hi nṛipatir na vinaśyati karchi-chit | 40. Bahavo 'vinayād nashṭūḥ rājānaḥ sa-parichhadūḥ | ranasthūḥ api rājyāni vinayāt pratipedire | 41. Veno vinashto 'vinayād Nahushaś chaiva pārthivaḥ | Sudūḥ Paijavanaś⁸⁰ chaiva Sumukho Nimir eva cha | 42. Prithus tu vinayād rājyam prāptavān Manur eva cha | Kuveraś cha dhanaishvaryaṁ brāhmaṇyaṁ chaiva Gādhiyaḥ |

“Let the king constantly reverence ancient Brāhmans skilled in the Vedas, and pure in conduct; for he who always respects the aged is honoured even by the Rākshases. 39. Let him, even though humble-minded, be continually learning submissiveness from them : for a submissive monarch never perishes. 40. Through want of this character many kings have been destroyed with all their possessions ; whilst by humility even hermits have obtained kingdoms. 41. Veṇa perished through want of submissiveness, and king Nahusha, and Sūdas the son of Pijavana, and Sumukha, and Nimi. 42. But through submissiveness Prithu and Manu attained kingly power, Kuvera the lordship of wealth, and the son of Gādhi (Viśvāmitra) Brāhmanhood.”⁸¹

Veṇa is again referred to in Manu ix. 66 f. : Ayaṁ dvijair hi vidvadbhiḥ paśudharmo nigarhitaḥ | manushyānām api prokto Vene rājyaṁ praśāsati | 67. Sa mahīm akhilām bhunjan rājarshi-pravarah purā | varṇānāṁ sankarāṁ chakre kāmopahata-chetanaḥ |

“ This custom (of raising up seed to a deceased brother or kinsman by his widow) fit only for cattle, was declared to be (law) for men also, when Veṇa held sway. This eminent royal rishi, who in former times ruled over the whole earth, having his reason destroyed by lust, occasioned a confusion of castes.”

The legendary history of nearly all the kings thus stigmatized or celebrated can be traced in the Purāṇas and other parts of Indian literature. I shall supply such particulars of the refractory monarchs as I can find.

It will be observed that Manu is spoken of as an ordinary prince ; and that even Kuvera, the god of wealth, is said to have attained his dignity by the same species of merit as the other persons whom the writer eulogizes. I am not aware whether any legends exist to the same effect. Something of a contrary tendency is found with regard to the deity in question in the passage of the Mahābhārata, of which an extract is given above, in p. 140, note 249.

I have not met with any story of Sumukha's contest with the Brāhmins. Some MSS. read Suratha instead of Sumukha.

The name of Sudās, the son of Pijavana, occurs in several parts of the Rig-veda. I shall return to him in relating the contest between Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra. I begin with the story of Veṇa.

SECT. II.—Legend of Veṇa.

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 13, Veṇa was the son of Anga, and the descendant in the ninth generation of the first Manu, Svāyambhuva; the line of ancestors from the latter downwards being as follows: Uttanapāda, Dhruva, Ślishti, Ripu, Chākshusha, the sixth Manu called Chākshusha, Uru, Anga (see Wilson's Vishṇu P. vol. i.). Veṇa thus belongs to a mythical age preceding by an enormous interval that of the descendants of Manu Vaivasvata mentioned in the preceding chapter of this volume; five Manvantaras, or periods of 308,571 years each, having intervened in the present Kalpa between the close of the Svāyambhuva, and the beginning of the existing, or Vaivasvata, Manvantara.

When Vena was inaugurated as king by the eminent rishis, he caused this proclamation to be made on the earth: 'Men must not sacrifice, or give gifts, or present oblations. Who else but myself is the enjoyer of sacrifices? I am for ever the lord of offerings.' 10. Then all the rishis approaching the king with respectful salutations, said to him in a gentle and conciliatory tone: 11. 'Hear, o king, what we have to say: 12. We shall worship Hari, the monarch of the gods, and the lord of all sacrifices, with a Dirghasattra (prolonged sacrifice), from which the highest benefits will accrue to your kingdom, your person, and your subjects. May blessings rest upon you! You shall have a share in the ceremony. 13. Vishnu the lord, the sacrificial Male, being propitiated by us with this rite, will grant all the objects of your desire. Hari, the lord of sacrifices, bestows on those kings in whose country he is honoured with oblations, everything that they wish.' Vena replied: 'What other being is superior to me? who else but I should be adored? who is this person called Hari, whom you regard as the lord of sacrifice? Brahmā, Janārdana, Rudra, Indra, Vāyu, Yama, Ravi (the Sun), Agni, Varuṇa, Dhātṛi, Pūshan, Earth, the Moon,—these and the other gods who curse and bless are all present in a king's person: for he is composed of all the gods.⁵³ Knowing this, ye must act in conformity with my commands. Brāhmans, ye must neither give gifts, nor present oblations nor sacrifices. 14. As obedience to their husbands is esteemed the highest duty of women, so is the observance of my orders incumbent upon you.' The rishis answered: 'Give permission, great king: let not religion perish: this whole world is but a modified form of oblations. 15. When religion perishes the whole world is destroyed with it.' When Veṇa, although thus admonished and repeatedly addressed by the eminent rishis, did not give his permission, then all the munis, filled with wrath and indignation, cried out to one another, 'Slay, slay the sinner. 16. This man of degraded life, who blasphemes the sacrificial Male, the god, the lord without beginning or end, is not fit to be lord of the earth.' So saying the munis smote with blades of kuśa grass consecrated by texts this king who had been already smitten by his blasphemy of the divine Being and his other offences. The munis afterwards beheld dust all round, and asked the people who were standing near what that was. 17. They were informed: 'In this country which has no king, the people, being distressed, have become robbers, and have begun to seize the property of others. 18. It is from these robbers rushing impetuously, and plundering other men's goods, that this great dust is seen? Then all the munis, consulting together, rubbed with force the thigh of the king, who was childless, in order to produce a son. From his thigh when rubbed there was produced a man like a charred log, with flat face, and extremely short. 19. 'What shall I do?' cried the man, in distress, to the Brāhmans. They said to him, 'Sit down' (nishāda); and from this he became a Nishāda. 20. From him sprang the Nishādas dwelling in the Vindhya mountains, distinguished by their wicked deeds. 21. By this means the sin of the king departed out of him; and so were the Nishādas produced, the offspring of the wickedness of Veṇa. 22. The Brāhmans then rubbed his right hand; and from it, when rubbed, sprang the majestic Prithu, Veṇa's son, resplendent in body, glowing like the manifested Agni. 23. Then the primeval bow called Ājagava fell from the sky, with celestial arrows, and a coat of mail. At Prithu's birth all creatures rejoiced. And through the birth of this virtuous son, Veṇa, delivered from the hell called Put⁶⁶ by this eminent person, ascended to heaven."

In another passage, ix. 303, this is qualified by saying that the king should imitate the functions of the different gods: Indrasyaṛkasya Vūyoścha Yamasya Varuṇasya cha | Chandrasyāgneḥ Pṛithivyāś cha tejo vṛttān nṛpaś charet | This expanded in the next verses.

The Harivaṁśa (sect. 5) relates the same story thus, with little variation from the Vishṇu Purāṇa :

"There was formerly a Prajāpati (lord of creatures), a protector of righteousness, called Anga, of the race of Atri, and resembling him in power. His son was the Prajāpati Vena, who was but indifferently skilled in duty, and was born of Sunīthā, the daughter of Mrityu. This son of the daughter of Kāla (Death), owing to the taint derived from his maternal grandfather, threw his duties behind his back, and lived in covetousness under the influence of desire. This king established an irreligious system of conduct: transgressing the ordinances of the Veda, he was devoted to lawlessness. In his reign men lived without study of the sacred books and without the vashaṭkāra, and the gods had no Soma-libations to drink at sacrifices. 'No sacrifice or oblation shall be offered,'—such was the ruthless determination of that Prajāpati, as the time of his destruction approached. 'I,' he declared, 'am the object, and the performer of sacrifice, and the sacrifice itself: it is to me that sacrifice should be presented, and oblations offered.' This transgressor of the rules of duty, who arrogated to himself what was not his due, was then addressed by all the great rishis, headed by Marichi: 'We are about to consecrate ourselves for a ceremony which shall last for many years: practise not unrighteousness, o Vena: this is not the eternal rule of duty. Thou art in very deed a Prajāpati of Atri's race, and thou hast engaged to protect thy subjects.' The foolish Vena, ignorant of what was right, laughingly answered those great rishis who had so addressed him: 'Who but myself is the ordainer of duty? or whom ought I to obey? Who on earth equals me in sacred knowledge, in prowess, in austere fervour, in truth? Ye who are deluded and senseless know not that I am the source of all beings and duties. Hesitate not to believe that I, if I willed, could burn up the earth, or deluge it with water, or close up heaven and earth.' When owing to his delusion and arrogance Vena could not be governed, then the mighty rishis becoming incensed, seized the vigorous and struggling king, and rubbed his left thigh. From this thigh, so rubbed, was produced a black man, very short in stature, who, being alarmed, stood with joined hands. Seeing that he was agitated, Atri said to him 'Sit down' (nishīda). He became the founder of the race of the Nishādas, and also progenitor of the Dhīvaras (fishermen), who sprang from the corruption of Vena. So too were produced from him the other inhabitants of the Vindhya range, the Tukhāras, and Tumburas, who are prone to lawlessness. Then the mighty sages, excited and incensed, again rubbed the right hand of Vena, as men do the araṇi wood, and from it arose Pṛithu, resplendent in body, glowing like the manifested Agni."

Although the Harivaṁśa declares Vena to be a descendant of Atri, yet as the Prajāpati Atri is said in a previous section to have adopted Uttānapāda, Vena's ancestor, for his son (Hariv. sect. 2, verse 60, Uttānapādaṁ jagrūha putram Atriḥ prajāpatiḥ) there is no contradiction between the genealogy given here and in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

The story of Vena is told in the same way, but more briefly, in the Mahābhārata, Śāntip. sect. 59. After narrating the birth of Pṛithu, the writer proceeds, verse 2221 :

Tatas tu prāṇjalir Vainyo maharshīṁs tām urūcha ha | "susūkṣmā me samutpannā buddhir dharmārtha-darśinī | anayā kim mayā kāryyaṁ tad me tattvena śaṁsata | yad mām bhavanto rakṣyanti kāryam artha-samanvitam | tad ahaṁ vai karishyāmi nātra kāryā vicāraṇā" | tam ūchus tattra devās te te chaiva paramarśayaḥ | "niyato yattra dharmo vai tram aśankaḥ samāchāra | priyūpriye parityajya samāḥ sarveshu jantushu | kāma-krodhau cha lobhaṁ cha mānaṁ chotsṛijya dūrataḥ | yaś cha dharmāt parichaleḥ loke kāśchana mānavaḥ | nigrūhyās te sva-bāhubhyāṁ śaśvad dharmam arekṣatā | pratijñāṁ chādhirohasva manasā karmaṇā girā | 'pūlayishyāmy aham bhaumam brahma' ity eva chāsakṛit | . . . adandyaḥ me devjās cheti pratijñāni he vibho | lokaṁ cha sankarāt kṛitsnaṁ trātāsmi parantapa" | Vainyas tatas tām urūcha devān rishi-purogamān | "brāhmaṇāḥ me mahābhūgūḥ namasyūḥ puruṣarṣhabhāḥ" | "evam asti" iti Vainyas tu tair ukto brahmarūḍibhiḥ | purodhās chābharatasya Sukro brahmanāyo nīdhiḥ | mantriṇo Bālakhilyās cha Sārasvatyo gaṇas tathā | maharṣir bhagavān Gargas tasya sāmṛatsaro 'bhavat |

"The son of Vena (Pṛithu) then, with joined hands, addressed the great rishis: 'A very slender understanding for perceiving the principles of duty has been given to me by nature: tell me truly how I must employ it. Doubt not that I shall perform whatever you shall declare to me as my duty, and its object.' Then those gods and great rishis said to him: 'Whatever duty is enjoined perform it without hesitation, disregarding what thou mayest like or dislike, looking on all creatures with an equal eye, putting far from thee lust, anger, cupidity, and pride. Restrain by the strength of thine arm all those men who swerve from righteousness, having a constant regard to duty. And in thought, act, and word take upon thyself, and continually renew, the engagement to protect the terrestrial Brāhmān (Veda, or Brāhmans?) And promise that thou wilt exempt the Brāhmans from punishment, and preserve society from the confusion of castes.' The son of Vena then replied to the gods, headed by the rishis: 'The great Brāhmans, the chief of men, shall be revered by me.' 'So be it,' rejoined those declarers of the Veda. Sukra, the depository of divine knowledge, became his purohita; the Bālakhilyas and Sārasvatyas his ministers; and the venerable Garga, the great rishi, his astrologer."

The character and conduct of Prithu, as portrayed in the last passage presents a strong, and when regarded from a Brahmanical point of view, an edifying, contrast to the contempt of priestly authority and disregard of Vedic observances which his predecessor had shewn.

In legends like that of Vena we see, I think, a reflection of the questions which were agitating the religious world of India at the period when the Purāṇas in which they appear were compiled, viz., those which were then at issue between the adherents of the Veda, and the various classes of their opponents, Bauddha, Jaina, Chārvāka, etc. These stories were no doubt written with a purpose. They were intended to deter the monarchs contemporary with the authors from tampering with those heresies which had gained, or were gaining, circulation and popularity, by the example of the punishment which, it was pretended, had overtaken the princes who had dared to deviate from orthodoxy in earlier times. Compare the account given of the rise of heretical doctrines in the Vishṇu Purāṇa (pp. 209 ff. vol. iii. of Dr. Hall's edition of Professor Wilson's translation), which the writer no doubt intended to have something more than a merely historical interest.

The legend of Vena is told at greater length, but with no material variation in substance, in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, iv. sections 13-15. See also Professor Wilson's note in his Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i. in loco.

In ascribing to Vena an irreligious character and a contempt for the priests, the Purāṇas contradict a verse in the Rig-veda x. 93, 14, in which (unless we suppose a different individual to be there meant) Vena is celebrated along with Duḥśīma, Prithavāna, and Rāma for his conspicuous liberality to the author of the hymn (pra tad Duḥśīmo Prithavāna Vene pra Rāme vocam asure maghavatsu | ye yuktvāya pancha śata asmayu pathā viśrāvi eśhūm). The two other passages, viii. 9, 10, and x. 148, 5, in which he is alluded to as the father of Prithu have been quoted above, p. 268.

I observe that a Vena, called Bhārgava (or a descendant of Bhṛigu), is mentioned in the list of traditional authors of hymns, given at the end of Professor Aufrecht's Rig-veda, vol. ii., as the rishi of R.V. ix. 85, and x. 123.

SECT. III.—Legend of Purūravas.

Purūravas has been already alluded to (in pp. 158, 221, 226, 268, and 279 f.) as the son of Iḍa (or Iḍā), and the grandson of Manu Vaivasvata; as the author of the triple division of the sacred fire; and as a royal rishi. We have also seen (p. 172) that in Rig-veda i. 31, 4, he is referred to as sukṛite, a "beneficent," or "pious," prince. Rig-veda x. 95 is considered to contain a dialogue between him and the Apsaras Urvaśi (see above, p. 226). In verse 7 of that hymn the gods are alluded to as having strengthened Purūravas for a great conflict for the slaughter of the Dasyus (mahe yat tvā Purūravo raṇāya avarddhayan dasyu-hatyāya devāḥ); and in the 18th verse he is thus addressed by his patronymic: Iti tvā devāḥ ime āhur Aīla yathā im etad bhavasi mṛityubandhuḥ | prajā te devān havishā yajāti svarge u tvaṁ api mūdāyāse | "Thus say these gods to thee, o son of Ila, that thou art indeed nothing more than a kinsman of death: (yet) let thy offspring worship the gods with an oblation, and thou also shalt rejoice in heaven."

It thus appears that in the Vedic hymns and elsewhere Purūravas is regarded as a pious prince, and Manu does not include him in his list of those who resisted the Brāhmanas. But the M. Bh., Ādiparvan 31-43 speaks of him as follows:

Purūravāḥ tato vidvān Ilāyām samapadyata | sū rai tasyābhavad mātū pitā chaiveti naḥ śrutam | trayodaśa samudrasya dvīpān aśnan Purūrāvāḥ | amānushair vṛitaiḥ sarvair mānushaiḥ san mahāyāsaiḥ | vipraiḥ sa vighrahaṁ chakre vīryyonmattaḥ Purūrāvāḥ | jahūra cha sa viprāṇāṁ ratnāny utkrośātām api | Sanatkumāras taṁ rājan Brahma-lokād upetya ha | anudarkāṁ tataś chakre pratyagrīhṇād na chāpy asau | tato maharshibhiḥ kruddhaiḥ sadyaḥ śapto vyanaśyata | lobhānvito bala-madād nashṭa-sanjño narādhipaḥ | sa hi gandharva-loka-athān Urvaśyā sahito virāḥ | anināya kriyārthe 'gnin yathāvad vihitaṁs tridhū |

"Subsequently the wise Purūravas was born of Ilā, who, as we have heard, was both his father and his mother. Ruling over thirteen islands of the ocean, and surrounded by beings who were all superhuman, himself a man of great renown, Purūravas, intoxicated by his prowess, engaged in a conflict with the Brāhmans, and robbed them of their jewels, although they loudly remonstrated. Sanatkumāra came from Brahmā's heaven, and addressed to him an admonition, which, however, he did not regard. Being then straightway cursed by the incensed rishis, he perished, this covetous monarch, who, through pride of power, had lost his understanding. This glorious being (virāj), accompanied by Urvaśī, brought down for the performance of sacred rites the fires which existed in the heaven of the Gandharvas, properly distributed into three." (See Wilson's Vishnu Purāṇa, 4to. ed. pp. 350 and 394 ff. with note p. 397.)

I cite from the Harivaṃśa another passage regarding Purūravas, although no distinct mention is made in it of his contest with the Brāhmans:

Harivaṃśa 8811. Pitā Budhasyottama-vīrya-karmā Purūravāḥ yasya suto nṛi-devaḥ | prāṇāgnir īdyo 'gniṃ ajījanad yo nashṭaṃ śamī-garbha-bhavam bhavātmā | tathairva paśchāch chakame mahātmā purorvaśim ap-sarasām varishṭhām | pītaḥ purā yo 'mṛita-sarva-deho muni-pravirair vara-gātri-ghoraiḥ | nṛipaḥ kuśāgraiḥ punar eva yaś cha dhīmān kṛito 'gnir divi pūjyate cha

"He (the Moon) was the father of Budha (Mercury), whose son was Purūravas, a god among men, of distinguished heroic deeds, the vital fire, worthy of adoration, the generator, who begot the lost fire which sprang from the heart of the śamī-wood, the great personage, who, placed to the west, loved Urvaśī, the paragon of Apsarases, who was placed to the east. This king with his entire immortal body was formerly swallowed up with the points of Kuśa grass by the munis terrible with their resplendent forms; but was again made wise, and is worshipped in heaven as fire."

SECT. IV.—Story of Nahusha.

⁵⁵ The name of Nahush occurs in the Rig-veda as that of the progenitor of a race.

the second prince described by Manu as having come into hostile collision with the Brāhmins is narrated with more or less detail in different parts of the Mahābhārata, as well as in the Purāṇas. The following passage is from the former work, Ādip. 3151 :

*Āyusho Nahushaḥ putro dhīmān satya-parākramah | rājyaṁ śasāsa
sumahad dharmena prithivīpate | pitṛin devān rishin viprān gandharva-

prishṭhe vāhayāmāsa vīryavān | kārayāmāsa chendratvam abhibhūya
divaukasaḥ | tejasū tapasū chaira vikramenaujasū tathā |*

“Nahusha the son of Āyus, wise, and of genuine prowess, ruled with justice a mighty empire. He protected the pitṛis, gods, rishis, wise men, gandharvas, serpents (uraga), and rūkshasas, as well as Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, and Vaiśyas. This energetic prince, after slaying the hosts of the Dasyus, compelled the rishis to pay tribute, and made them carry him like beasts upon their backs. After subduing the celestials he conquered for himself the rank of Indra, through his vigour, austere fervour, valour and fire.”

The story is thus introduced in another part of the same work, the Vanaparvan, section 180. Yudhishṭhira found his brother Bhīmasena seized by a serpent in a forest (see above, p. 133). This serpent, it appears, was no other than king Nahusha, who on being questioned thus relates his own history, 12460 :

Somād Āyoh putro narādhipa | kratubhis tapasū chaiva svādhyāyena

See above, p. 165, note 7, and pp. 179 f. Nahusha Mānava is the traditional rishi of Rig-veda ix. 101, verses 7-9, and Yayāti Nāhusha of verses 4-6 of the same hymn. See list of rishis in Professor Aufrecht's Rig-veda ii. 464 ff.

"I was a king called Nahusha, more ancient than thou, known as the son of Āyus, and fifth in descent from Soma. By my sacrifices, austere fervour, sacred study, self-restraint, and valour, I acquired the undisturbed sovereignty of the three worlds. When I had attained that dominion, pride took possession of my soul: a thousand Brāhmins bore my vehicle. Becoming intoxicated by the conceit of my lordly power, and contemning the Brāhmins, I was reduced to this condition by Agastya." The serpent then promises to let Bhīmasena go, if Yudhishṭhira will answer certain questions (above referred to in p. 133 ff.). Yudhishṭhira afterwards enquires how delusion had happened to take possession of so wise a person as their conversation shewed Nahusha to be. The latter replies that he had been perverted by the pride of power, and proceeds: "Formerly, as I moved through the sky on a celestial car, intoxicated with self-conceit, I regarded no one but myself. All the inhabitants of the three worlds, brāhmanical rishis, gods, gandharvas, yakshas, rākshasas, pannagas, paid me tribute. Such was the power of my gaze that on what creature soever I fixed my eyes, I straightway robbed him of his energy. A thousand of the great sages bore my vehicle. That misconduct it was, o king, which hurled me from my high estate. For I then touched with my foot the muni Agastya who was carrying me. Agastya in his wrath cried out to me 'Fall, thou serpent.' Hurlled therefore from that magnificent car, and fallen from my prosperity, as I descended headlong, I felt that I had become a serpent. I entreated the Brāhman (Agastya), 'Let there be a termination of the curse: thou, o reverend rishi, shouldest forgive one who has been deluded through his inconsideration.' He then compassionately replied to me as I fell, 'Yudhishṭhira, the king of righteousness, will free thee from the curse.'" And at the close of the conversation between Yudhishṭhira and the serpent, we are told that “King Nahusha, throwing of his huge reptile form, became clothed in a celestial body, and ascended to heaven.”

The same story is related in greater detail in the Udyogaparvan, sections 10–16, as follows :

After his slaughter of the demon Vṛittra, Indra became alarmed at the idea of having taken the life of a Brāhman (for Vṛittra was regarded as such), and hid himself in the waters. In consequence of the disappearance of the king of the gods, all affairs, celestial as well as terrestrial, fell into confusion. The rishis and gods then applied to Nahusha to be their king. After at first excusing himself on the plea of want of power, Nahusha at length, in compliance with their solicitations, accepted the high function. Up to the period of his elevation he had led a virtuous life, but he now became addicted to amusement and sensual pleasure ; and even aspired to the possession of Indrāṇī, Indra’s wife, whom he had happened to see. The queen resorted to the Angiras Vṛihaspati, the preceptor of the gods, who engaged to protect her. Nahusha was greatly incensed on hearing of this interference ; but the gods endeavoured to pacify him, and pointed out the immorality of appropriating another person’s wife. Nahusha, however, would listen to no remonstrance, and insisted that in his adulterous designs he was no worse than Indra himself : 373. Ahalyā dharshitā pūrvam ṛishi-patnī yaśasvinī | jīvato bharttur Indreṇa sa vaḥ kiṁ na nivāritaḥ | 374. Bahūni cha nṛiśaṁsāni kṛitānīndreṇa vai purā | vaidharmyāny upadāś chaiva sa vaḥ kiṁ na nivāritaḥ | “373. The renowned Ahalyā, a rishi’s wife, was formerly corrupted by Indra in her husband’s lifetime (see p. 121 f.) : Why was he not prevented by you ? 374. And many barbarous acts, and unrighteous deeds, and frauds, were perpetrated of old by Indra : Why was he not prevented by you ?” The gods, urged by Nahusha, then went to bring Indrāṇī ; but Vṛihaspati would not give her up. At his recommendation, however, she solicited Nahusha for some delay, till she should ascertain what had become of her husband. This request was granted. The gods next applied to Viṣṇu on behalf of Indra ; and Viṣṇu promised that if Indra would sacrifice to him, he should be purged from his guilt, and recover his dominion, while Nahusha would be destroyed. Indra sacrificed accordingly ; and the result is thus told : 419. Vibhajya brahma-hatyām tu vṛiksheshu cha nadīshu cha | parvateshu pṛithivyām cha strīshu chaiva Yudhishthira | sa vibhajya cha bhūteshu visṛijya cha sureśvaraḥ | vijaro dhuta-pāpmā cha Vāsavo 'bhavad ātmavān | "Having divided the guilt of brahmanicide among trees, rivers, mountains, the earth, women, and the elements, Vāsava (Indra), lord of the gods, became freed from suffering and sin, and self-governed." Nahusha was by this means shaken from his place. But (unless this is said by way of prolepsis, or there is some confusion in the narrative) he must have speedily regained his position, as we are told that Indra was again ruined, and became invisible. Indrānī now went in search of her husband; and by the help of Upasruti (the goddess of night and revealer of secrets) discovered him existing in a very subtle form in the stem of a lotus^v growing in a lake situated in a continent within an ocean north of the Hīmālaya. She made known to him the wicked intentions of Nahusha, and entreated him to exert his power, rescue her from danger, and resume his dominion. Indra declined any immediate interposition on the plea of Nahusha's superior strength; but suggested to his wife a device by which the usurper might be hurled from his position. She was recommended to say to Nahusha that "if he would visit her on a celestial vehicle borne by rishis, she would with pleasure submit herself to him" (449. Rishi-yānena dirgena mām upaihi jagatpate | evaṁ tara raśe prītā bhaviṣyāmiti taṁ vada). The queen of the gods accordingly went to Nahusha, by whom she was graciously received, and made this proposal: 457. Ichhāmy aham athāpūrvaṁ vāhanaṁ te surādhipa | yad na Viṣṇor na Rudrasya nāsūrāṇām na rākṣhāsām | vāhantu tvām mahābhūgāḥ ṛishayaḥ sangatāḥ vibho | sarve śivikayā rājann etad hi mama rochate | "I desire for thee, king of the gods, a vehicle hitherto unknown, such as neither Viṣṇu, nor Rudra, nor the asuras, nor the rakshases employ. Let the eminent rishis, all united, bear thee, lord, in a car: this idea pleases me." Nahusha receives favourably this appeal to his vanity, and in the course of his reply thus gives utterance to his self-congratulation: 463. Na hy alpa-vīryo bhavati yo vāhān kurute munīn | ahaṁ tapasvī balavān bhūta-bharya-bhavad-prabhuḥ | mayi kruddho jagad na syād mayi sarvam pratishṭhitam | . . . tasmāt te vachanaṁ devi karishyāmi na saṁśayaḥ | saptarshayo mām vakshyanti sarve brahmaṛshayas tathā | paśya mātṛmyam asmākaṁ riddhiṁ cha varavarāṇini | . . . 468. Vimāne yojayitrā sa ṛishīn niyamam āsthitān | abrahmanyō

munis his bearers. I am a fervid devotee of great might, lord of the past, the future, and the present. If I were angry the world would no longer stand; on me everything depends. . . . Wherefore, o goddess, I shall, without doubt, carry out what you propose. The seven rishis, and all the brāhman-rishis, shall carry me. Behold, beautiful goddess, my majesty and my prosperity." The narrative goes on: "Accordingly this wicked being, irreligious, violent, intoxicated by the force of conceit, and arbitrary in his conduct, attached to his car the rishis, who submitted to his commands, and compelled them to bear him." Indrāṇī then again resorts to Vṛihaspati, who assures her that vengeance will soon overtake Nahusha for his presumption; and promises that he will himself perform a sacrifice with a view to the destruction of the oppressor, and the discovery of Indra's lurking place. Agni is then sent to discover and bring Indra to Vṛihaspati; and the latter, on Indra's arrival, informs him of all that had occurred during his absence. While Indra, with Kuvera, Yama, Soma, and Varuṇa, was devising means for the destruction of Nahusha, the sage Agastya came up, congratulated Indra on the fall of his rival, and proceeded to relate how it had occurred: 527. Sramārttāścha vāhanta-

The rishis rejoined: ‘Engaged in unrighteousness, thou attainest not unto righteousness: these texts, which were formerly uttered by great rishis, are regarded by us as authoritative.’ Then (proceeds Agastya) disputing with the munis, Nahusha, impelled by unrighteousness, touched me on the head with his foot. In consequence of this the king’s glory was smitten and his prosperity departed. When he had instantly become agitated and oppressed with fear, I said to him, ‘Since thou, o fool, contemnest that sacred text, always held in honour, which has been composed by former sages, and employed by brāhman-rishis, and hast touched my head with thy foot, and employest the Brahmā-like and irresistible rishis as bearers to carry thee,—therefore, shorn of thy lustre, and all thy merit exhausted, sink down, sinner, degraded from heaven to earth. For ten thousand years thou shalt crawl in the form of a huge serpent. When that period is completed, thou shalt again ascend to heaven.’ So fell that wicked wretch from the sovereignty of the gods. Happily, o Indra, we shall now prosper, for the enemy of the Brāhmans has been smitten. Take possession of the three worlds, and protect their inhabitants, o husband of Sāchī (Indrāṇī), subduing thy senses, overcoming thine enemies, and celebrated by the great rishis.”⁸⁶

Indra, as we have seen above, was noted for his dissolute character. The epithet “subduing thy senses,” assigned to him in the last sentence by Agastya, is at variance with this indifferent reputation. Is it to be regarded as a piece of flattery, or as a delicate hint that the god would do well to practise a purer morality in future?

This legend appears, like some others, to have been a favourite with the compilers of the Mahābhārata; for we find it once more related, though with some variety of detail, (which may justify its repetition in a condensed form), in the Anuśāsanaparvan, verses 4715-4810. We are there told that Nahusha, in recompense for his good deeds, was exalted to heaven; where he continued to perform all divine and human ceremonies, and to worship the gods as before. At length he became puffed up with pride at the idea that he was Indra, and all his good works in consequence were neutralized. For a great length of time he compelled the rishis to carry him about. At last it came to Agastya's turn to perform the servile office. Bhṛigu then came and said to Agastya, 'Why do we submit to the insults of this wicked king of the gods?' Agastya answered that none of the rishis had ventured to curse Nahusha, because he had obtained the power of subduing to his service everyone upon whom he fixed his eyes; and that he had amṛita (nectar) for his beverage. However, Agastya said he was prepared to do anything that Bhṛigu might suggest. Bhṛigu said he had been sent by Brahmā to take vengeance on Nahusha, who was that day about to attach Agastya to his car, and would spurn him with his foot; and that he himself (Bhṛigu), "incensed at this insult, would by a curse condemn the transgressor and hater of Brāhmins to become a serpent" (cyutkrānta-dharmaṁ tam ahaṁ dharṣaṇūmarṣito bhṛīṣam | ahir bhavasreti ruṣhā śapsye pāpaṁ dvija-druham). All this accordingly happened as follows :

“The mighty Nahusha, as it were smiling, straightway summoned the eminent rishi Agastya from the banks of the Sarasvatī to carry him. The glorious Bhṛigu then said to Maitrāvaruṇi (Agastya), ‘Close thy eyes whilst I enter into the knot of thy hair.’ With the view of over-throwing the king, Bhṛigu then entered into the hair of Agastya who stood motionless as a stock. Nahusha then came to be carried by Agastya, who desired to be attached to the vehicle and agreed to carry the king of the gods whithersoever he pleased. Nahusha in consequence attached him. Bhṛigu, who was lodged in the knot of Agastya’s hair, was greatly delighted, but did not venture to look at Nahusha, as he knew the potency of the boon which had been accorded to him (of subduing to his will everyone on whom he fixed his eyes). Agastya did not lose his temper when attached to the vehicle, and even when urged by a goad the holy man remained unmoved. The king of the gods, incensed, next struck the rishi’s head with his left foot, when Bhṛigu, invisible within the knot of hair, became enraged, and violently cursed the wicked Nahusha: ‘Since, fool, thou hast in thine anger smitten this great muni on the head with thy foot, therefore become a serpent, and fall down swiftly to the earth.’ Being thus addressed, Nahusha became a serpent, and fell to the earth, through the agency of Bhṛigu, who remained invisible. For if he had been seen by Nahusha, the saint would have been unable, in consequence of the power possessed by the oppressor, to hurl him to the ground.”

Bhṛigu, on Nahusha’s solicitation, and the intercession of Agastya, placed a period to the effects of the curse, which, as in the other version of the legend, Yudhishṭhira was to be the instrument of terminating.

From several phrases which I have quoted from the version of this legend given in the Udyogaparvan, as well as the tenor of the whole, it appears to be the intention of the writers to hold up the case of Nahusha as an example of the nemesis awaiting not merely any gross display of presumption, but all resistance to the pretensions of the priesthood, and contempt of their persons or authority. SECT. V.—Story of Nimi.

Nimi (one of Ikshvāku's sons) is another of the princes who are stigmatized by Manu, in the passage above quoted, for their want of deference to the Brāhmans. The Vishṇu P. (Wilson, 4to. ed. p. 388) relates the story as follows: Nimi had requested the Brāhman-rishi Vaśishṭha to officiate at a sacrifice, which was to last a thousand years. Vaśishṭha in reply pleaded a pre-engagement to Indra for five hundred years, but promised to return at the end of that period. The king made no remark, and Vaśishṭha went away, supposing that he had assented to this arrangement. On his return, however, the priest discovered that Nimi had retained Gāutama (who was, equally with Vaśishṭha, a Brāhman-rishi) and others to perform the sacrifice; and being incensed at the neglect to give him notice of what was intended, he cursed the king, who was then asleep, to lose his corporeal form. When Nimi awoke and learnt that he had been cursed without any previous warning, he retorted, by uttering a similar curse on Vaśishṭha, and then died. "In consequence of this curse" (proceeds the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 5, 6) "the vigour of Vaśishṭha entered into the vigour of Mitra and Varuṇa. Vaśishṭha, however, received from them another body when their seed had fallen from them at the sight of Urvaśī" (tach-ehhāpāch cha Mitrā-varuṇayos tejasi Vaśishṭha-tejah pravishṭam | Urvaśī-darśanād udbhūta-cīryya-prapātayoḥ sakāsūd Vaśishṭho deham aparaṁ lehe).⁵⁷ Nimi's body was embalmed. At the close of the sacrifice which he had begun, the gods were willing, on the intercession of the priests, to restore him to life, but he declined the offer; and was placed by the deities, according to his desire, in the eyes of all living creatures. It is in consequence of this that they are always opening and shutting (nimisha means "the twinkling of the eye").

The story is similarly related in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 13, 1-13. A portion of the passage is as follows:

3. Nimiś chalam idaṁ vidvān satṭram ārabhatātmavān | ritvigbhir aparais tāvad nūgamad yāvataḥ guruḥ | śishya-vyatikramaṁ vīkshya nir-varṭtya gurur āgataḥ | āsapat "patatād deho Nimeḥ paṇḍita-māninaḥ" | Nimiḥ pratidadau śūpaṁ guruve 'dharma-varṭtine | "tavāpi patatād deho

lobhād dharmam ajānataḥ” | ity utsasarjja svaṁ dehaṁ Nimir adhyātma-kovidāḥ | Mitrā-varuṇayor jajñe Urvaśyām prapitāmahaḥ |

“Nimi, who was self-controlled, knowing the world to be fleeting, commenced the sacrifice with other priests until his own spiritual instructor should come back. The latter, on his return, discovering the transgression of his disciple, cursed him thus: ‘Let the body of Nimi, who fancies himself learned, fall from him.’ Nimi retorted the curse on his preceptor, who was acting unrighteously: ‘Let thy body also fall from thee, since thou, through covetousness, art ignorant of duty.’ Having so spoken, Nimi, who knew the supreme spirit, abandoned his body: and the patriarch (Vasishṭha) was born of Urvaśī to Mitra and Varuṇa.”⁸⁸

The offence of Nimi, as declared in these passages, is not that of contemning the sacerdotal order in general, or of usurping their functions; but merely of presuming to consult his own convenience by proceeding to celebrate a sacrifice with the assistance of another Brāhman (for Gautama also was a man of priestly descent) when his own spiritual preceptor was otherwise engaged, without giving the latter any notice of his intention. The Bhāgavata, as we have seen, awards blame impartially to both parties, and relates (as does also the Viṣṇu Purāṇa) that the king’s curse took effect on the Brāhman, as well as the Brāhman’s on the king.

SECT. VI.—Vasishṭha

One of the most remarkable and renowned of the struggles between Brāhmans and Kshattriya which occur in the legendary history of India is that which is said to have taken place between Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra. I propose to furnish full details of this conflict with its fabulous accompaniments from the Rāmāyaṇa, which dwells upon it at considerable length, as well as from the Mahābhārata, where it is repeatedly introduced; but before doing so, I shall quote the passages of the Rig-veda which appear to throw a faint light on the real history of the two rivals. It is clear from what has been said in the Introduction to this volume, pp. 1-6, as well as from the remarks I have made in pp. 161 f., that the Vedic hymns, being far more ancient than the Epic and Puranic compilations, must be more trustworthy guides to a knowledge of the remotest Indian antiquity. While the Epic poems and Puranas no doubt embody numerous ancient traditions, yet these have been freely altered according to the caprice or dogmatic views of later writers, and have received many purely fictitious additions. The Vedic hymns, on the contrary, have been preserved unchanged from a very remote period, and exhibit a faithful reflection of the social, religious, and ecclesiastical condition of the age in which they were composed, and of the feelings which were awakened by contemporary occurrences. As yet there was no conscious perversion or colouring of facts for dogmatic or sectarian purposes; and much of the information which we derive from these naïve compositions is the more trustworthy that it is deduced from hints and allusions, and from the comparison of isolated particulars, and not from direct and connected statements or descriptions. It is here therefore, if anywhere, that we may look for some light on the real relations between Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra. After quoting the hymns regarding these two personages, I shall adduce from the Brāhmaṇas, or other later works, any particulars regarding their birth and history which I have discovered. The conflict between Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra has been already discussed at length in the third of Dr. Rudolf Roth's "Dissertations on the literature and history of the Veda,"⁸⁹ where the most important parts of the hymns bearing upon the subject are translated. The first hymn which I shall adduce is intended for the glorification of Vasishṭha and his family. The latter part relates the birth of the sage, while the earlier verses refer to his connection with king Sudās. Much of this hymn is very obscure.

"1. The white-robed (priests) with hair-knots on the right, stimulating to devotion, have filled me with delight. Rising from the sacrificial grass, I call to the men, 'Let not the Vasishthas (stand too) far off to succour [or gladden] me.'⁹⁰ 2. By their libation they brought Indra hither from afar across the Vaisanta away from the powerful draught.⁹¹ Indra preferred the Vasishthas to the soma offered by Pūśadyumna,⁹² the son of Vayata. 3. So too with them he crossed the river; so too with them he slew Bheda; so too in the battle of the ten kings⁹³ Indra delivered Sudās through your prayer, o Vasishthas.

⁹³ See verses 6-8 of R.V. vii. 83, to be next quoted.

4. Through gratification caused by the prayer of your fathers, o men, ye do not obstruct the undecaying axle (?), since at (the recitation of the) Sakvarī verses⁹⁴ with a loud voice, ye have infused energy into Indra, o Vasishṭhas. 5. Distressed, when surrounded in the fight of the ten kings, they looked up, like thirsty men, to the sky. Indra heard Vasishṭha when he uttered praise, and opened up a wide space for the Tritsus.⁹⁵ 6. Like staves for driving cattle, the contemptible Bharatas were lopped all round. Vasishṭha marched in front, and then the tribes of the Tritsus were deployed. 7. Three deities create a fertilizing fluid in the worlds. Three are the noble creatures, whom light precedes. Three fires attend the dawn.⁹⁶ All these the Vasishṭhas know. 8. Their lustre is like the full radiance of the sun; their greatness is like the depth of the ocean; like the swiftness of the wind, your hymn, o Vasishṭhas, can be followed by no one else. 9. By the intuitions of their heart they seek out the mystery with a thousand branches. Wearing the envelopment stretched out by Yama, the Vasishṭhas sat down by the Apsaras. 10. When Mitra and Varuṇa saw thee quitting the flame of the lightning, that was thy birth; and thou hadst one (other birth), o Vasishṭha, when Agastya brought thee to the people. 11. And thou art also a son of Mitra and Varuṇa, o Vasishṭha, born, o priest, from the soul of Urvaśī. All the gods placed thee—a drop which fell through divine contemplation—in the vessel. 12. He, the intelligent, knowing both (worlds?), with a thousand gifts, or with gifts—he who was to weave the envelopment stretched out by Yama—he, Vasishṭha, was born of the Apsaras. 13. They, two (Mitra and Varuṇa?), born at the sacrifice, and impelled by adorations, dropped into the jar the same amount of seed. From the midst of that arose Māna (Agastya?); and from that they say that the rishi Vasishṭha sprang.”⁹⁷

⁹⁵ This is evidently the name of the tribe which the Vasishṭhas favoured, and to which they themselves must have belonged. See vii. 83, 4. The Bharatas in the next verse appear to be the hostile tribe.

There is another hymn (R.V. vii. 18) which relates to the connection between Vasishṭha and Sudās (verses 4, 5, 21–25) and the conflict between the latter and the Trītsus with their enemies (verses 6–18); but as it is long and obscure I shall content myself with quoting a few verses.⁹⁸

R.V. vii. 18, 4. Dhenuṃ na tvā sugavase dudhukshann upa brahmāṇi sasrije Vasishṭhaḥ | tvām id me gopatiṃ viśvaḥ āha ā naḥ Indrāḥ sumatiṃ gantu achha | 5. Arṇāmsi chit paprathānū Sudāse Indro gādhanī

⁹⁷ Whatever may be the sense of verses 11 and 13, the Nirukta states plainly enough v. 13; Tasyāḥ darśanād Mitrā-varuṇayoḥ retas' chaskanda | tad-abhivādiny eshū rig bhavati | “On seeing her (Urvāṣī) the seed of Mitra and Varuṇa fell from them. To this the following verse (R.V. vii. 33, 11) refers.” And Sāyaṇa on the same verse quotes a passage from the Bṛihaddevatā: Tayor ādityayoḥ sattre drishṭvā 'parasam Urvāṣīm | retas' chaskanda tat kumbhe nyapatad vāsativare | tenaiva tu mūhūrttena vīryavantaḥ tapasvinau | Agastyas' cha Vasishṭhas' cha tatrarshī sambabhūvatuh | bahudhū patitaṃ retas' kalāse cha jale sthale | sthale Vasishṭhas tu muniḥ sambabhūvurshi-sattamaḥ | kumbhe tv Agastyas' sambhūto jale matsyo mahādhyutiḥ | udiyūya tato 'gastyo 'sanyū-mātro mahūtupāḥ | mūnena sammīto yasmūt tasmād Mūnyas' ihochyate | yadvā kumbhād ṛṣir-jātaḥ kumbhenūpi hi mīryate | kumbhaḥ ity abhidhānam cha parimāṇasya lakshyate | tato 'psu grihyamāṇāsu Vasishṭhaḥ pushkare sthitaḥ | sarvataḥ pushkare taṃ hi viśve devāḥ adharayan | “When these two Adityas (Mitra and Varuṇa) beheld the Apsaras Urvāṣī at a sacrifice their seed fell from them into the sacrificial jar called vāsativara. At that very moment the two energetic and austere rishis Agastya and Vasishṭha were produced there. The seed fell on many places, into the jar, into water, and on the ground. The muni Vasishṭha, most excellent of rishis, was produced on the ground; while Agastya was born in the jar, a fish of great lustre. The austere Agastya sprang thence of the size of a sanyū (i.e. the pin of a yoke; see Wilson, s.v., and Professor Roth, s.v. māna). Since he was measured by a certain standard (māna) he is called the ‘measurable’ (mūnya). Or, the rishi, having sprung from a jar (kumbha), is also measured by a jar, as the word kumbha is also designated as the name of a measure. Then when the waters were taken, Vasishṭha remained in the vessel (pushkara); for all the gods held him in it on all sides.” In his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 64, Prof. Roth speaks of the verses of the hymn which relate to Vasishṭha's origin as being a more modern addition to an older composition, and as describing the miraculous birth of the sage in the taste and style of the Epic mythology. Professor Max Müller (Oxford Essays for 1866, pp. 61 f.) says that Vasishṭha is a name of the Sun; and that the ancient poet is also “called the son of Mitra and Varuṇa, night and day, an expression which has a meaning only in regard to Vasishṭha, the sun; and as the sun is frequently called the offspring of the dawn, Vasishṭha, the poet, is said to owe his birth to Urvāṣī” (whom Müller identifies with Ushas). For M. Langlois's view of the passage, see his French version of the R.V. vol. iii. pp. 79 f. and his note, p. 234.

⁹⁸ See Roth's Litt. u. Gesch. des Weda, pp. 87 ff. where it is translated into German.

⁹⁹ Parāśara is said in Nir. vi. 30, which refers to this passage, to have been a son of Vasishṭha born in his old age (Parāśaraḥ parūṣīrṇasya Vasishṭhasya ūhuvirasya jajñe); or he was a son of Sakti and grandson of Vasishṭha (Roth s.r.)

¹⁰⁰ Devavat is said by Sāyana to be a proper name. He may be the same as Divodāsa in verse 25. Or Divodāsa may be the father, and Pijavana and Devavat among the forefathers of Sudās. In the Vishṇu Purāṇa Sarvakūma is said to have been the father and Rituparna the grandfather of Sudāsa, Wilson's V.P. 4to. ed. p. 380. At p 454 f. a Sudāsa is mentioned who was son of Chyavana, grandson of Mitrayu and great-grandson of Divodāsa.

ye did Divodāsa the (fore)father of Sudās; fulfil the desire of the son of Pijavana (by granting him) imperishable, undecaying power, worthy of reverence (?)."

Although the Vasishthas are not named in the next hymn, it must refer to the same persons and circumstances as are alluded to in the first portion of R.V. vii. 33, quoted above.

The praises of the men who officiated at the sacrifice were effectual; the gods were present at their invocations. 8. Ye, o Indra and Varuṇa, granted succour to Sudās, hemmed in on every side in the battle of the ten kings,¹⁰⁵ where the white-robed Tritsus,¹⁰⁶ with hair-knots, reverentially praying, adored you with a hymn."

From these hymns it appears that Vasishṭha, or a Vasishṭha and his family were the priests of king Sudās (vii. 18, 4 f., 21 ff.; vii. 33, 3 f.); that, in their own opinion, these priests were the objects of Indra's preference (vii. 33, 2), and had by the efficacy of their intercessions been the instruments of the victory gained by Sudās over his enemies in the battle of the ten kings. It seems also to result from some of the verses (vii. 33, 6; vii. 83, 4, 6; and vii. 33, 1, compared with vii. 83, 8) that both the king and the priests belonged to the tribe of the Tritsus.¹⁰⁷ Professor Roth remarks that in none of the hymns which

¹⁰⁴ According to Sāyana the two parties were Sudās and the Tritsus his allies (ubhaya-vidhāḥ Sudāḥ-sañjāno rājā tat-sahāya-bhūtās Tritsaras cha evam dei-prakārūḥ janūḥ). It might have been supposed that one of the parties meant was the hostile kings; but they are said in the next verse to be ayajyarah, "persons who did not sacrifice to the gods."

he quotes is any allusion made to the Vasishthas being members of any particular caste; but that their connection with Sudās is ascribed to their knowledge of the gods, and their unequalled power of invocation (vii. 33, 7 f.).

In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 21, we have another testimony to the connection of Vasishtha with Sudās, as he is there stated to have "consecrated Sudās son of Pijavana by a great inauguration similar to Indra's";¹⁰⁸ in consequence of which Sudās went round the earth in every direction conquering, and performed an aśvamedha sacrifice" (etena ha vai aindreṇa mahābhishekena Vasishthah Sudāsam Pajavanam abhisheche | tasmād u Sudāḥ Pajavanah samantaṁ survataḥ prithivīm jayan pariyāya āsvena cha medhyena īje).

The following passages refer to Vasishtha having received a revelation from the god Varuṇa, or to his being the object of that god's special favour:

vii. 87, 4. Uvācha me Varuṇo medhirāya triḥ sapta nāma aghnyā bibhartti | vidvān padasya guhyā na rochad yugāya vipraḥ uparaya śikshan |

"Varuṇa has declared to me¹⁰⁹ who am intelligent, 'The Cow'¹¹⁰ possesses thrice seven names. The wise god, though he knows them, has not revealed the mysteries of (her) place, which he desires to grant to a future generation."

B.V. vii. 88, 3. Ā yad ruhāva Varuṇas cha nāvam pra yat samudram irayāva madhyam | adhi yad apām snubhis charāva pra pra inkhe inkha-yāvahai śubhe kam | 4. Vasishtham ha Varuṇo nāvi ā adhūd ṛishiṁ chakāra swapaḥ mahobhiḥ | stotāraṁ vipraḥ sudinatve ahnām yād nu dyāvas tatanan yād ushasaḥ | 5. Kva tyāni nau sakhyā babbhuvuḥ sachāvahe yad

¹⁰⁹ Vasishtha is not named in this hymn, but he is its traditional author.

acṛīkam purā chit | bṛihantam mānam Varuṇa svadhāraḥ sahasra-dvāraṁ jagama grihaṁ te | 6. Yaḥ āpir nityo Varuṇa priyaḥ san tvām āgūṁsi kṛīṇavat sakḥā te | mā te enasvanto yakshin bhujema yandhi sma vipraḥ stuvate varūtham |

“When Varuṇa and I embark on the boat, when we propel it into the midst of the ocean, when we advance over the surface of the waters, may we rock upon the undulating element till we become brilliant. 4. Varuṇa took Vasishṭha into the boat; by his mighty acts working skilfully he (Varuṇa) has made him a rishi; the wise (god has made) him an utterer of praises in an auspicious time, that his days and dawns may be prolonged.”¹¹¹ 5. Where are (nōw) our friendships, the tranquillity which we enjoyed of old? We have come, o self-sustaining Varuṇa, to thy vast abode, to thy house with a thousand gates. 6. Whatever friend of thine, being a kinsman constant and beloved, may commit offences against thee;—may we not, though sinful, suffer (punishment), o adorable being; do thou, o wise god, grant us protection.”

R.V. vii. 86 is a sort of penitential hymn in which Vasishṭha refers to the anger of Varuṇa against his old friend (verse 4) and entreats forgiveness of his offences. This hymn, which appears to be an earnest and genuine effusion of natural feeling, is translated in Professor Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 540.

The passage which follows is part of a long hymn, consisting chiefly of imprecations directed against Rākshāsas and Yātudhānas, and said in the Bṛihaddevatā (as quoted by Sāyaṇa in his introductory remarks) to have “been ‘seen’ by the rishi (Vasishṭha) when he was overwhelmed with grief and anger for the loss of his hundred sons who had been slain by the sons of Sudās” (ṛishir dadarśa raksho-ghnam puttra-śoka-pariplutāḥ | hate puttra-śate kruddhaḥ Saudāsair duḥkḥitas tadā). I shall cite only the verses in which Vasishṭha repels the imputation (by whomsoever it may have been made) that he was a demon (Rakshas or Yātudhana).

dhārayantam | hanti raksho hanti asad vadantam ubhāv Indrasya prasitau śayāte | 14. Yadi vā aham anṛita-devaḥ āsa moghaṁ vā devān api ūhe Agne | kim asmabhyāṁ Jātavedo hrīṇīshe droghavāchas te nirṛithaṁ sachantām | 15. "The intelligent man is well able to discriminate (when) true and false words contend together. Soma favours that one of them which is true and right, and annihilates falsehood. 13. Soma does not prosper the wicked, nor the man who wields power unjustly. He slays the Rakshas; he slays the liar: they both lie (bound) in the fetters of Indra. 14. If I were either a follower of false gods, or if I erroneously conceived of the gods, o Agni:—Why, o Jātavedas, art thou incensed against us? Let injurious speakers fall into thy destruction. 15. May I die this very day, if I be a Yātudhāna, or if I have destroyed any man's life. May he be severed from his ten sons who falsely says to me, 'o Yātudhāna.' 16. He who says to me, who am no Yātu, 'o Yātudhāna,' or who (being himself) a Rakshas, says, 'I am pure,'—may Indra smite him with his great weapon; may he sink down the lowest of all creatures.

In elucidation of this passage Sāyaṇa quotes the following lines:
Itavā puttra-śatam pūrvam Vasishṭhasya mahātmanaḥ | Vasishṭhaṁ "rākshaso 'si tvam" Vāsishṭhaṁ rūpam āsthitaḥ | "aham Vasishṭhaḥ" ity evaṁ jighāmsuḥ rākshaso 'bravīt | atrottarāḥ rīcho dṛishṭāḥ Vasishṭheneti naḥ śrutam |

"Having slain the hundred sons of the great Vasishṭha, a murderous Rākshasa, assuming the form of that rishi, formerly said to him, 'Thou art a Rākshasa, and I am Vasishṭha.' In allusion to this the latter verses were seen by Vasishṭha, as we have heard."

We may, however, safely dismiss this explanation resting on fabulous grounds.

The verses may, as Professor Max Müller supposes,¹¹² have arisen out

¹¹² "Vasishṭha himself, the very type of the Arian Brahman, when in feud with Viśvāmitra, is called not only an enemy, but a 'Yātudhāna,' and other names which in common parlance are only bestowed on barbarian savages and evil spirits. We

of Vasishṭha's contest with Viśvāmitra, and it may have been the latter personage who brought these charges of heresy, and of murderous and demoniacal character against his rival.¹¹³

Allusion is made both in the Taittirīya Sanhitā and in the Kaushitakī Brāhmaṇa to the slaughter of a son of Vasishṭha by the sons or descendants of Sudās. The former work states, Ashtaka vii. (p. 47 of the India Office MS. No. 1702):

Vasishṭho hataputro 'kāmāyata "vindeya prajāṃ abhi Saudāsān bhareyam" iti | sa etam ekasmānnapanchāśam apaśyat tam āharat tenāyajata | tato vai so 'vindata prajāṃ abhi Saudāsān abharat |

"Vasishṭha, when his son had been slain, desired, 'May I obtain offspring; may I overcome the Saudāsas.' He beheld this ekasmānnapanchāśa (?), he took it, and sacrificed with it. In consequence he obtained offspring, and overcame the Saudāsas." Let us now see what

The passage of the Kaushitakī Brāhmaṇa, 4th adhyāya, as quoted by Professor Weber (Ind. St. ii. 299) is very similar:

Vasishṭho 'kāmāyata hata-putraḥ "prajāyeya prajāyā paśubhir abhi Saudāsān bhareyam" iti | sa etam yajna-kratum apaśyad Vasishṭha-yajnam tena ishṭrā abhi Saudāsān abharat |

"Vasishṭha, when his son had been slain, desired, 'May I be fruitful in offspring and cattle, and overcome the Saudāsas.' He beheld this form of offering, the Vasishṭha-sacrifice; and having performed it, he overcame the Saudāsas."

In his introduction to Rig-veda, vii. 32, Sāyaṇa has the following notice from the Anukramanikā:

"Saudāsair agnau prakshipyamāṇaḥ Saktir antyam pragātham ālebhe so 'rdharche ukte 'dahyata | tam putroktam Vasishṭhaḥ samāpayata" iti Sāṭyāyanakam | "Vasishṭhasya eva hata-putrasya ūrsham" iti Tāṇḍakam |

"The Sāṭyayana Brāhmaṇa says that 'Sakti (son of Vasishṭha), when being thrown into the fire by the Saudāsas, received (by inspiration) the concluding pragātha of the hymn. He was burnt after he had spoken half a rich; and Vasishṭha completed what his son was have still the very hymn in which Vasishṭha deprecates such charges with powerful indignation." Prof. Müller then quotes verses 14-16 of the hymn before us ("Last Results of the Turanian Researches," in Bunsen's "Outlines of the Philosophy of Univ. History," i. 344.

uttering. The Tāṇḍaka says that 'it was Vasishṭha himself who spoke the whole when his son was slain.'

The words supposed to have been spoken by Sakti, viz. "O Indra, grant to us strength as a father to his sons" (Indra kratuṁ naḥ ā bhara pitā putrebhyo yathā) do not seem to be appropriate to the situation in which he is said to have been placed; and nothing in the hymn appears to allude to any circumstances of the kind imagined in the two Brāhmaṇas.

Manu says of Vasishṭha (viii. 110): Maharshibhiḥ cha devaiḥ cha karyyārthaṁ śapathāḥ kritāḥ | Vasishṭhaś cāpi śapatham śepe Paiyavane nṛipe | "Great rishis and gods too have taken oaths for particular objects. Vasishṭha also swore an oath to king Paiyavana." The occasion on which this was done is stated by the Commentator Kullūka: Vasishṭho 'py anena puttra-śatam bhakshitam iti Viśvāmitreṇa ākrushṭo sva-pariśuddhaye Piyavanūpatye Sudāmnī rājani śapatham chakūra |

"Vasishṭha being angrily accused by Viśvāmitra of having eaten (his) hundred sons, took an oath before king Sudāman (Sudās, no doubt, is meant) the son of Piyavana in order to clear himself." This seems to refer to the same story which is alluded to in the passage quoted by the Commentator on Rig-veda vii. 104, 12.

In the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 55, 5 f., a hundred sons of Viśvāmitra are said to have been burnt up by the blast of Vasishṭha's mouth when they rushed upon him armed with various weapons (Viśvāmitra-sutānām tu śatam nānā-vidhāyudham | abhyadhāvat susankruddham Vasishṭham japatām varam | hunkareṇaiva tū sarvān nirdadāha mahān ṛṣiḥ).

Vasishṭha is also mentioned in Rig-veda, i. 112, 9, as having received succour from the Āśvins (—Vasishṭham yābhīr aṣṭāv ajinvatam).

Vasishṭha, or the Vasishṭhas, are also referred to by name in the following verses of the seventh Mandala of the Rig-veda: 7, 7; 9, 6; 12, 3; 23, 1, 6; 26, 5; 37, 4; 39, 7; 42, 6; 59, 3; 70, 6; 73, 3; 76, 6, 7; 77, 6; 80, 1; 90, 7; 95, 6; 96, 1, 3; but as no information is derivable from these texts, except that the persons alluded to were the authors or reciters of the hymns, it is needless to quote them.¹¹⁴

¹¹⁴ Another verse of a hymn in which the author is not referred to (vii. 72, 2) is as follows: Ā no devebhīr upa yātām arvāk sajośhashā nāsatyā rathena | yuvor āi naḥ sakhyā pitryāni samāno bandhur uta tasya vittam | "Come near to us, Āśvins, on the same car with the gods: for we have ancestral friendships with you, a common relation; do ye recognize it." Although this has probably no mythological

In the Atharva-veda, iv. 29, 3 and 5, Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra are mentioned among other personages, Angiras, Agasti, Jamadagni, Atri, Kaśyapa, Bharadvāja, Gavishṭhira, and Kutsa, as being succoured by Mitra and Varuṇa (. . . yāv Angirasam avatho yāv Agastim Mitra-Varuṇā Jamadagnim Atrim | yau Kaśyapam avatho yau Vasishṭham . . . yau Bharadvājam avatho yau Gavishṭhiraṁ Viśvāmitraṁ Varuṇa Mitra Kutsam). And in the same Veda, xviii. 3, 15 f., they are invoked as deliverers: Viśvāmitro 'yaṁ Jamadagnir Atrir avantu naḥ Kaśyapo Vāmaderah | Viśvāmitra Jamadagne Vasishṭha Bharadvāja Gotama Vāmadeva . . . | "15. May this Viśvāmitra, may Jamadagni, Atri, Kaśyapa, Vāmadeva preserve us. 16. O Viśvāmitra, o Jamadagni, o Vasishṭha, o Bharadvāja, o Gotama, o Vāmadeva." The second passage at least must be a good deal more recent than the most of the hymns of the Rig-veda.

Sudās is mentioned in other parts of the Rig-veda without any reference either to Vasishṭha or to Viśvāmitra. In some cases his name is coupled with that of other kings or sages, which appears to shew that in some of these passages at least a person, and not a mere epithet, "the liberal man," is denoted by the word Sudās.

R.V. i. 47, 6. (The traditional rishi is Praskaṇva.) Sudāse dasrū vasu bibhratū rathe priḥsho vahatam Aśvinā | rayim samudrād uta vā divas pari asme dhattam puru-spriham |

"O impetuous Aśvins, possessing wealth in your car, bring sustenance to Sudās. Send to us from the (aerial) ocean, or the sky, the riches which are much coveted."

Sāyana says the person here meant is "king Sudās, son of Pijavana" (Sudāse . . . rājne Pijavana-puttrāya).

i. 63, 7. (The rishi is Nodhas, of the family of Gotama.) Tvaṁ ha tyad Indra sapta yudhyan puro vajrin Purukutsāya dardah | barhir na yat Sudāse vṛithū varḡ anho rājan varivaḥ Pūrato kah |

"Thou didst then, o thundering Indra, war against, and shatter, the seven cities for Purukutsa, when thou, o king, didst without effort hurl reference, Sāyana explains it as follows: Vivasvān Varuṇas cha ubhāv api Kaśyapād Aditer jātāu | Vivasvān Aśvinor janako Varuṇo Vasishṭhasya ity evam samāna-bandhutvam | "Vivasvat and Varuṇa were both sons of Kaśyapa and Aditi. Vivasvat was the father of the Aśvins and Varuṇa of Vasishṭha; such is the affinity." Sāyana then quotes the Bṛhaddevatā to prove the descent of the Aśvins from Vivasvat. Compare R.V. x. 17, 1, 2, and Nirukta, xii. 10, 11.

away distress from Sudās like a bunch of grass, and bestow wealth on Pūru.¹¹⁵

i. 112, 19. (The rishi is Kutsa.) . . . *yābhir Sudāse ūhathuḥ sude-
vyaṁ tābhir u shu ūtibhir Aśvinā gatam* |

"Come, o Aśvins, with those succours whereby ye brought glorious power to Sudās" ['son of Pijavana'—Sāyana].¹¹⁶

The further texts which follow are all from the seventh Mandala, of which the rishis, with scarcely any exception, are said to be Vasishṭha and his descendants:

vii. 19, 3. Tvaṁ dhṛishṇo dhṛishatū vītahavyam prāto viśvābhir ūtibhiḥ Sudāsam | pra Paurukutsiṁ Trasadasyum āvaḥ kshettrasūtū vṛittrahatyeshu Pūrum |

"Thou, o fierce Indra, hast impetuously protected Sudās, who offered oblations, with every kind of succour. Thou hast preserved Trasadasyu the son of Purukutsa, and Pūru in his conquest of land and in his slaughter of enemies."

vii. 20, 2. Īantā Vṛittram Indraḥ śuśuvānaḥ prāvid nu vīro jari-tāram uti | karttā Sudāse aha vai u lokaṁ dātū vasu muhur u dāsushe bhūt |

"Indra growing in force slays Vṛitra; the hero protects him who praises him; he makes room for Sudās [or the liberal sacrificer—kal-yāna-dānāya yajamānāya. Sāyana]; he gives riches repeatedly to his worshipper."

vii. 25, 3. *Sataṁ te śiprinn ūtayaḥ Sudāse sahasraṁ saṁsāḥ uta
rātir astu | jahi vadhar vanusho marttyasya asme dyumnam adhi ratnaṁ
cha dhehi* |

"Let a hundred succours come to Sudās, a thousand desirable (gifts) and prosperity. Destroy the weapon of the murderous. Confer renown and wealth on us."

(Sāyana takes sudās here and in all the following citations to signify a "liberal man.")

¹¹⁵ Professor Roth renders this passage differently in his Litt. u. Gesch. des Weda, p. 132; as does also Prof. Benfey, Orient und Occident, i. p. 590.

¹¹⁶ In R.V. i. 185, 9, we find the word sudās in the comparative degree sudāstara, where it must have the sense of "very liberal": bhūri chid ayaḥ sudāstarāya | "(give the wealth) of my enemy, though it be abundant to (me who am) most liberal." In v. 53, 2, the term sudās appears to be an adjective: ā etān ratheṣu tatiḥṣaḥ kaḥ śuśrūva kathā yayaḥ | kasmai sasruḥ sudāse anu āpayāḥ ilābhir vṛishṭayaḥ saha | "Who has heard them (the Maruts) mounted on their cars, how they have gone? To what liberal man have they resorted as friends, (in the form of) showers with

vii. 32. 10. Nakiḥ Sudāso ratham pari āsa na rīramat | Indro yasy avitā yasya Maruto gamat sa gomati vraje |

vii. 53, 3: Uto hi vañ ratnadheyāni santi purūṇi dyāvā - prithivī Sudāse |

“And ye, o Heaven and Earth, have many gifts of wealth for Sudās [or the liberal man].”

vii. 60, 8. Yad gopūvad Aditiḥ śarma bhadrām Mitro yachhanti Varuṇaḥ Sudāse | tasminn ā tokañ tanayañ dadhūnāḥ mā karma deva-helanañ turāsaḥ | 9. . . . pari dveshobhir Aryamā vṛṇaktu uruñ Sudāse vṛshanau u lokam |

“Since Aditi, Mitra, and Varuṇa afford secure protection to Sūdā (or the liberal man), bestowing on him offspring;—may we not, o mighty deities, commit any offence against the gods. 9. . . . May Aryaman rid us of our enemies. (Grant) ye vigorous gods, a wide space to Sudās.”

There is another passage, vii. 64, 3 (bravad yathā naḥ ād ariḥ Sudāse), to which I find it difficult to assign the proper sense.

Vasishṭha is referred to in the following passages of the Brāhmaṇas:

Kāthaka 37, 17.¹¹⁷ *Rishayo vai Indram pratyakshañ na apaśyañs tañ Vasishṭhaḥ eva pratyasham apaśyat | so 'bibhet "itarebhyo mā rishibhyah pravakshyati" iti*¹¹⁸ | so 'bravīd "brāhmaṇaṁ te vakshyāmi yathā tvat-purohitāḥ prajāḥ prajanishyante | atha mā itarebhyah rishibhyo mā pravočaḥ" iti | tasmai etān stoma-bhāgān abravīt tato Vasishṭha-purohitāḥ prajāḥ prajāyanta |

“The rishis did not behold Indra face to face; it was only Vasishṭha who so beheld him. He (Indra) was afraid lest Vasishṭha should reveal him to the other rishis; and said to him, ‘I shall declare to thee a Brāhmaṇa in order that men may be born who shall take thee for their purohita. Do not reveal me to the other rishis.’ Accordingly he declared to him these parts of the hymn. In consequence men were born who took Vasishṭha for their purohita."

Professor Weber refers in the same place to a passage of the Sātapatha Brāhmaṇa relating to the former superiority of Vasishṭha's family in sacred knowledge and priestly functions :

xii. 6, 1, 38. Vasishṭho ha virājam vidānchakāra tāṃ ha Indro 'bhida-dhyau | sa ha uvācha "ṛishe virājam ha vai vettha tāṃ me brūhi" iti | sa ha uvācha "kim mama tatah syād" iti | "sarvasya cha te yajnasya prāyaścittim brūyāṃ rūpaṃ cha tvā darśayeya" iti | sa ha uvācha "yad nu me sarvasya yajnasya prāyaścittim brūyāḥ kim u sa syād yaṃ tvaṃ rūpaṃ darśayethāḥ" iti | jīva-svarga eva asmāl lokāt preyād" iti | tato ha etām ṛishir Indrāya virājam uvācha "iyaṃ vai virād" iti | tasmād yo 'syai bhūyishṭhaṃ labhate sa eva śreshṭho bhavati | atha ha etām Indrah ṛishaye prāyaścittim uvācha agnihotrād agre ā mahataḥ ukthāt | tāḥ ha sma etāḥ purā ryāhritīr Vasishṭhāḥ eva viduḥ | tasmād ha sma purā Vasishṭhāḥ eva brahmā bhavati |

"Vasishṭha was acquainted with the Virāj (a particular Vedic metre). Indra desired it; and said, 'O rishi, thou knowest the Virāj: declare it to me.' Vasishṭha asked: 'What (advantage) will result to me from doing so?' (Indra replied) 'I shall both explain to thee the forms for rectifying anything amiss (prāyaścitti)¹¹⁹ in the entire sacrifice, and show thee its form.' Vasishṭha further enquired, 'If thou declarest to me the remedial rites for the entire sacrifice, what shall he become to whom thou wilt show the form?' (Indra answered) 'He shall ascend from this world to the heaven of life.' The rishi then declared this Virāj to Indra, saying, 'this is the Virāj.' Wherefore it is he who obtains the most of this (Virāj) that becomes the most eminent. Then Indra explained to the rishi this remedial formula, from the agnihotra to the great uktha. Formerly the Vasishṭhas alone knew these sacred syllables (ryāhriti). Hence in former times a Vasishṭha only was a (priest of the kind called) brāhmān." — loc. cit.

Professor Weber quotes also the following from the Kāṭhaka 32, 2. Yām abrahmaṇaḥ prāśnāti sā skannā āhutis tasyā vai Vasishṭhaḥ eva prāyaścittam vidānchakāra | "The oblation of which a person not a brāhmaṇa partakes is vitiated. Vasishṭha alone knew the remedial rite for such a case."

In the Shāḍvīmśa Brāhmaṇa of the Sāma-veda, quoted by the same writer (Ibid. i. 39, and described p. 37, as possessing a distinctly formed Brahmanical character indicating a not very early date), we have the following passage :

i. 5. Indro ha Viśvāmitrāya uktham urācha Vasishṭhāya brahma rāg uktham ity eva Viśvāmitrāya mano brahma Vasishṭhāya | tad vai etad Vāsishṭham brahma | api ha evaṁvidhaṁ vā Vāsishṭhaṁ vā brahmānāṁ kurvīta |

“Indra declared the uktha (hymn) to Viśvāmitra, and the brāhmān (devotion) to Vasishṭha. The uktha is expression (vāk); that (he made known) to Viśvāmitra; and the brāhmān is the soul; that (he made known) to Vasishṭha. Hence this brāhmān (devotional power) belongs to the Vasishṭhas. Moreover, let either a person of this description, or a man of the family of Vasishṭha, be appointed a brāhmān-priest.”

Here the superiority of Vasishṭha over Viśvāmitra is clearly asserted.¹²⁰

Vasishṭha is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Santip. verses 11221 ff., as having communicated divine knowledge to king Janaka, and as referring (see verses 11232, 11347, 11409, 11418, 11461, etc.) to the Sāṅkhya and Yoga systems. The sage is thus characterized :

“King Janaka with joined hands saluted Vasishṭha the son of Mitra and Varuṇa, the highest and most excellent of rishis, resplendent as the sun, who was acquainted with the Supreme Spirit, who had ascertained the means of attaining to the Supreme Spirit; and asked him after that highest knowledge which leads to final beatitude.”

The doctrine which the saint imparts to the king he professes to have derived from the eternal Hiranyagarbha, i.e. Brahmā (avāptam etad hi mayā sanātānād Hiranyagarbhād gadato narādhipa).

I have already in former parts of this volume quoted passages from Manu, the Vishṇu Purāṇa, and the Mahābhārata, regarding the creation of Vasishṭha. The first-named work (see above, p. 36) makes him one of ten Maharshis created by Manu Svāyambhuva in the first (or Svāyambhuva) Manvantara. The Vishṇu Purāṇa (p. 65) declares him to have been one of nine mind-born sons or Brahmās created by Brahmā in the Manvantara just mentioned. The same Purāṇa, however, iii. 1, 14, makes him also one of the seven rishis of the existing or Vaivasvata Manvantara, of which the son of Vivasvat, Srāddhadeva,¹²¹ is the Manu (Vivasvataḥ suto vipra Srāddhadevo mahādyutiḥ | Manuḥ saṁvarttate dhīmān sāmprataṁ saptame 'ntare . . . Vasishṭhaḥ Kūśyapo 'thātrir Jamadagniḥ sa-Gautamaḥ | Viśvāmitra-Āharadvājau sapta saptarshayo 'bhavan). The Mahābhārata (see p. 122) varies in its accounts, as in one place it does not include Vasishṭha among Brahmā's six mind-born sons, whilst in a second passage it adds him to the number which is there raised to seven,¹²² and in a third text describes him as one of twenty-one Prajāpatīs.

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 10, 10, "Vasishṭha had by his wife Ūrjā" (one of the daughters of Daksha, and an allegorical personage, see V. P. i. 7, 18), seven sons called Rajas, Gātra, Ūrdhva-bāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas, and Sukra, who were all spotless rishis" (Ūrjāyām cha Vasishṭhasya saptāyānta vai sutāḥ | Rajo-Gātrordhva-bāhuścha Savanaś chānaghas tathā | Sutapāḥ Sukraḥ ity ete sarve saptarshayo 'malāḥ). This must be understood as referring to the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. The Commentator says these sons were the seven rishis in the third Manvantara (saptarshayas tṛtīya-manvantare). In the description of that period the V. P. merely says, without naming them (iii. 1, 9) that "the seven sons of Vasishṭha were the seven rishis" (Vasishṭha-tanayās tatra sapta saptarshayo 'bhavan).¹²³ The Bhāgavata Purāṇa (iv. 1, 40 f.) gives the names of Vasishṭha's sons differently; and also specifies Śaktṛi and others as the offspring of a different marriage. (Compare Professor Wilson's notes on these passages of the Vishṇu Purāṇa.)

¹²² In another verse also (Ādip. 6638, which will be quoted below in a future section) he is said to be a mind-born son of Brahmā.

In Manu, ix. 22 f., it is said that "a wife acquires the qualities of the husband with whom she is duly united, as a river does when blended with the ocean. 23. Akshamālā, though of the lowest origin, became honourable through her union with Vasishṭha, as did also Sārāṅgī through her marriage with Mandapāla" (Yādriḡ-guṇena bhart-trā strī saṁyujyate yathāvidhi | tādriḡ-guṇā sā bhavati samudreṇa nim-nagā | 23. Akshamālā Vasishṭhena saṁyuktā 'dhama-yoni-jā | Sārāṅgī Mandūpalena jagāmūbhyarhaṇīyatām).

Vasishṭha's wife receives the same name (Vasishṭhas chākshamālayā) in a verse of the Mahābhārata (Udyogaparvan, v. 3970);¹²⁴ but in two other passages of the same work, which will be adduced further on, she is called Arundhatī.¹²⁵

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa (ii. 10, 8) Vasishṭha is one of the superintendents who in the month of Āshāḍha abide in the Sun's chariot, the others being Varuṇa, Rambhā, Sahajanyā, Huhu, Budha, and Rathachitra (Vasishṭho Varuṇo Rambhā Sahajanyā Huhur Budhaḥ | Rathachitras tathā S'ukre vasanty Āshāḍha-sanjñite); whilst in the month of Phalguṇa (ibid. v. 16) the rival sage Viśvāmitra exercises the same function along with Vishṇu, Aśvatara, Rambhā, Sūryavarchas, Satyajit, and the Rākshasa Yajñāpeta (śrūyatām chāpare sūrye phāl-guṇe nivasanti ye | Viśṇur Aśvataro Rambhā Sūryavarchās cha Sat-yajit | Viśvāmitras tathā raksho Yajñāpeto mahātmanah).

At the commencement of the Vāyu Purāṇa Vasishṭha is characterized as being the most excellent of the rishis (rishinām cha varishṭhāya Vasishṭhāya mahātmane).

It is stated in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iii. 3, 9, that the Vedas have been already divided twenty-eight times in the course of the present or Vaivasvata Manvantara; and that this division has always taken place in the Dvāpara age of each system of four yugas. In the first Dvāpara Brahmā Svayambhū himself divided them; in the sixth Mrityu (Death, or Yama); whilst in the eighth Dvāpara it was Vasishṭha who was the Vyāsa or divider (Aśtāvīmśatikṛitvo vai vedāḥ vyastūḥ maharshibhiḥ | Vaivasvate 'ntare tasmin dvāpareshu punaḥ punaḥ | . . . 10. Dvāpare prathamē vyastūḥ svayam vedāḥ Svayambhuvā | . . . 11. . . . Mrityuḥ shashṭhe smṛitah prabhuḥ | . . . Vasishṭhas chāshṭame smṛitah).

was, as we have seen above, the family-priest of son of Ikshvāku, who was the son of Manu Vaivasvata, and the first prince of the solar race of kings; and in a passage of the Mahābhārata, Ādip. (6643 f.), which will be quoted in a future section, he is stated to have been the purohita of all the kings of that family. He is accordingly mentioned in Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 3, 18, as the religious teacher of Sagara, the thirty-seventh in descent from Ikshvāku (tat-kula-guruṃ Vasishṭham śaraṇaṃ jagmuḥ); and as conducting a sacrifice for Saudāsa or Mitrasaha, a descendant in the fiftieth generation of the same prince (Vishṇu P. iv. 4, 25, Kālena gachhātā sa Saudāso yajnam ayaṅjat | parinishṭhita-yajne cha āchāryye Vasishṭhe nishkrānte ityādi).

Vasishṭha is also spoken of in the Rāmāyaṇa, ii. 110, 1 (see above, p. 115), and elsewhere (ii. 111, 1, etc.), as the priest of Rāma, who appears from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, (iv. 4, 40, and the preceding narrative), to have been a descendant of Ikshvāku in the sixty-first generation.¹²⁶

Vasishṭha, according to all these accounts, must have been possessed of a vitality altogether superhuman; for it does not appear that any of the accounts to which I have referred intend under the name of Vasishṭha to denote merely a person belonging to the family so called, but to represent the founder of the family himself as taking part in the transactions of many successive ages.

It is clear that Vasishṭha, although, as we shall see, he is frequently designated in post-vedic writings as a Brāhman, was, according to some other authorities I have quoted, not really such in any proper sense of the word, as in the accounts which are there given of his birth he is declared to have been either a mind-born son of Brahmā, or the son of Mitra, Varuṇa, and the Apsaras Urvaśī, or to have had some other supernatural origin.

SECT. VII.—Viśvāmitra.

Viśvāmitra is stated in the Anukramaṇikā, as quoted by Sāyaṇa at the commencement of the third Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda, to be the rishi, or "seer," of that book of the collection: Asya maṇḍala-draśṭā

¹²⁶ Rāma's genealogy is also given in the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 70, and ii. 110, 6 ff., where, however, he is said to be only the thirty-third or thirty-fourth from Ikshvāku.

Viśvāmitraḥ ṛishiḥ | “The rishi of this (the first hymn) was Viśvāmitra, the ‘seer’ of the Maṇḍala.” This, however, is to be understood with some exceptions, as other persons, almost exclusively his descendants, are said to be the rishis of some of the hymns.

I shall quote such passages as refer, or are traditionally declared to refer, to Viśvāmitra or his family.

In reference to the thirty-third hymn the Nirukta states as follows :

ii. 24. Tatra itihāsam āchakshate | Viśvāmitraḥ ṛishiḥ Sudāsaḥ Pajavanasya purohito babhūrā . . . | sa vittaṁ grihītvā Vipāt-chhutudryoḥ sambhedam āyayau | anuyayur itare | sa Viśvāmitro nadīs tushṭāva “gādhaḥ bhavata” iti |

“They there relate a story. The rishi Viśvāmitra was the purohita of Sudās, the son of Pijavana. (Here the etymologies of the names Viśvāmitra, Sudās, and Pijavana are given.) Taking his property, he came to the confluence of the Vipās and Sutudrī (Sutlej); others followed. Viśvāmitra lauded the rivers (praying them to) become fordable.”

Sāyaṇa expands the legend a little as follows :

Purā kila Viśvāmitraḥ Pajavanasya Sudāso rājnaḥ purohito babhūra | sa cha paurohityena labdha-dhanaḥ sarvaṁ dhanam ādāya Vipāt-chhutudryoḥ sambhedam āyayau | anuyayur itare | athottitirshur Viśvāmitro ‘gādha-jale te nadyau dṛishṭvā uttaraṇārtham ādyābhis tisṛibhis tushṭāva |

“Formerly Viśvāmitra was the purohita of king Sudās, the son of Pijavana. He, having obtained wealth by means of his office as purohita, took the whole of it, and came to the confluence of the Vipās and the Sutudrī. Others followed. Being then desirous to cross, but perceiving that the waters of the rivers were not fordable, Viśvāmitra, with the view of getting across lauded them with the first three verses of the hymn.”

The hymn makes no allusion whatever to Sudās, but mentions the son of Kuśika (Viśvāmitra) and the Bharatas. It is not devoid of poetical beauty, and is as follows :

R.V. iii. 33, 1 (= Nirukta, ix. 39). Pra parvatānām usatī upasthād asve iva vishite hāsamāne | gāveṣa śubhre mātaraḥ rihāne Vipāt Chhutudrī payasā javeto | 2. Indreshite prasavam bhikshamāne achha samudraṁ rathyā iva yāthaḥ | samārāṇe ūrmibhiḥ pinvamāne anyā vām anyām api eti śubhre | 3. Achha sindhum mātritamām ayāsam Vipāsam ūrvīm

"1. (Viśvāmitra speaks): Hastening eagerly from the heart of the mountains, contending like two mares let loose, like two bright mother-cows licking¹²⁷ (each her calf), the Vipās and Sūtudrī rush onward with their waters. 2. Impelled by Indra, seeking a rapid course, ye move towards the ocean, as if mounted on a car. Running together, as ye do, swelling with your waves, the one of you joins the other, ye bright streams. 3. I have come to the most motherly stream; we have arrived at the broad and beautiful Vipās; proceeding, both of them, like two mother(-cows) licking each her calf, to a common receptacle. 4. (The rivers reply): Here swelling with our waters we move forward to the receptacle fashioned by the gods (the ocean); our headlong course cannot be arrested. What does the sage desire that he invokes the rivers? 5. (Viśvāmitra says) Stay your course for a moment, ye pure streams, (yielding) to my pleasant words.¹²⁸ With a powerful prayer, I, the son of Kusika,¹²⁹ desiring succour, invoke the river. 6. (The rivers answer): Indra, the wielder of the thunderbolt, has hollowed out our channels; he has smitten Ahi who hemmed in the streams. Savitṛi the skilful-handed has led us hither; by his impulse we flow on in our breadth. 7. For ever to be celebrated is the heroic deed of Indra, that he has split Vṛittra in sunder. He smote the obstructions with his thunderbolt; and the waters desiring an outlet went on their way. 8. Do not, o utterer of praises, forget this word, which future ages will re-echo to thee. In hymns, o bard, show us thy devotion; do not humble us before men; reverence be paid to thee. 9. (Viśvāmitra says): Listen, o sisters, to the bard who has come to you from afar with waggon and chariot. Sink down; become fordable; reach not up to our chariot-axles with your streams. 10. (The rivers answer): We shall listen to thy words, o bard; thou hast come from far with waggon and chariot. I will bow down to thee like a woman with full breast¹³⁰ (suckling her child); as a maid to a man will I throw myself open to thee. 11. (Viśvāmitra says): When the Bharatas,¹³¹ that war-loving tribe, sent forward, impelled by Indra, have crossed thee, then thy headlong current shall hold on its course. I seek the favour of you the adorable. 12. The war-loving Bharatas have crossed; the Sage has obtained the favour of the rivers. Swell on impetuous, and fertilizing; fill your channels; roll rapidly."

The next quotation is from the fifty-third hymn of the same third Maṇḍala, verses 6 ff.:

6. Apūḥ somam astam Indra pra yāhi kalyāṇīr jāyā suraṇām grihe moment to my amiable speech, ye streams rich in water; stay your progress;" and adds in a note: "I do not connect the particle upa with ramadhvam, as the Nirukta and Sāyaṇa do; the fact that upa stands in another Pāda (quarter of the verse) requires a different explanation. The most of those interpretations of the Commentator which destroy the sense have their ultimate ground in the circumstance that he combines the words of different divisions of the verse; and any one may easily convince himself that every Pāda has commonly a separate sense, and is far more independent of the others than is the case in the śloka of later times." In his Lexicon Roth renders ritūvarī in this passage by "regular," "equally flowing."

¹²⁹ "Kusika was a king" (Kusiko rājā babhūva, Nir. ii. 25). Sāyaṇa calls him a royal rishi.

¹³¹ "The men of the family of Bharata, my people" (Bharata-kula-jāḥ madīyūḥ sarve). Sāyaṇa).

17-20 we have the following: "21. Prosper us to-day, o opulent Indra, by numerous and most excellent succours. May he who hates us fall down low; and may breath abandon him whom we hate." This is succeeded by three obscure verses, of which a translation will be attempted further on.

Sāyana prefaces verses 15 and 16 by a quotation from Shadguru-sishya's Commentary on the Anukramaṇikā, which is given with an addition in Weber's Indische Studien i. 119 f. as follows: Sasarpari-dv-riche prāhur itihasam purāvidaḥ, Saudāsa-nṛpater yajne Vasishṭhāt-maja-Suktinā | Viśvāmitrasyābhībhūtam balaṁ vāk cha samantataḥ | Vasishṭhenābhībhūtaḥ sa hy avāsīdach cha Gādhi-jah | tasmai Brāhmīm tu Saurīm vā nāmnā vāchaṁ Sasarparīm | Sārya-veśmana āhṛitya dadūr vai Jamadagnayah | Kuśikānām tataḥ sā vān manāk chintām athānudat | upapreteti Kuśikān Viśvāmitro 'nvachodayat | labdhvā vā-chaṁ cha hrishṭātmā Jamadagnīn apūjayat | "Sasarpari" iti dvābhyām ṛigbhyām Vācham stuvam svayam | "Regarding the two verses beginning "Sasarpari" those acquainted with antiquity tell a story. At a sacrifice of king Saudāsa¹³⁰ the power and speech of Viśvāmitra were completely vanquished by Sukti, son of Vasishṭha; and the son of Gādhi (Viśvāmitra) being so overcome, became dejected. The Jamadagnis drew from the abode of the Sun a Voice called "Sasarpari," the daughter of Brāhmā, or of the Sun, and gave her to him. Then that voice somewhat dispelled the disquiet of the Jamadagnis [or, according to the reading of this line given by Sāyana (Kuśikānām matiḥ sā vāg amatiṁ tām apānudat) "that Voice, being intelligence, dispelled the unintelligence of the Kuśikas."]. Viśvāmitra then incited the Kuśikas with the words upapreta 'approach' (see verse 11). And being gladdened by receiving the Voice, he paid homage to the Jamadagnis, praising them with the two verses beginning "Sasarpari."

In regard to the verses 21-24 Sāyana has the following remarks: Indra utibhir ity ādyāś chatasro Vasishṭha-dveshinyah | purā khalu Viśvāmitra-sishyah Sudāḥ nāma rājarshir āsīt | sa cha kenachit karanena Vasishṭha-dveshyo 'bhūt | Viśvāmitras tu śishyasya rakshartham ābhir ṛigbhir Vasishṭham āsapat | imāḥ abhiśāpa-rūpāḥ | tāḥ richo Vasishṭhāḥ na śrinṇvanti | "The four verses beginning 'o Indra, with succours' express hatred to Vasishṭha. There was formerly a royal rishi called

Sudās, a disciple of Viśvāmitra; who for some reason had incurred the ill-will of Vasishṭha. For his disciple's protection Viśvāmitra cursed Vasishṭha in these verses. They thus consist of curses, and the Vasishṭhas do not listen to them."

In reference to the same passage the Bṛihaddevatā iv. 23 f., as quoted in Indische Studien, i. 120, has the following lines: Parāś chatasro yās tatra Vasishṭha-dveshinī viduḥ | Viśvāmitrena tāḥ proktāḥ abhiśūpāḥ iti smritāḥ | dvesha-dveshās tu tāḥ proktāḥ vidyāḥ chaurābhichārikāḥ | Vasishṭhās tu na śṛṇvanti tad āchāryaka-sammataḥ | kīrttanāḥ chhavanād vā 'pi mahān doṣaḥ prajāyate | śatadhā bhidyate mūrdhā kīrtti-tena śrūtena vā | teshāṃ bālāḥ pramīyante tasmāt tās tu na kīrttayet | "The other four verses of that hymn, which are regarded as expressing hatred to Vasishṭha, were uttered by Viśvāmitra, and are traditionally reported to contain imprecations. They are said to express hatred in return for (?) hatred, and should also be considered as incantations. The descendants of Vasishṭha do not listen to them, as this is the will of their preceptor. Great guilt is incurred by repeating or hearing them. The heads of those who do so are split into a hundred fragments; and their children die. Wherefore let no one recite them."

Durga, the commentator on the Nirukta,¹⁴⁰ in accordance with this injunction and warning, says in reference to verse 23: Yasmin nigame esha śabdah (lodhaḥ) sā Vasishṭha-dveshinī rik | ahaṁ cha Kāpishṭhala Vāsishṭhaḥ | atas tūṁ na nirbravīmi | "The text in which this word (lodha) occurs is a verse expressing hatred of Vasishṭha. But I am a Kāpishṭhala of the family of Vasishṭha; and therefore do not interpret it."

The following text also may have reference to the personal history of Viśvāmitra: R. V. iii. 43, 4. Ā cha tvām etā vṛishanā vahāto harī sukhāyā sudhurā svangā | dhānāvad Indrah savanāṁ jushānaḥ sakhā sakhyuḥ śṛṇavatad vandanāni | 5. Kuvid mā gopaṁ karase jānasya kuvid rājānam maghavann rījishin | kuvid mā rīshim papivāṁsaṁ sutasya kuvid me caso amṛitasya śikshāḥ | "4. May these two vigorous brown steeds, friendly, well-yoked, stout-limbed, convey thee hither. May Indra gratified by our libation mingled with grain, hear (like) a friend, the praises of a friend. 5. Wilt thou make me a ruler of the people? wilt thou make me a king, o impetuous lord of riches? wilt thou make me a rishi a drinker of soma? wilt thou endow me with imperishable wealth?"

The next passage refers to Devaśravas and Devavāta, of the race of Bharata, who are called in the Anukramanikā, quoted by Sāyaṇa, "sons of Bharata" (Bharatasya putrau); but one of whom at least is elsewhere, as we shall see, said to be a son of Viśvāmitra: R.V. iii. 23, 2. Amanthishṭām Bhāratā revad Agniṁ Devaśravāḥ Devavātāḥ sudaksham | Agne vi paśya bṛihatā 'bhi rāyā ishām no netā bhavatād anudyūn | 3. Daśa kshipaḥ pūrvaṃ sīm ajjjanan sujātam mātṛishu priyam | Agniṁ stuhi Daivavātāṁ Devaśravo yo janānām asud vaśi | 4. Nītvā dadhe vare ā prithivyāḥ ilāyās pade sudinatṛe ahnām | Dṛishadvratyām mānushē Āpayāyām Sarasvatyām revad Agne didhi | "2. The two Bhāratas Devaśravas and Devavāta have brilliantly created by friction the powerful Agni. Look upon us, o Agni, manifesting thyself with much wealth; be a bringer of nourishment to us every day. 3. The ten fingers (of Devavāta) have generated the ancient god, happily born and dear to his mothers. Praise, o Devaśravas, Agni, the offspring of Devavāta, who has become the lord of men. 4. I placed (or he placed) thee on the most excellent spot of earth on the place of worship,¹⁴ at an auspicious time. Shine, o Agni, brilliantly on the (banks of the) Dṛishadvratī, on (a site) auspicious for men, on (the banks of) the Āpayā, of the Sarasvatī."

Viśvāmitra is mentioned along with Jamadagni in the fourth verse of the 167th hymn of the tenth Maṇḍala, which is ascribed to these two sages as its authors: Prasūto bhaksham akaram charāv api stomam chemam prathamāḥ sūrir un mrije | sute sātena yadi āgamaṁ vām prati Viśvāmitra-Jamadagniṁ dame | "Impelled, I have quaffed this draught of soma when the oblation of boiled rice was presented; and I, the first bard, prepare this hymn, whilst I have come to you, o Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni in the house, with that which has been offered as a libation."

The family of the Viśvāmitras has, as we have seen, been already mentioned in R.V. iii. 53, 13. They are also named in the following passages:

iii. 1, 21. Janman janman nihito Jātavedaḥ Viśvāmitrebhir idhyate ajasrah |

¹⁴ Compare R.V. iii. 29, 3, 4.

"The undecaying Jātavedas (Agni) placed (on the hearth) is in every generation kindled by the Viśvāmitras."

iii. 18, 4. *Uch chhochishā sahasas putraḥ stuto bṛihad vayaḥ śaśamāneshu dhehi | rovad Agne Viśvāmitreshu śaṁ yor marmṛijma te tanvam
bhūri kṛitvaḥ |*

"Son of strength, when lauded, do thou with thy upward flame inspire vigorous life into thy worshippers; (grant) o Agni, brilliant good fortune and prosperity to the Viśvāmitras; many a time have we given lustre to thy body."

x. 89, 17. *Eva te vayam Indra bhūnjatīnām vidyāma sumatinām navā-
nām | vidyāma rastor arasā grīnanto Viśvāmitrāḥ uta te Indra nūnam |*

"Thus may we obtain from thee new favours to delight us: and may we, Viśvāmitras, who praise thee, now obtain riches through thy help, o Indra."

This hymn is ascribed in the Anukramanī to Reṇu, the son or descendant of Viśvāmitra; and the 18th verse is identical with the 22nd of the 30th hymn of the third Maṇḍala, which is said to be Viśvāmitra's production.

In a verse already quoted (R.V. iii. 33, 11) Viśvāmitra is spoken of as the son of Kuśika; at least the Nirukta regards that passage as referring to him; and the Kuśikas, who no doubt belonged to the same family as Viśvāmitra, are mentioned in another hymn which I have cited (iii. 53, 9, 10). They are also alluded to in the following texts:

B.V. iii. 26, 1. *Vaiśvānaram manasā 'gniṁ nichāyya harishmanto anushatyaṁ svarvidam | sudānuṁ devāṁ rathirām vasūyavo gīrbhiḥ ranvaṁ
Kuśikāso havāmahe | 3. Aśvo na krandan janibhiḥ sam idhyate

"We, the Kuśikas, presenting oblations, and desiring riches, revering in our souls, as is meet,¹⁴² the divine Agni Vaiśvānara, the heavenly, the bountiful, the charioteer, the pleasant, invoke him with hymns. . . . 3. Vaiśvanara, who (crackles) like a neighing horse, is kindled by the Kuśikas with the mothers (i.e. their fingers) in every age. May ¹⁴² This is the sense of anushatyam according to Prof. Aufrecht. Sāyana makes it one of the epithets of Agni "he who is true to his promise in granting rewards according to works" (satyenānuyataṁ karmūnurūpa-phala-pradāne satya-pratijñam).

this Agni, who is ever alive among the immortals, bestow on us wealth, with vigour and with horses."

iii. 29, 15. Amitrāyudho Marutām iva prayāḥ prathamajāḥ brahmaṇo viśvam id viduḥ | dyumnavad brahma Kuśikūsaḥ ā irire ekaḥ eko dame Agniṁ sam idhire |

"Combating their enemies like the hosts of the Maruts, (the sages) the first-born of prayer¹⁴³ know everything; the Kuśikas have sent forth an enthusiastic prayer; they have kindled Agni, each in his own house."

iii. 30, 20. Imaṁ kāmam mandaya gobhir āsvaiś chandrāvatā rādhasā paprathas cha | svaryavo matibhis tubhyam viprāḥ Indrāya vāhaḥ Kuśikūso akran |

"Gratify this (our) desire with kine and horses; and prosper us with brilliant wealth. The wise Kuśikas, desiring heaven, have with their minds composed for thee a hymn."

iii. 42, 9. Tvāṁ sutasya pītaye pratnam Indra havāmahe | Kuśikūso avasyavaḥ |

"We, the Kuśikas, desiring succour, summon thee the ancient Indra to drink the soma libation."

It will be seen from these passages that the Viśvāmitras and the Kuśikas assert themselves to have been ancient worshippers of Agni, and to be the composers of hymns, and the possessors of all divine knowledge.

In the eleventh verse of the tenth hymn of the first Maṇḍala of the R.V., of which the traditional author is Madhuchhandas of the family of Viśvāmitra, the epithet Kauśika is applied to Indra: Ā tu naḥ Indra Kauśika mandasānaḥ sutam piba | naryam āyuḥ pra sutira kridhi sahasra-sām ṛishim | "Come, Indra, Kauśika, drink our oblation with delight. Grant me new and prolonged life; make the rishi the possessor of a thousand boons."

tulyam putram ichhan brahmacharyaṁ chachāra | tasya Indrah eva Gāthi putro jajne” iti | “Kauśika means the son of Kuśika . . . Although Viśvāmitra was the son of Kuśika, yet, as it was Indra who was born in his form, there is nothing to hinder Indra being the son of Kuśika. This story is thus told in the Anukramaṇikā: ‘Kuśika, the son of Ishīratha desiring a son like Indra, lived in the state of a Brahmachārin. It was Indra who was born to him as his son Gāthin.’” To this the Anukramaṇī (as quoted by Prof. Müller, Rig-veda, vol. ii. pref. p. xl.) adds the words: Gāthino Viśvāmitrah | sa tṛtīyam maṇḍalam apaśyat | “The son of Gāthin was Viśvāmitra, who saw the third Maṇḍala.” In quoting this passage Professor Müller remarks: “According to Shaḍ-guruśishya this preamble was meant to vindicate the Rishitva of the family of Viśvāmitra: ¹⁴⁴ Saty apavāde srayam rishitvam anubharato Viśvāmitra-gotrasya rivakshayaḥ itihāsaṁ āha” | “Wishing to declare the rishihood of the family of Viśvāmitra which was controverted, although they were themselves aware of it, he tells a story.”

Professor Roth in his Lexicon (s.v. Kauśika) thinks that this term as originally applied to Indra meant merely that the god “belonged, was devoted to,” the Kuśikas; and Professor Benfey, in a note to his translation of R.V. i. 10, 11,¹⁴⁵ remarks that “by this family-name Indra is designated as the sole or principal god of this tribe.”

¹⁴⁵ Orient and Occident, vol. i. p. 18, note 50. We have seen above, p. 345, that in R.V. iii. 23, 3, another god, Agni, is called Daivavāta, after the rishi Devavāta, by whom he had been kindled. Compare also the expression Divodāso Agniḥ in R.V. viii. 92, 2, which Sāyaṇa explains as = Divodāsa āhūyamūno'gniḥ, “Agni invoked by Divodāsa;” while Prof. Roth s.v. understands it to mean “Agni who stands in relation to Divodāsa.” In R.V. vi. 16, 19, Agni is called Divodāsaḥ satpatiḥ, “the good lord of Divodāsa.” Agni is also called Bhārata in R.V. ii. 7, 1, 5; iv. 25, 4; vi. 16, 19. On the first text (ii. 7, 1) Sāyaṇa says Bharatāḥ r̥tvijāḥ | teshāṁ sambandhi Bhārataḥ, “Bharatas are priests. Bhārata is he who is connected with them.” On ii. 7, 5 he explains the word by r̥tvijūṁ putra-sthāniya, “Thou who art in the place of a son to the priests.” On the second text (iv. 25, 4) tasmai Agnir Bhārataḥ śarma yaṁsat, “may Agni Bhārata give him protection”) Sāyaṇa takes Bhārata to mean “the bearer of the oblation” (haviṣo dharttā); but also refers to the S.P.Br. i. 4, 2, 2, where it is said, “or Agni is called ‘Bhārata,’ because, becoming breath, he sustains all creatures”

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa (pp. 398–400, Wilson, 4to. ed.) Viśvāmitra was the twelfth in descent from Purūravas, the persons intermediate being (1) Amāvasu, (2) Bhīma, (3) Kāñchana, (4) Suhotra, (5) Jahnu, (6) Sumantu, (7) Ajaka, (8) Valākāśva, (9) Kuśa, (10) Kuśāmba, and (11) Gādhi. The birth of Viśvāmitra's father is thus described, V.P. iv. 7, 4: Teshāṃ Kuśāmbaḥ "śakra-tulyo me putro bhaved" iti tapas chachāra | taṃ cha ugra-tapasam avalokya "mā bhavato anyo 'smat-tulya-vīryyaḥ" ity ātmanā eva asya Indrah putratvam agachhat | Gādhir nāma sa Kauśiko bhavat | "Kuśāmba (one of Kuśa's four sons) practised austere fervour with the view of obtaining a son equal to Indra. Perceiving him to be very ardent in his austere fervour, Indra, fearing lest another person should be born his own equal in vigour, became himself the son of Kuśāmba, with the name of Gādhi the Kauśika." Regarding the birth of Viśvāmitra himself, the Vishṇu Purāṇa relates the following story: Gādhi's daughter Satyavatī had been given in marriage to an old Brāhman called Richika, of the family of Bhṛigu. In order that his wife might bear a son with the qualities of a Brāhman, Richika had prepared for her a dish of charu (rice, barley, and pulse, with butter and milk) for her to eat; and a similar mess for her mother, calculated to make her conceive a son with the character of a warrior. Satyavatī's mother, however, persuaded her to exchange messes. She was blamed by her husband on her return home for what she had done. I quote the words of the original:

V.P. iv. 7, 14. "Ati pāpe kim idam akūryyam bhavatyā kṛitam | atiraudraṃ te vapur ālakshyate | nūnaṃ trayā tvan-mātri-satkṛitāś charur upayuktaḥ (? upabhuktaḥ) | na yuktam etat | 15. Mayā hi tattva charau sakalā eva śauryya-vīryya-bala-sampad āropitā tvadiye charāv apy akhila-śānti-jnāna-titikshadikā brāhmaṇa-sampat | etach cha vipa- (esha u vai imāḥ prajāḥ prūṇo bhūtvā bibharti tasmād vā iva āha "Bhārata" iti). Another explanation had previously been given that the word Bhārata means "he who bears oblations to the gods." On the third text (vi. 16, 19) Sāyaṇa interprets the term in the same way. Roth, s.v., thinks it may mean "warlike." In R.V. vii. 8, 4, (V.S. 12, 34) we find the words pra pra ayam Agnir Bharatasya śrinve, "this Agni (the son?) of Bharata has been greatly renowned." Sāyaṇa makes bharatasya = yajamānasya, "the worshipper," and pra pra śrinve = prathito bhavati, "is renowned." The Comm. on the Vāj. S. translates "Agni hears the invocation of the worshipper" (śrinve śrinute āhvānam). The S. P. Br. vi. 8, 1, 14, quotes the verse, and explains Bharata as meaning "Prajāpati, the supporter of the universe" (Prajāpatir vai Bharataḥ sa hi ilāni sarvam bibharti).

" 'Sinful woman, what improper deed is this that thou hast done? I behold thy body of a very terrible appearance. Thou hast certainly eaten the charu prepared for thy mother. This was wrong. For into that charu I had infused all the endowments of heroism, vigour, and force, whilst into thine I had introduced all those qualities of quietude, knowledge, and patience which constitute the perfection of a Brāhman. Since thou hast acted in contravention of my design a son shall be born to thee who shall live the dreadful, martial, and murderous life of a Kshattriya; and thy mother's offspring shall exhibit the peaceful disposition and conduct of a Brāhman.' As soon as she had heard this, Satyavatī fell down and seized her husband's feet, and said, 'My lord, I have acted from ignorance; show kindness to me; let me not have a son of the sort thou hast described; if thou pleasest, let me have a grandson of that description.' Hearing this the muni replied, 'Be it so.' Subsequently she bore Jamadagni, and her mother gave birth to Viśvāmitra. Satyavatī became the river called Kausikī. Jamadagni wedded Reṇukā, the daughter of Reṇu, of the family of Ikshvāku; and on her he begot a son called Paraśurāma, the slayer of the entire race of Kshattriyas, who was a portion of the divine Nārāyaṇa, the lord of the universe.¹⁴⁶ To Viśvāmitra a son called Śunaśśepa, of the race of Bhṛigu, was given by the gods, who in consequence received the name of Devarāta ("god-given"). And then other sons, Madhuchhandas, Jayakṛita, Devadeva, Ashtaka, Kachhapa, Hāritaka, etc., were born to Viśvāmitra. From them sprang many families of Kauśikas, which intermarried with those of other rishis."

¹⁴⁶ According to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, i. 3, 20, Paraśurāma was the sixteenth incarnation of Viṣṇu: Avatāre shoḍaśame paśyaṇ brahma-druho nṛipān | trisapt-

The Harivaṁśa, verses 1425 ff., gives a similar account, but makes Kuśika, not Kuśāmba, the grandfather of Viśvāmitra :

Kuśa-putrūḥ babbhūvur hi chatvāro deva-varchasaḥ | Kuśikaḥ Kuśanābhaś cha Kuśāmba Mūrtimāns tathā | Pahlavaiḥ saha saṁvṛiddho rājā vana-charais tadū | Kuśikas tu tapas tepe puttram Indra-samaṁ vibhuh | labhcyam iti taṁ Sakras trāsād abhyetya jajnivān | pūrṇe varsha-sahasre vai taṁ tu S'akro hy apaśyata | aty ugra-tapasaṁ dṛishṭvā sahasrākshaḥ purandaraḥ | samarthaḥ putra-janane svam evāṁśam avāsayat | putratve kalpayāmāsa sa derendraḥ surottamaḥ | sa Gādhir abhavat rājā Maghavān Kauśikaḥ svayam | Paurukutsy abhavat bhāryyā Gādhis tasyām ajāyata |

"Kuśa had four sons, equal in lustre to the gods, Kuśika, Kuśanābha, Kuśāmba, and Mūrtimat. Growing up among the Pahlavas, who dwelt in the woods, the glorious king Kuśika practised austere fervour, with the view of obtaining a son equal to Indra ; and Indra from apprehension came and was born. When a thousand years had elapsed Sakra (Indra) beheld him. Perceiving the intensity of his austere fervour, the thousand-eyed, city-destroying, god of gods, highest of the deities, powerful to procreate offspring, introduced a portion of himself, and caused it to take the form of a son ; and thus Maghavat himself became Gādhi, the son of Kuśika. Paurukutsī was the wife (of the latter), and of her Gādhi was born."

The Harivaṁśa then relates a story similar to that just extracted from the Vishṇu Purāṇa regarding the births of Jamadagni and Viśvāmitra, and then proceeds, verse 1456 :

Aurvasyaivam Richikasya Satyavatyaṁ mahāyaśāḥ | Jamadagnis tapo-vīryyāj jājne brahma-vidūṁ varaḥ | madhyamaś cha S'unaśśephaḥ S'unaḥ-puchhaḥ kanishṭhakaḥ | Viśvāmitraṁ tu dāyūdam Gādhiḥ Kuśika-nandanaḥ | janayāmāsa putraṁ tu tapo-vidyā-samātmaṁ | prāpya brah-

“Thus was the renowned Jamadagni, the most excellent of those possessed of sacred knowledge, born by the power of austere fervour to Richika, the son of Ūrva, by Satyavatī. Their second son was Sunaśśepha¹⁴⁷ and the youngest Sunahpuchha. And Gādhi, son of Kuśika, begot as his son and inheritor Viśvāmitra, distinguished for austere fervour, science, and quietude; who attained an equality with Brahman-rishis, and became one of the seven rishis. The righteous Viśvāmitra, who was known by name as Viśvaratha,¹⁴⁸ was by the favour of a Bhṛigu born to the son of Kuśika, an augments (of the glory) of his race. ¹⁴⁷ The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, as we shall shortly see, makes ‘Sunaśśepa’ a son of Ajigarta. The Mahābhārata Anuśāsanap. verse 186, coincides with the Harivaṁśa.

sons of Viśvāmitra. From them the families of the great Kauśikas are said to have sprung: the Pāṇins, Babhrus, Dhānājapyas, Pārthivas, Devarātas, Śālankāyanas, Vāskalas, Lohitas, Yāmadūtas, Kārishis, Sauśrutas, Kauśikas, Saindhavāyanas, Devalas, Reṇus, Yājñavalkyas, Aghamarshaṇas, Audumbaras, Abhishnātas, Tārakāyanas, Chunchulas, Śālāvatyas, Hiranyākshas, Sāṅkrityas, and Gālavas.¹⁴⁹ Nārāyaṇi and Nara were also (descendants) of the wise Viśvāmitra. Many Kauśikas are recorded who intermarried with the families of other rishis. In this race of the Paurava and Kauśika Brahman-rishi, there is well known to have been a connection of the Brāhmans and Kshattriya. Sunaśepha, who was a descendant of Bhṛigu, and obtained the position of a Kauśika, is recorded to have been the eldest of Viśvāmitra's sons."

It will be observed that in this passage, Devaśravas is given as one of Viśvāmitra's sons. A Devaśravas, as we have already seen, is mentioned in R.V. iii. 23, 2, as a Bhārata, along with Devavāta. Here however in the Harivaṁśa we have no Devavāta, but a Devarāta, who is identified with Sunaśepha. This, as we shall find, is also the case in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.

In the genealogy given in both of the preceding passages, from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, and the 27th chapter of the Harivaṁśa respectively, Viśvāmitra is declared to be the descendant of Amāvasu the third son of Purūravas. In the 32nd chapter of the Harivaṁśa, however, we find a different account. Viśvāmitra's lineage is there traced up to a Jahnu, as in the former case; but Jahnu is no longer represented as a descendant of Amāvasu, the third son of Purūravas; but (as appears from the preceding narrative) of Āyus, the eldest son of that prince, and of Puru, the great-grandson of Āyus. Professor Wilson (Vishṇu Purāṇa, 4to. ed. p. 451, note 23) is of opinion that this confusion originated in the recurrence of the name of Suhotra in different genealogical lists, and in the ascription to one king of this name of descendants who were really sprung from another. It is not, however, clear that the genealogy of Viśvāmitra given in the Vishṇu Purāṇa is the right one. For in the Rig-veda, as we have seen, he is connected with the Bharatas, and in the passage about to be quoted from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, he is called a Bharata and his sons Kuśikas; and Bharata is said both in the Vishṇu Purāṇa (Wilson's V.P. 4to. ed. p. 449) and in the Harivaṃśa (sect. 32, v. 1723, and preceding narrative) to be a descendant of Āyus and of Puru. Accordingly we have seen that the Harivaṃśa styles Viśvāmitra at once a Paurava and a Kauśika.

A similar genealogy to that in the 32nd section of the Harivaṃśa is given in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsanaparvan, verses 201 ff., where it is said that in the line of Bharata there was a king called Ajamīḍha who was also a priest (Bharatasyañvaye chaivājamīḍho nāma pārthuraḥ | babhūva Bharata-śreṣṭha yajvā dharmā-bhṛitām varāḥ), from whom Viśvāmitra was descended through (1) Jahnu, (2) Sindhudvīpa, (3) Balākaśva, (4) Kuśika, (5) Gādhi.

One of the names applied to Viśvāmitra and his race, as I have just noticed, is Bharata.¹⁵⁰ The last of the four verses at the close of the 53rd hymn of the third Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda, which are supposed to contain a malediction directed by Viśvāmitra against Vasishṭha (see above) is as follows : iii. 53, 24. Ime Indra Bharatasya putrāḥ apapitvān chikitur na prapitvam | "These sons of Bharata, o Indra, desire to avoid (the Vasishṭhas), not to approach them." These words are thus explained by Sāyaṇa : Bharatasya putrāḥ Bharata-vaṃśyāḥ ime Viśvāmitrāḥ apapitvam apagamanaṃ Vasishṭhebhyaś chikitur na prapitvam | [Va] sisṭhaiḥ saha teshūṃ sangatir nāsti | brāhmaṇāḥ eva ity arthaḥ | "These sons of Bharata, persons of his race, know departure from, and not approach to, the Vasishṭhas. They do not associate with the Vasishṭhas. This means they are Brāhmins."

The persons who accompanied Viśvāmitra when he wished to cross the Vipāś and the S'utudrī are, as we have seen above, called Bhārātas; and Devaśravas and Devavāta are designated in R.V. iii. 23, 2, as Bhārātas. On the other hand in one of the hymns ascribed to Vasishṭha (R.V. vii. 33, 6) the Bhārātas are alluded to as a tribe hostile to the Tritsus, the race to which Vasishṭha belonged.

In the legend of Sunaśśepa, told in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, vii. 13-18,¹⁵¹ Viśvāmitra is alluded to as being the hotṛi-priest of king Hariśchandra, and as belonging to the tribe of the Bharatas. He is also addressed as rājaputra, and his sons are called Kuśikas. The outlines of the story are as follows: King Hariśchandra of the family of Ikshvāku having no son, promised to Varuṇa, by the advice of Nārada, that if a son should be born to him he would sacrifice him to that god. A son was accordingly born to the king, who received the name of Rohita; but Hariśchandra, though called upon by Varuṇa, put off from time to time, on various pleas, the fulfilment of his promise. When the father at length consented, the youth himself refused to be sacrificed and went into the forest. After passing six years there he met a poor Brāhman rishi called Ajīgarta who had three sons, the second of whom, Sunaśśepa, he sold for a hundred cows to Rohita, who brought the young Brāhman to be sacrificed instead of himself. Varuṇa accepted the vicarious victim, and arrangements were made accordingly, "Viśvāmitra being the hotṛi-priest, Jamadagni the adhvaryu, Vasishṭha the brāhmān, and Ayāsyā the udgāṭri (tasya ha Viśvāmitro hotā āsīj Jamadagnir adhvaryur Vasishṭho brahmā Ayāsyāḥ udgātā)." The sacrifice was not, however, completed, although the father received a hundred more cows for binding his son to the sacrificial post, and a third hundred for agreeing to slaughter him. By reciting verses in honour of different deities in succession Sunaśśepa was delivered; and at the request of the priests took part in the ceremonial of the day. I shall quote the remainder of the story at length:

“Sunaśśepa came to the side of Viśvāmitra. Ajigartta, the son of Suyavasa, said, ‘Rishi, give me back my son.’ ‘No,’ said Viśvāmitra, ‘the gods have given him to me’ (devāḥ arāṣata); hence he became Devarāta the son of Viśvāmitra. The Kāpileyas and Bābhnavas are his descendants. Ajigartta said to Viśvāmitra, ‘Come; let us both call

(him) to us.'¹⁵² He (again) said (to his son), 'Thou art an Āṅgīrasa, the son of Ajigartta, reputed a sage; do not, o rishi, depart from the line of thy ancestors; come back to me.' Sunaśśepa replied, 'They have seen thee with the sacrificial knife in thy hand—a thing which men have not found even among the Sūdras; thou didst prefer three hundred cows to me, o Angiras.' Ajigartta rejoined, 'That sinful deed which I have done distresses me, my son; I abjure it to thee. Let the [three] hundreds of cows revert (to him who gave them).'¹⁵³ Sunaśśepa answered, 'He who once does a sinful deed, will add to it another; thou hast not freed thyself from that iniquity, fit only for a Sūdra. Thou hast done what cannot be rectified.' 'What cannot be rectified,' interposed Viśvāmītra; who continued, 'Terrible was the son of Suyavasa as he stood about to immolate (thee) with the knife: continue not to be his son; become mine.' Sunaśśepa replied, 'Speak, o king's son (rājaputra), whatever thou hast to explain to us, in order that I, though an Āṅgīrasa, may become thy son.' Viśvāmītra rejoined, 'Thou shalt be the eldest of my sons, and thy offspring shall be the most eminent. Thou shalt receive my divine inheritance; with this (invitation) I address thee.' Sunaśśepa answered, 'If (thy sons) agree, then for my welfare enjoin on them to be friendly, that so, o chief of the Bharatas, I may enter on thy sonship.' Viśvāmītra then addressed his sons, 'Do ye, Madhuchhandas, Rishabha, Renu, Aṣṭaka, and all ye who are brothers, listen to me, and concede to him the seniority.' 18. Now Viśvāmītra had a hundred sons, fifty of whom were older than Madhuchhandas and fifty younger. Then those who were older did not approve (their father's proposal). Against them he pronounced (this doom), 'Let your progeny possess the furthest ends (of the country).' These are the numerous border-tribes, the Andhras, Puṇḍras, Śābaras, Pulindas, Mūtibas. Most of the Dasyus are sprung from Viśvāmitra.¹⁵⁴ Madhuchhandas with the (other) fifty said, 'Whatever our father determines, by that we abide. We all place thee in our front, and follow after thee.' Then Viśvāmitra was pleased, and said to his sons, 'Ye, my children who, shewing deference to me, have conferred upon me a (new) son, shall abound in cattle and in sons. Ye, my sons, the offspring of Gāthīn, who possess in Devarāta a man who shall go before you, are all destined to be prosperous; he is your wise instructor. This Devarāta, o Kuśikas, is your chief; follow him. He will receive you as my inheritance, and obtain all the knowledge which we possess.' All these sons of Viśvāmitra, descendants of Gāthīn, submitted together in harmony and with good will to Devarāta's control and superiority. The rishi Devarāta was invested with both possessions, with the lordly authority of the Jahnuś, and with the divine Veda of the Gāthīns."¹⁵⁵

On this legend Professor Müller (Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 415 f.) remarks, amongst other things, as follows: "So revolting, indeed, is the description given of Ajigartta's behaviour in the Brāhmaṇa, that we should rather recognize in him a specimen of the un-Āryan population of India. Such a supposition, however, would be in contradiction with several of the most essential points of the legend, particularly in what regards the adoption of Sunaḥśepa by Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra, though arrived at the dignity of a Brāhman, clearly considers the adoption of Sunaḥśepa Devarāta, of the famous Brahmanic family of the Āngirasas, as an advantage for himself and his descendants; and the Deva-rātas are indeed mentioned as a famous branch of the Viśvāmitras (V.P. p. 405, 23). Sunaḥśepa is made his eldest son, and the leader of his brothers, evidently as the defender and voucher of their Brahmanhood, which must have been then of very recent date, because Viśvāmitra himself is still addressed by Sunaḥśepa as Rāja-putra and Bharata-rishabha." It must, however, be recollected that the story, as told in the Brāhmaṇa, can scarcely be regarded as historical, and that it is not unreasonable to suppose that the incidents related, even if founded on fact, may have been coloured by the Brahmanical prepossessions of the narrator. But if so, the legend can give us no true idea of the light in which Viśvāmitra's exercise of priestly functions was looked upon either by himself or by his contemporaries.

In Indische Studien, ii. 112-123, this story forms the subject of an interesting dissertation by Professor Roth, who arrives at the following conclusions :

"(i.) The oldest legend about Sunaḥśepa (alluded to in R.V. i. 24, 11-13,¹⁵⁶ and R.V. v. 2, 7) knows only of his miraculous deliverance by divine help from the peril of death.

"(ii.) This story becomes expanded in the sequel into a narrative of Sunaḥśepa's threatened slaughter as a sacrificial victim, and of his deliverance through Viśvāmitra.

"(iii.) This immolation-legend becomes severed into two essentially distinct versions, the oldest forms of which are respectively represented by the stories in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, and the Rāmāyaṇa.

"(iv.) The latter becomes eventually the predominant one; but its proper central-point is no longer the deliverance from immolation, but the incorporation of Sunahśepa, or (with a change of persons) of Richika, into the family of the Kuśikas. It thus becomes in the end a family-legend of the race of Viśvāmitra.

"There is thus no historical, perhaps not even a genealogical, result to be gained here. On the other hand the story obtains an important place in the circle of those narratives in which the sacerdotal literature expressed its views regarding the character and agency of Viśvāmitra."

In a passage of the Mahābhārata, Ādip. verses 3694 ff.,¹⁵⁷ where the descendants of Pūru are recorded, we find among them Bharata the son of Dushyanta (verse 3709) from whom (1) Bhumanyu, (2) Suhotra, (3) Ajamīḍha, and (4) Jahnu are said to have sprung in succession (verses 3712-3722); and the last-named king and his brothers Vrajana and Rūpin are said to have been the ancestors of the Kuśikas (verse 3723: anvayāḥ Kuśikāḥ rājan Jahnor amita-tejasaḥ | Vrajana-Rūpinoh), who were therefore, according to this passage also, descended from Bharata (see above, p. 354). The Mahābhārata then goes on to relate that during the reign of Samvarana, son of Jahnu's eldest brother Riksha, the country over which he ruled was desolated by various calamities (verses 3725 f.). The narrative proceeds, verse 3727:

"3727. And the hosts of their enemies also smote the Bhāratas. Shaking the earth with an army of four kinds of forces, the Pāṇchālyā chief assailed him, having rapidly conquered the earth, and vanquished him with ten complete hosts. Then king Samvaraṇa with his wives, ministers, sons, and friends, fled from that great cause of alarm; (3730) and dwelt in the thickets of the great river Sindhu (Indus), in the country bordering on the stream, and near a mountain. There the Bhāratas abode for a long time, taking refuge in a fortress. As they were dwelling there, for a thousand years, the venerable rishi Vasishṭha came to them. Going out to meet him on his arrival, and making obeisance, the Bhāratas all presented him with the arghya offering, shewing every honour to the glorious rishi. When he was seated the king himself solicited him, 'Be thou our priest; let us strive to regain my kingdom.' 3735. Vasishṭha consented to attach himself to the Bhāratas, and, as we have heard, invested the descendant of Pūru with the sovereignty of the entire Kshattriya race, to be a horn (to have mastery) over the whole earth. He occupied the splendid city formerly inhabited by Bhārata, and made all kings again tributary to himself."

It is remarkable that in this passage the Bhāratas, who, as we have seen, are elsewhere represented as being so closely connected with Viśvāmitra, and are in one text of the Rig-veda (vii. 33, 6) alluded to as the enemies of Vasishṭha's friends, should be here declared to have adopted the latter rishi as their priest. The account, however, need not be received as historical, or even based on any ancient tradition; and the part referring to Vasishṭha in particular may have been invented for the glorification of that rishi, or for the honour of the Bhāratas.

The 11th and 12th khandas of the second adhyāya of the Sarvasāra Upanishad (as we learn from Professor Weber's analysis in Ind. St. i. 390) relate that Viśvāmitra was instructed on the identity of breath (prāṇa) with Indra, by the god himself, who had been celebrated by the sage on the occasion of a sacrifice, at which he officiated as hotṛi-priest, in a thousand Bṛihatī verses, and was in consequence favourably disposed towards him.

It is abundantly clear, from the details supplied in this section, that Viśvāmitra, who was a rājanya of the Bhārata and Kuśika families (Ait. Br. vii. 17 and 18), is represented by ancient Indian tradition as the author of numerous Vedic hymns, as the domestic priest (purohita) of king Sudās (Nir. ii. 24), and as officiating as a hotṛi at a sacrifice of king Hariśchandra (Ait. Br. vii. 16). The Rāmāyaṇa also, as we shall see in a future section, connects him with Trisāṅku, the father of Hariśchandra, and makes him also contemporary with Ambarisha; and in the first book of the same poem he is said to have visited king Daśaratha, the father of Rāma (Bālakanda, i. 20, 1 ff.). As these kings were separated from each other by very long intervals, Trisāṅku being a descendant of Ikshvāku in the 28th, Ambarisha in the 44th,¹⁵⁸ Sudās in the 49th, and Daśaratha in the 60th generation (see Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. iii. pp. 284, 303, 304, 313), it is manifest that the authors of these legends either intentionally or through oversight represented Viśvāmitra, like Vasishṭha (see above), as a personage of miraculous longevity; and on either supposition a great deal that is related of him must be purely fabulous. All the authorities describe him as the son of Gāthīn or Gādhi, the Anukramaṇī, the Vishṇu Purāṇa, and the Harivaṁśa declaring also that Gāthīn was an incarnation of Indra, and thus asserting Viśvāmitra to be of divine descent. It is not clear whether this fable is referred to in R.V. iii. 53, 9, where Viśvāmitra is styled deva-jāḥ, "born of a god," or whether this verse may not have led to the invention of the story. In either case the verse can scarcely have emanated from the rishi himself; but it is more likely to be the production of one of his descendants.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁹ The word devajāḥ, which, following Roth, s.v., I have translated "god-born," is taken by Sāyaṇa as = dyotamūnānām tejasām janayitā, "generator of shining lights," and appears to be regarded by him as referring to the creation of constellations by Viśvāmitra, mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 60, 21. Prof. Wilson renders the phrase by "generator of the gods;" and remarks that "the compound is not devajā, 'god-born,' nor was Viśvāmitra of divine parentage" (R.V. iii. p. 85, note 4). This last remark overlooks the fact above alluded to of his father Gādhi being represented as an incarnation of Indra, and the circumstance that Prof. Wilson himself (following Sāyaṇa) had shortly before translated the words prathama-jāḥ brahmanajāḥ in R.V. iii. 29, 15, as applied to the Kuśikas, by "the first-born of Brahmā," although from the accent brahman here must be neuter, and the phrase seems to mean, as I have rendered above, "the first-born of prayer." The word jā is given in the Nighaṇṭu as one of the synonymes of apatya, "offspring;" and in R.V. i. 164, 16, where it is coupled with ṛishayah, the compound devajāḥ is explained by Sāyaṇa as "born of the god," i.e. the sun, and by Prof. Wilson as "born of the gods." See

This verse (R.V. iii. 53, 9) which claims a superhuman origin for Viśvāmitra, and the following verses 11–13 of the same hymn, which assert the efficacy of his prayers, form a sort of parallel to the contents of R.V. vii. 33, where the supernatural birth of Vasishṭha (vv. 10 ff.), the potency of his intercession (vv. 2–5), and the sacred knowledge of his descendants (vv. 7 and 8), are celebrated.

As the hymns of Viśvāmitra and his descendants occupy so prominent a place in the Rig-veda Sanhitā, and as he is the alleged author of the text reputed the holiest in the entire Veda (iii. 62, 10), the Gāyatrī par excellence, there is no reason to doubt that, although he was a rājanya, he was unreservedly acknowledged by his contemporaries to be both a rishi and a priest. Nothing less than the uniform recognition and employment of the hymns handed down under his name as the productions of a genuine “seer,” could have sufficed to gain for them a place in the sacred canon.¹⁶⁰ It is true we possess little authentic information regarding the process by which the hymns of different families were admitted to this honour; but at least there is no tradition, so far as I am aware, that those of Viśvāmitra and his family were ever treated as antilegomena. And if we find that later works consider it necessary to represent his priestly character as a purely exceptional one, explicable only on the ground of supernatural merit acquired by ardent devotion, we must recollect that the course of ages had brought about a most material change in Indian society, that the sacerdotal function had at length become confined to the members of an exclusive caste, and that the exercise of such an office in ancient times by persons of the regal or mercantile classes had ceased to be intelligible, except upon the supposition of such extraordinary sanctity as was alleged in the case of Viśvāmitra.

It is worthy of remark that although the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (see above) declares that Sunaśśepa, as belonging to a priestly family, was called on to exercise the sacerdotal office immediately after his release, yet the anterior possession of divine knowledge is also ascribed to Viśvāmitra and the Gāthins, and that Sunaśśepa is represented as such also R.V. ix. 93, 1 = S.V. i. 538. (Compare Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, for 1866, p. 387 ff.)

ceeding to this sacred lore, as well as to the regal dignity of the race on which he became engrafted.

The fact of Viśvāmitra having been both a rishi and an officiating priest, is thus, as we have seen, and if ancient tradition is to be believed, undoubted. In fact, if we look to the number of Vedic hymns ascribed to him and to his family, to the long devotion to sacerdotal functions which this fact implies, and to the apparent improbability that a person who had himself stood in the position of a king should afterwards have become a professional priest, we may find it difficult to believe that although (as he certainly was) a scion of a royal stock, he had ever himself exercised regal functions. Professor Roth remarks (Litt. u. Gesch. p. 125) that there is nothing either in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, or in the hymns of the Rig-veda to shew that he had ever been a king.¹⁶¹ But on the other hand, as the same writer observes (p. 126), and as we shall hereafter see, there are numerous passages in the later authorities in which the fact of his being a king is distinctly, but perhaps untruly, recorded.

It is so well known, that I need scarcely adduce any proof of the fact, that in later ages Rājanyas and Vaiśyas, though entitled to sacrifice and to study the Vedas, were no longer considered to have any right to officiate as priests on behalf of others. I may, however, cite a few texts on this subject. Manu says, i. 88 :

Adhyāpanam adhyayanam yājānam yājānam tathā | dānam pratigrahaṁ chaiva Brāhmaṇānām akalpayat | 89. Prajānām rakṣaṇam dānam ijjū'dhyayanam eva cha | vishayeshv aprasaktim cha kshattriyasya samāsataḥ | 90. Paśūnām rakṣaṇam dānam ijjū'dhyayanam eva cha | vanikpatham kusīdam cha Vaiśyasya kṛṣim eva cha | 91. Ekan eva tu Sūdrasya prabhuḥ karma samādīśat | eteshām eva varṇānām śuśrūṣhām anasūyayā | 88. He (Brahmā) ordained teaching, study, sacrificing officiating for others at sacrifices, and the giving and receiving of gifts to be the functions of Brāhmins. 89. Protection of the people, the giving of gifts, sacrifice, study, and non-addiction to objects of sense, assigned as the duties of the Kshattriya. 90. The tending of cattle, giving of gifts, sacrifice, study, commerce, the taking of usury, and agriculture he appointed to be the occupations of the Vaiśya. 91. But the lord assigned only one duty to the Sūdra, that of serving these other three classes without grudging." ५२ ५३ ५४

Similarly it is said in the second of the Yajna-paribhāṣhā Sūtras, translated by Professor M. Müller (at the end of the ninth volume of the Journal of the German Oriental Society, p. xliii.), "that sacrifice is proper to the three classes, the Brāhman, Rājanya, and also the Vaisya." 162 Prof. Müller also refers to Kātyāyana's Śrauta Sūtras, of which i. 1, 5 and 6 are as follows:

5. Angahīnāśrotriya - śhaṇḍa - sūdra - varjam | 6. Brāhmaṇa-rājanya - vaiśyānām śruteḥ | "Men, 163 with the exception of those whose members

162 Prof. Müller does not give the original text.

163 In one of these Sūtras of Kātyāyana (i. 1, 4) and its commentary a curious question (one of those which the Indian authors often think it necessary to raise and to settle, in order that their treatment of a subject may be complete and exhaustive) is argued, viz. whether the lower animals and the gods have any share in the practice of Vedic observances; or whether it is confined to men. The conclusion is that the gods cannot practise these rites, as they are themselves the objects of them, and as they have already obtained heaven and the other objects of desire with a view to which they are practised (tatra devūnām devatāntarābhāvād anadhikārah | na hy ātmānam uddīśya tyāgaḥ sambhavati | kincha | devās cha prāpta-svargādi-kāmāḥ | na cha teshūm kinchid avāptavyam asti yad-arthaṁ karmāṇi kurrate |). As regards the right of the lower animals to sacrifice, although the point is decided against them on the ground of their only "looking to what is near at hand, and not to the rewards of a future world" (te hy āsannam eva chetayante na pūralaukikam phalam); still it is considered necessary seriously to obviate a presumption in their favour that they seek to enjoy pleasure and avoid pain, and even appear to indicate their desire for the happiness of another world by seeming to observe some of the Vedic prescriptions: "Na nu uktaṁ śinaś' chaturdaśyām upavāsa-darśanāt śyenasya cha aṣṭamyām upavāsa-darśanāḥ cha te 'pi pūralaukikāṁ jñānti" iti | tat katham avagamyate 'te dharmārtham upavasanti" iti | ye hi vedā-smṛiti-purāṇādikam paṭhanti te eva jñānti yad 'anena karmaṇā idam phalam amutra prāpsyate" iti | na cha ete vedūdikam paṭhanti nīpy anyebhyaḥ āgamaṃ jñānti | tena śāstrārtham avilvānsaḥ phalam āmushmikam akūmayantaḥ katham tat-sūdhanaṁ karma kuryuḥ | tasmiṇ na dharmārtham upavasanti | kimartham tarhy eteshūm upavāsaḥ | uchyate | rogād aruchir eśhūm | tarhi niyata-kāle katham rogaḥ | uchyate | niyata-kālūh api rogūh bhavanti yathā tritīyaka-chā-turthikādi-jvarūh | adhanās cha ete | "But do not some say that 'from a dog having been noticed to fast on the fourteenth day of the month, and a hawk on the eighth, they also have a knowledge of matters connected with a future life?' But how is it known that these dogs and hawks fast from religious motives? For it is only those who read the Vedas, Śāritis, Purāṇas, etc., who are aware that by means of such and such observances, such and such rewards will be obtained in another world. But these animals neither read the sacred books for themselves, nor ascertain their contents from others. How then, ignorant as they are of the contents of the scriptures, and devoid of any desire for future rewards, can they perform those rites which are the means of attaining them? It is therefore to be concluded that they do not fast from religious motives. But why, then, do they fast? We reply, because from sickness they have a disinclination are defective, those who have not read the Veda, eunuchs, and Sūdras have a right to sacrifice. 6. It is Brāhmanas, Rājanyas, and Vaiśya. (only who) according to the Veda (possess this privilege).¹⁶⁴

ation for food. But how do they happen to be sick on certain fixed days? We answer there are also certain diseases which occur on fixed days, as tertian and quartan agues. Another reason why the lower animals cannot sacrifice is that they are destitute of wealth (and so unable to provide the necessary materials)."

¹⁶⁴ "And yet," Prof. Müller remarks (ibid), "concessions were made (to other and lower classes) at an early period. One of the best known cases is that of the Rathakāra. Then the Nishādasthapati, though a Nishāda chief and not belonging to the three highest classes was admitted to great sacrifices, e.g. to the gāvedhukacharu." The S'atap. Br. i. 1, 4, 12, has the following words: Tāni vai tāni chatvāri vācha | "ehi" iti brāhmaṇasya "āgahi" "ādrava" vaiśyasya cha rājanyabandhoḥ cha "ādḥāva" iti sūdrasya | "[In the formula, harishkrid ehi, 'come, o oblation-maker,' referred to in the previous paragraph, and its modifications] these four (different) words are employed to express 'come:' ehi, 'come,' in the case of a Brāhman; āgahi, 'come hither,' in the case of a Vaiśya; ādrava, 'hasten hither,' in the case of a Rājanyabandhu, and ādḥāva, 'run hither,' in the case of a S'ūdra." On this Prof. Weber remarks, in a note on his translation of the first adhyāya of the first book of the S' P. Br. (Journ. Germ. Or. Soc. iv. p. 301): "The entire passage is of great importance, as it shews (in opposition to what Roth says in the first vol. of this Journal p. 83) that the S'ūdras were then admitted to the holy sacrifices of the Arians, and understood their speech, even if they did not speak it. The latter point cannot certainly be assumed as a necessary consequence, but it is highly probable; and I consequently incline to the view of those who regard the S'ūdras as an Arian tribe which immigrated into India before the others." See above, p. 141, note 251, and Ind. Stud. ii. 194, note, where Prof. Weber refers to the Mahābhārata, S'antip. verse 2304 ff. which are as follows: Svāhākāra-vashaṭkūrau mantrāḥ sūdre na vidyate | tasmāch chhūdraḥ pākayajñair yajetūvratavūn svayam | pūrṇapātramayīm āhūḥ pākayajñasya dakṣiṇām | sūdraḥ Pajjavano nūma sahasrāyūm sataim dudau | Aindrūgyena vidhānena dakṣiṇām iti naḥ śrutam | "The svāhākāra, and the vashaṭkāra, and the mantras do not belong to a S'ūdra. Wherefore let a man of this class sacrifice with pākayajñas, being incapacitated for (Vedic) rites (śrauta-vratopāya-hīnaḥ Comm.). They say that the gift (dakṣiṇā) proper for a pākayajna consists of a full dish (pūrṇapātramayī). A S'ūdra called Pajjavana gave as a present a hundred thousand (of these pūrṇapātras) after the Aindrūgya rule." Here, says Prof. Weber, "the remarkable tradition is recorded that Pajjavana, i.e. Sudās, who was so famous for his sacrifices, and who is celebrated in the Rīg-veda as the patron of Viśvāmitra and enemy of Vasishṭha, was a S'ūdra." In the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, vii. 11, 24, the duties of a S'ūdra are described to be "submissiveness, purity, honest service to his master, sacrifice without mantras, abstinence from theft, truth, and the protection of cows and Brāhmanas" (sūdrasya sannatiḥ śūcīhām sevā svāmīny amāyayā | amantrayajno hy asteyaḥ saḥyāḥ go-vipra-rakṣaṇam |). The Commentator defines amantrayajnaḥ thus: namaskāreṇaiva pancha-yajñānushṭhānam, "the practice of the five sacrifices with obsequance," and quotes Yajñavalkya. See also Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. iii. p. 87, and notes; Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 208; the same author's Essay, at the end of the ninth vol. of the Journ. Germ. Or. Soc. p. lxxii; and Bohtlingk and Roth's Lexicon. s.v. vōkavina.

According to the Ait. Br. vii. 19, "the Brāhman alone of the four castes has the right of consuming things offered in sacrifice" (etāḥ vai prajāḥ hutādo yad brāhmaṇāḥ | atha etāḥ ahutādo yad rājanyo vaiśyaḥ śūdraḥ). And yet, as Prof. Müller observes, it is said in the Satap. Br. v. 5, 4, 9 : Chatvāro vai varṇāḥ brāhmaṇo rājanyo vaiśyaḥ śūdro na ha eteshām ekaśchana bhavati yaḥ somaṁ vamati | sa yad ha eteshām ekaśchit syāt syād ha eva prāyaśchittiḥ | "There are four classes, the Brāhman, Rājanya, Vaiśya, and Śūdra. There is no one of these who omits (i.e., I suppose, dislikes) the soma. If anyone of them however should do so, let there be an atonement."

Professor Weber, by whom also these words are quoted (Ind. St. x. 12), remarks that "they leave open the possibility of Rājanyas, Vaiśyas, and even Śūdras partaking of the soma, the only consequence being that they must as an expiation perform the Sautrāmaṇī rite."

In the twenty-first of the Yajna-paribhāshā Sūtras, translated by Müller, p. xlvii., it is declared that the priestly dignity belongs to the Brāhmans; and it is laid down by the Indian authorities that even when the sacrifice is of a kind intended exclusively for Kshattriyas, the priest must still be a Brāhman and not a Kshattriya, the reason being that men of the former class only can eat the remains of the sacrifice (see Kātyāyana's Sr. Sūtras, i. 2, 8): Brāhmaṇāḥ ṛitrijo bhaksha-pratishedhāḥ | Ītarayoh, "the Brāhmans only are priests, because the other two castes are forbidden to eat (the remains of the sacrifice)". See also Weber, Ind. St. x. pp. 17 and 31, and the passages of the Ait. Br. viii. 24 and 27, referred to in pages 30 and 31 : 24. Na ha vai apurohitasya rājno devāḥ annam adanti | tasmād rājā 'yakshamāno brāhmaṇam puro dadhita | "The gods do not eat the food offered by a king who has no purohita. Wherefore (even) when not about to sacrifice, the king should put forward a Brāhman (as his domestic priest)." 27. Yo ha vai trīn purohitāṃs trīn purodhātṛin veda sa brāhmaṇaḥ purohitāḥ | sa vadeta purodhāyai | Agnir vāva purohitāḥ prithivī purodhātā vāyur vāva purohito 'ntariksham purodhātā ādityo vāva purohito dyauḥ purodhātā | esha ha vai purohito yaḥ evaṁ veda atha sa tirohito yaḥ evaṁ na veda | tasya rājā mitraṁ bhavati dvishantam apabādhate | yasyaivaṁ vidvān brāhmaṇo rāshṭra-gopaḥ purohitāḥ | kshattreṇa kshattriṁ jayati balena balam āsnute | yasyaivaṁ vidvān brāhmaṇo rāshṭra-gopaḥ purohitāḥ | tasmai

He who knows this is a (proper) purohita; and he who does not know this is to be rejected. With him who has a Brāhman etc. (as above) the people are openly united and in harmony.”

I add another passage from the same Brāhmaṇa, which might also have been properly introduced in an earlier chapter of this work (chapt. i. sect. iii.) as it relates to the creation of the four castes :

Ait. Br. vii. 19. Prajāpatir yajnam asrijata | yajnaṁ sṛishṭam anu brahma-kshattre asrijyetām | brahma-kshattre anu drayyah prajāḥ asrijyanta hutādaś cha ahutādaś cha brahma eva anu hutāduḥ kshattram anv ahutādaḥ | etāḥ vai prajāḥ hutādo yad brāhmaṇāḥ | atha etāḥ ahutādo yad rājanyo vaiśyaḥ śūdraḥ | tūbhyo yajnaḥ udakrāmat | tam brahma-kshattre anvaitām yāny eva brahmaṇāḥ āyudhāni tair brahma anvait yāni kshattrasya taṁ (? taiḥ) kshattram | etāni vai brahmaṇāḥ āyudhāni yad yajnāyudhāni | atha etāni kshattrasya āyudhani yad āśva-rathaḥ karachaḥ ishū-dhanva | taṁ kshattram ananvāpya nyararttata | āyudhebh्यो ha sma asya vijamānaḥ parāṇ eva eti | atha enam brahma anvait | tam ūpnot | tam āptvā parastād nirudhya atishṭhat | sa āptāḥ parastād niruddhas tishṭhan jñātvā svāny āyudhāni brahma upārvarttata | tasmād ha apy etarhi yajno brahmaṇy eva brāhmaṇeṣhu pratishṭhitāḥ | atha enat kshattram anvāgachhat tad abravīd “upa mū asmin yajne hwayasva” iti | tat “tathā” ity abravīt “tad vai nidhāya svāny āyudhāni brahmaṇāḥ eva āyudhair brahmaṇo rūpeṇa brahma bhūtvā yajnam upavārttasva” iti | “tathā” iti tat kshattram nidhāya svāny āyudhāni brahmaṇāḥ eva āyudhair brahmaṇo rūpeṇa brahma bhūtvā yajnam upārvarttata | tasmād ha apy etarhi kshattriyo yajamāno nidhāya eva svāny āyudhāni brahmaṇāḥ eva āyudhair brahmaṇo rūpeṇa brahma bhūtvā yajnam upārvarttata |

ledge) and Kshātrra (regal power)¹⁶⁵ were created. After these, two kinds of creatures were formed, viz. those who eat, and those who do not eat, oblations. After Brāhmān came the eaters of oblations, and after Kshātrra those who do not eat them. These are the eaters of oblations, viz. the Brāhmans. Those who do not eat them are the Rājanya, the Vaiśya, and the Sūdra. From these creatures sacrifice departed. Brāhmān and Kshātrra followed it, Brāhmān with the implements proper to itself, and Kshātrra with those which are proper to itself. The implements of Brāhmān are the same as those of sacrifice, while those of Kshātrra are a horse-chariot,¹⁶⁶ armour, and a bow and arrows. Kshātrra turned back, not having found the sacrifice; which turns aside afraid of the implements of Kshātrra. Brāhmān followed after it, and reached it; and having done so, stood beyond, and intercepting it. Being thus found and intercepted, sacrifice, standing still and recognizing its own implements, approached to Brāhmān. Wherefore now also sacrifice depends upon Brāhmān, upon the Brāhmans. Kshātrra then followed Brāhmān, and said, 'invite me' (too to participate) in this sacrifice.' Brāhmān replied, 'so be it: then laying aside thy own implements, approach the sacrifice with the implements of Brāhmān, in the form of Brāhmān, and having become Brāhmān.

¹⁶⁸ This idea may be further illustrated by a reference to several passages adduced by Professor Weber, Ind. St. x. 17, who remarks: "Hence every Rājanya and Vaiśya becomes through the consecration for sacrifice (dīkshā) a Brāhmaṇ during its continuance, and is to be addressed as such in the formula employed," and cites S'. P. Br. iii. 2, 1, 39 f., part of which has been already quoted above, in p. 136, note; and also Ait. Br. vii. 23: Sa ha dīkshamāṇaḥ eva brāhmaṇatām abhyupasti | "He a king, when consecrated, enters into the condition of a Brāhmaṇ." See the rest of the section and sections 24, 25, and 31 in Dr. Haug's translation. The S'. P. Br. xiii. 4, 1, 3, says, in opposition to the opinion of some, that an asvamedha, which is a sacrifice proper to Rājanyas, should be begun in summer, which is their season: tad vai vasante eva abhyūrabheta | vasanto vai brāhmaṇasya rituḥ | yā u vai kṣā cha yajate brāhmaṇī-bhūya iva eva yajate | "Let him commence in spring, which is the Brāhmaṇ's season. Whosoever sacrifices does so after having as it were become a Brāhmaṇ." So too Kūtyāyana says in his S'rāuta Sūtras vii. 4, 12: "Brāhmaṇa" ity eva vaiśya-rājanyayor api | "The word Brāhmaṇa is to be addressed to a Vaiśya and a Rājanya also." On which the Commentator annotates: Vaiśya-rājanyayor api yajne "dīkshito 'yam brāhmaṇaḥ" ity eva vaktavyam | na "dīkshito 'yam kshattriyo vaiśyo vā" iti | "The formula 'This Brāhmaṇ has been consecrated' is to be used at the sacrifice of a Vaiśya Kshättra rejoined, 'Be it so,' and, laying aside its own implements, approached the sacrifice with those of Brāhmān, in the form of Brāhmān, and having become Brāhmān. Wherefore now also a Kshattriya when sacrificing, laying aside his own implements, approaches the sacrifice with those of Brāhmān, in the form of Brāhmān, and having become Brāhmān."

The Mahābhārata, Śāntip. verses 2280 f. distinctly defines the duty of a Kshattriya in reference to sacrifice and sacred study: Kshattriya-syāpi yo dharmas taṁ te vakshyāmi Bhārata | dadydā rājan na gūcheta yajeta na cha yūjayet | nādhyāpayed adhyāta prajāś cha paripālayet | "I will tell thee also the duties of a Kshattriya. Let him give, and not ask (gifts); let him sacrifice, but not officiate for others at sacrifices; let him not teach, but study; and let him protect the people."

It is clear that these passages which restrict the right of officiating ministerially at sacrifices to the members of the Brahmanical order,¹⁶⁹ represent a very different state of opinion and practice from that which prevailed in the earlier Vedic age, when Viśvāmitra, a Rājanya, and his relatives, were highly esteemed as the authors of sacred poetry, and were considered as perfectly authorized to exercise sacerdotal functions.

The result of the conflict between the opposing interests represented by Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra respectively, is thus described by Professor and a Rājanya also; and not the words 'this Rājanya, or this Vaisya, has been consecrated.'"

¹⁶⁹ It appears from Arrian that the Greeks were correctly informed of this prerogative of the Brāhmans. He says, Indica, ch. xi.: Kal ὅστις δὲ ἰδίᾳ θύει, ἐξηγητὴς αὐτῷ τῆς θυσίης τῶν τις σοφιστῶν τούτων γίνεται, ὡς οὐκ ἂν ἄλλως κεχαρισμένα τοῖς θεοῖς θύσαντας. "And whosoever sacrifices in private has one of these sophists" (so the highest of the classes, here said to be seven in number, is designated) "as director of the ceremony, since sacrifice could not otherwise be offered acceptably to the gods." Arrian makes another assertion (ibid. xii.) which, if applied to the time when he wrote (in the second Christian century), is not equally correct. After observing that the several classes were not allowed to intermarry, nor to practice two professions, nor to pass from one class into another, he adds: Μοῦνον σφίσιιν ἀνείται σοφιστὴν ἐκ παντὸς γένεος γενέσθαι· ὅτι οὐ μαλθακὰ τοῖσι σοφιστῆσιν εἰσι τὰ πρήγματα, ἀλλὰ πάντων τλαιπωρότατα. "Only it is permitted to a person of any class among them to become a sophist; for the life of that class is not luxurious, but the most toilsome of all." However indubitably true the first part of this sentence may have been in the age of Viśvāmitra, it cannot be correctly predicated of the age of Arrian, or even of the period when India was invaded by Alexander the Great. The mistake may have arisen from confounding the Buddhists with the Brāhmans, or from supposing that all the Brahmanical Indians, who adopted an ascetic life, were regarded as "sophists."

Roth at the close of his work on the literature and history of the Veda, which has been so often quoted, p. 141 : "Vasishṭha, in whom the future position of the Brahmans is principally foreshadowed, occupies also a far higher place in the recollections of the succeeding centuries than his martial rival; and the latter succumbs in the conflict out of which the holy race of Brahmāvarṭta was to emerge. Vasishṭha is the sacerdotal hero of the new order of things. In Viśvāmitra the ancient condition of military shepherd-life in the Punjab is thrown back for ever into the distance. This is the general historical signification of the contest between the two Vedic families, of which the literature of all the succeeding periods has preserved the recollection."

SECT. VIIa—Do the details in the last two sections enable us to decide in what relation Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra stood to each other as priests of Sudās?

It appears from the data supplied in the two preceding sections that both Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra are represented as priests of a king called Sudās. This is shewn, as regards the former rishi (see pp. 319 ff., above), by R.V. vii. 18, 4, 5, and 21-25; and vii. 33, 1-6, where he is said to have interceded with Indra for Sudās, who, as appears from verse 25 of the second of these hymns, was the son of Pijavana. A similar relation is shewn by R V. iii. 53, 9-13 to have subsisted between Viśvāmitra and Sudās (see above, p. 342); and although Sudās is not in that passage identified with the king who was Vasishṭha's patron, by the addition of his patronymic, we are told in the Nirukta, ii. 24, that he was the same person, the son of Pijavana. There is therefore no doubt that, according to ancient tradition, the two rishis were both priests of the same prince. It further appears that the Bharatas, with whom, as we have seen, Viśvāmitra was connected, are in R.V. vii. 33, 6 referred to as in hostility with Sudās and his priest. Are we then to conclude that the one set of facts excludes the other—that the two rishis could not both have been the family-priests of Sudās?

There is no reason to arrive at such an inference. Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra could not, indeed, have been the domestic priests of Sudās at one and the same period. But they may have been so at different times ; and the one may have supplanted the other. It is, however, very difficult to derive from the imperfect materials supplied in the passages to which I have referred any clear conception of the shape and course which the contest between these two rivals took, or to fix the periods at which they respectively enjoyed their patron's favour. Prof. Roth thinks¹⁷⁰ that some light is thrown on this obscure subject by the different parts of the 53rd hymn of the third mandala of the Rig-veda. This composition, as it stands, contains, as he considers, fragments of hymns by Viśvāmītra or his descendants, of different dates ; and the verses (9-13), in which that rishi represents himself and the Kauśikas as being the priests of Sudās, are, in his opinion, earlier than the concluding verses (21-24),¹⁷¹ which consist of imprecations directed against Vasishṭha. These last verses, he remarks, contain an expression of wounded pride, and threaten vengeance against an enemy who had come into possession of some power or dignity which Viśvāmītra himself had previously enjoyed. And as we find from one of his hymns (the 53rd) that he and his adherents had at one time led Sudās to victory, and enjoyed a corresponding consideration ;—while from Vasishṭha's hymns it is clear that he and his family had also been elevated in consequence of similar claims to a like position ;—it would seem to result that Viśvāmītra had cursed Vasishṭha for this very reason that he had been supplanted by him. The former with his Kuśikas had through the growing influence of his rival been driven away by Sudās to the Bharatas the enemies of that prince and of the Trīṭsus ; and then vowed vengeance against their enemies. Roth remarks that if this conjecture appears too bold, which he does not allow, there is no alternative but to regard verses 9–11 of R.V. iii. 53, as interpolated, and to hold that Viśvāmitra had always been allied with the Bharatas. But, as he urges, in a period such as that which the hymns of the Veda represent to us—a time of feud and foray among the small neighbouring tribes, when the power of the leaders of families and petty chiefs was unlimited, when we observe that the ten kings were allied against Sudās—in a period of subdivided dominion like this it would be far more surprising to find a family so favoured by the gods as that of Viśvāmitra or Vasishṭha in continued and undisturbed possession of influence over any one of these chieftains, than to see mutual aggression, hostility, and vindictiveness, prevailing even among families and clans united to one another by community of language and manners. It is further evident from later tradition, as Roth remarks, that Vasishṭha and his family had not always been the objects of Sudās's favour; but had, on the contrary, been at some time or other sufferers from his enmity or that of his house; and in proof of this he refers to the passage which has been cited above (p. 328) from Sāyaṇa's note on R.V. vii. 32, and the Sāṭyāyana and Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇas, as there quoted; and also to the 176th adhyāya of the Ādiparvan of the Mahābhārata, verses 6696 ff., which will be adduced in a future section.

According to Roth's view (p. 124) the alienation between Sudās and Vasishṭha fomented by Viśvāmitra was only of temporary duration, and we must, therefore, understand that according to his view, the former rishi and his family remained eventually victors in the contest for influence between themselves and their rivals.

Professor Weber, in a note appended to an article by Dr. A. Kuhn in page 120 of the first volume of his Indische Studien, expresses a different opinion. "The testimonies," he says, "adduced by Roth, pp. 122 ff., according to which Sudās appears in the Epic age as hostile to Brahmanical interests, stand in opposition to his assertion that Vasishṭha's family finally banished Viśvāmitra and the Kuśikas from the court of that prince. The enmity between the latter and Vasishṭha, the prototype of Brahmanhood, is thus by no means of temporary duration (Roth, p. 124), but the very contrary." The passages cited by Roth, which Weber here claims as supporting his own view, are Manu, vii. 41 (see above, p. 296), the Anukramanī with the Sātyāyana and Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇas quoted in p. 328, and the 126th and following sections of the Ādip. of the M. Bh. which will be adduced hereafter. To these may be added the text from the Kaushitakī Brāhmaṇa, cited in p. 328. If Sudās became ultimately reconciled to Vasishṭha, and re-instated him and his relatives in their position of court priests, to the exclusion of the rival family of Viśvāmitra, it seems hard to understand, according to Professor Weber's argument, how that prince's name should have been handed down by tradition as one of the most prominent examples of impiety displayed in resistance to Brahmanical pretensions. It is, however, to be observed that, except in the text of Manu, it is the descendants of Sudās, and not the king himself, who are charged with the outrages committed against Vasishṭha's family; and that in the passage of the M. Bh. above referred to (Ādip. vv. 7669 ff.) the son of Sudās is represented as becoming ultimately reconciled to Vasishṭha.¹⁷² And if the passages, which have been cited above from the Rig-veda (pp. 330 f.) in allusion to Sudās's deliverance by the gods, refer to a real person, and to the same individual with whom we are at present concerned, they are difficult to reconcile with these traditions in the Brāhmaṇas, Mahābhārata, and Purāṇas; inasmuch as they are not said to be the productions of Viśvāmitra or his descendants, and as they necessarily imply that Sudās was a pious prince who worshipped the popular deities in the way prescribed by the rishis by whom he was commemorated, since the latter would not otherwise have celebrated him in their hymns as a conspicuous object of divine favour. Tradition, too, as we have seen (p. 268) represents Sudās to have been the author of a Vedic hymn. The verses of the 104th hymn of the seventh book which I have quoted (above, p. 327) do not appear to contribute any further aid towards the solution of the question under consideration. Assuming that they contain a curse aimed at Viśvāmitra we have no means of ascertaining when they were uttered; whether the charge preferred against Vasishṭha preceded or followed the ascendancy of his rival.

We seem, therefore, to possess no sufficient data for settling the question of the relations in which Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra respectively stood to king Sudās, further than that they both appear, from the hymns of the Rīg-veda, to have been, at one period or another, his family priests; but which of the two was the first, and which the last, to enjoy the king's favour, must, according to all appearance, remain a mystery.

SECT. VIII.—Story of Triśanku.

I shall now proceed to adduce the different legends in the Purāṇas, the Rāmāyaṇa, and the Mahābhārata, in which Vaśiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are represented as coming into conflict.

In the third chapter of the fourth book of the Vishṇu Purāṇa (Wilson, vol. iii. pp. 284 ff.) we find a story about a king Satyavrata, called also Triśanku, the 26th in descent from Ikshvāku, who had become degraded to the condition of a Chāṇḍāla, about whom it is briefly related, iv. 3, 13 : Drūdaśa-vārshikyām anāvṛṣṭyām Viśvāmitra - kalatrāpatya - poshaṇārthaṁ chāṇḍāla - pratigraha - parihaṇāyā cha Jāhnavī - tīra - nyagrodhe mṛiga-māṁsam anudīnam babandha | 14. Paritūṣṭeṇa cha Viśvāmitreṇa sa-sārīraḥ svargam āropitaḥ | “During a twelve years' drought he daily suspended deer's flesh for the support of Viśvāmitra's wife and children on a nyagrodha-tree on the banks of the Ganges, intending by this means to spare them the (~~humiliation of~~) receiving a gift from a Chañḍāla; and was in consequence raised bodily to heaven by Viśvāmitra, who was gratified (with his conduct).¹⁷³ ॐ ॥ ८ ॥

This story is told at greater length in the Harivaṃśa (sections 12 and 13) where Vasishṭha also is introduced. I have already (p. 337) remarked on the super-human longevity ascribed to this sage, who is represented as contemporary both with Ikshvāku, and with his descendants down to the sixty-first generation. But Indian mythology, with its boundless resources in supernatural machinery, and in the doctrine of transmigration, can reconcile all discrepancies, and explain away all anachronisms, making any sage re-appear at any juncture when his presence may be required, another and yet the same.

The Harivaṃśa states that Satyavrata (Trisanku) had been expelled from his home by his father for the offence of carrying off the young wife of one of the citizens under the influence of a criminal passion (verse 718. Yena bhūryyā hṛitā pūraṇ kṛitodṛāhā parasya vai | 720. Jahāra kāmāt kanyāṃ sa kasyachit puravāsinaḥ); and that Vasishṭha did not interfere to prevent his banishment. His father retired to the woods to live as a hermit. In consequence of the wickedness which had been committed, Indra did not rain for a period of twelve years. At that time Viśvāmitra had left his wife and children and gone to practice austerities on the sea-shore. His wife, driven to extremity by want, was on the point of selling her second son for a hundred cows, in order to support the others; but this arrangement was stopped by the intervention of Satyavrata, who liberated the son when bound,¹⁷⁴ and maintained the family by providing them with the flesh of wild animals: and according to his father's injunction, consecrated himself for the performance of a silent penance for twelve years (verse 732. Upāṁśa-vratam āsthāya dīkṣhām dvādaśa-vārshikīm | pitur niyogād avahat tasmin vana-gate nripe). The story proceeds thus :

¹⁷⁴ See in Ind. Stud. ii. 121 ff. Professor Roth's remarks on the peculiar relation in which he regards this story as standing to that of S'unasēpa, as given in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. The various incidents in the one present in many respects a curious parallel to those of the other, which he considers can hardly be accidental; and he thinks this version of the legend of Trisanku may have arisen out of a transformation and distortion of that of S'unasēpa.

Verse 733. *Ayodhyāṁ chaiva rūkṣāṁ cha tathāivāntakpuram muniḥ | yājñyopādhyāya-sambandhād Vaśiṣṭhaḥ paryarakṣhata | Satyavrataḥ tu bālyād vai bhāvino 'rthasya vā balāt | Vaśiṣṭhe 'bhyadhikam manyuṁ dhūrayāmāsa nityadā | 735. 733. "Meanwhile Vaśiṣṭha, from the relation subsisting between the king (Satyavrata's father) and himself, as disciple¹⁷⁵ and spiritual preceptor, governed the city of Ayodhyā, the country, and the interior apartments of the royal palace. But Satyavrata, whether through folly or the force of destiny, cherished constantly an increased indignation-against Vaśiṣṭha, who for a (proper) reason had not interposed to prevent his exclusion from the royal power by his father. 'The formulas of the marriage ceremonial are only binding,' said Satyavrata, 'when the seventh step has been taken,'¹⁷⁶ and this had not been done when I seized the damsel: still Vaśishṭha, who knows the precepts of the law, does not come to my aid.' Thus Satyavrata was incensed in his mind against Vaśishṭha, who, however, had acted from a sense of what was right. Nor did Satyavrata understand (the propriety of) that silent penance imposed upon him by his father. . . . 740. When he had supported this arduous rite, (he supposed that) he had redeemed his family position. The venerable muni Vaśishṭha did not, however, (as has been said) prevent his father from setting him aside, but resolved to install his son as king. When the powerful prince Satyavrata had endured the penance for twelve years, he beheld, when he was without flesh to eat, the milch cow of Vaśishṭha which yielded all objects of desire; and under the influence of anger, delusion, and exhaustion, distressed by hunger, and failing in the ten duties [the opposites of which are then enumerated] he slew her . . . (745) and both partook of her flesh himself, and gave it to Viśvāmitra's sons to eat. Vaśishṭha hearing of this, became incensed against him," and imposed on him the name of Triśanku as he had committed three sins (verses 747-749). "750. On his return home, Viśvāmitra was gratified by the support which his wife had received, and offered Triśanku the choice of a boon. When this proposal was made, Triśanku chose the boon of ascending bodily to heaven. All apprehension from the twelve years' drought being now at an end, the muni (Viśvāmitra) installed Triśanku in his father's kingdom, and offered sacrifice on his behalf. The mighty Kauśika then, in spite of the resistance of the gods and of Vaśishṭha, exalted the king alive to heaven."

The legend of Triśanku is also related, though differently, in the Bālakāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa; but as it is there introduced as a portion of the history of Viśvāmitra's various contests with Vaśishṭha recorded in the 51st to 65th sections of that book, I shall reserve it till I take up that narrative.

¹⁷⁶ "The next ceremony is the bride's stepping seven steps. It is the most material of all the nuptial rites; for the marriage is complete and irrevocable so soon as she has taken the seventh step, and no sooner." Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 218, where further details will be found.

SECT. IX.—Legend of Hariśchandra.

The son of Trisanku, the subject of the preceding story, was Hariśchandra, whose name is mentioned in the Vishṇu P., but without any allusion to the events of his life. According to the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa,¹⁷⁷ however, he gave up his whole country, and sold his wife and son, and finally himself, in satisfaction of Viśvāmītra's demands for money. The following is a summary of the story as there told, book i. sections 7-9. We may perhaps regard it as having in part a polemical import, and as intended to represent Viśvāmītra, the Kshattriya rival of the Brāhmins, in the most unfavourable colours. The sufferings of Hariśchandra, his wife, and son, are very pathetically depicted, and the effect of the various incidents is heightened with great artistic skill. The story, in fact, appears to me one of the most touching to be found in Indian literature. Hariśchandra, the Purāṇa tells us, was a royal rishi (rājarshi) who lived in the Tretā age, and was renowned for his virtues, and the universal prosperity, moral and physical, which prevailed during his reign. On one occasion, when hunting, the king heard a sound of female lamentation which proceeded, it appears, from the Sciences who were becoming mastered by the austere-fervid sage Viśvāmītra, in a way they had never been before by anyone else; and were consequently crying out in alarm at his superiority. In fulfilment of his duty as a Kshattriya to defend the weak, and inspired by the god Ganeśa, who had entered into him, Hariśchandra exclaimed (i. 7, 12) “ ‘What sinner is this who is binding fire in the hem of his garment, while I, his lord, am present, resplendent with force and fiery vigour?’ He shall to-day enter on his long sleep, pierced in all his limbs by arrows, which, by their discharge from my bow, illuminate all the quarters of the firmament” (12. Ko 'yam badhnāti vastrānte pāvakaṁ pāpa-kṛin naraḥ | balośhna-tejasā dīpte mayi patyāv upasthite | 13. So 'dya mat-kārmukā-kṣhepa - vidīpita - digantaraiḥ | śarair vibhinna - sarvāṅgo dīrghanidrām pravekshyati |). Viśvāmītra was provoked by this address. In consequence of his wrath the Sciences instantly perished, and Hariśchandra, trembling like the leaf of an aśvattha tree, submissively represented that he had merely done his duty as a king, which he defined as consisting in the bestowal of gifts on eminent Brāhmins and other persons of slender means, the protection of the timid, and war against enemies. Viśvāmitra hereupon demands a gift as a Brāhman intent upon receiving one. The king offers him whatever he may ask : Gold, his own son, wife, body, life, kingdom, good fortune (hiranyaṁ vā suvarṇaṁ vā putraḥ patnī kalevaram | prānāḥ rājyam puraṁ lakṣmīr yad abhipretam ātmanaḥ |). The saint first requires the present for the Rājasūya sacrifice. On this being promised, and still more offered, he asks for the empire of the whole earth, including everything but Hariśchandra himself, his wife and son, and his virtue which follows its possessor wherever he goes ¹⁷⁸ (i. 7, 28. Vinā bhāryyāṁ cha putraṁ cha śarīraṁ cha tavānagha | 29. Dharmaṁ cha sarva-dharma-jña yo yāntam anugachhati). Hariśchandra joyfully agrees. Viśvāmitra then requires him to strip off all his ornaments, to clothe himself in the bark of trees, and to quit the kingdom with his wife Śaivyā and his son. When he is departing the sage stops him and demands payment of his yet unpaid sacrificial fee. The king replies that he has only the persons of his wife, his son, and himself left. Viśvāmitra insists that he must nevertheless pay ; and that “unfulfilled promises of gifts to Brāhmins bring destruction” (i. 7. 35. Viśeshato brāhmaṇānāṁ hantya adattam pratiṣṭutam). The unfortunate prince, after being threatened with a curse, engages to make the payment in a month ; and commences his journey with a wife unused to such fatigues, amid the universal lamentations of his subjects. While he lingers, listening to their affectionate remonstrances against his desertion of his kingdom, Viśvāmitra comes up, and being

“ Our virtue is the only friend that follows us in death ;
 All other ties and friendships end with our departing breath.
 Nor father, mother, wife, nor son beside us then can stay,
 Nor kinsfolk :—virtue is the one companion of our way.
 Alone each creature sees the light, alone the world he leaves ;
 Alone of actions, wrong or right, the recompence receives.
 Like log or clod, beneath the sod their lifeless kinsman laid,
 His friends turn round and quit the ground ; but virtue tends the dead.
 Be then a hoard of virtue stored, to help in day of doom ;
 By virtue led, we cross the dread, immeasurable gloom.”

incensed at the delay and the king's apparent hesitation, strikes the queen with his staff, as she is dragged on by her husband. All this Hariśchandra endures with patience, uttering no complaint. Then the five Viśvedevas, merciful gods, exclaimed, " 'To what worlds shall this sinner Viśvāmitra go, who has thrust down this most excellent of sacri- ficers from the royal dignity? Whose faith shall now sanctify the soma-juice poured out with recitation of texts at the great sacrifice, that we may drink it, and become exhilarated' " (i. 7, 62. Atha viśve tadā devāḥ pancha prāhuḥ kṛipālavaḥ | Viśvāmitraḥ supāpo 'yaṁ lokān kūrṇaṁ samavāpsyati | 63. Yenāyaṁ yajvanāṁ śreṣṭhaḥ sva-rājyād avaro-pitaḥ | kasya vā śraddhayā pūtaṁ sutaṁ somam mahādhvare | pītvā cayam prayāsyāmo mudam mantra-purassaram |). Viśvāmitra heard what they said, and by a curse doomed them to become men; he relented, however, so far as to exempt them from having offspring, and from other family ties and human weaknesses, and promised that they should eventually be restored to their pristine position as gods. They in consequence became partially incarnate as the five Pāṇḍus, the sons of Draupadī. Resuming the story of Hariśchandra, the writer tells us that he then proceeded with his wife and little son to Benares, imagining that this divine city, as the special property of Śiva, could not be possessed by any mortal. Here he found the relentless Viśvāmitra waiting for him, and ready to press his demand for the payment of his sacrificial gift, even before the expiration of the full period of grace. In this extremity Saivya the queen suggests with a sobbing voice that her husband should sell her. On hearing this proposal Hariśchandra swoons, then recovers, utters lamentations, and swoons again, and his wife, seeing his sad condition, swoons also. While they are in a state of unconsciousness, their famished child exclaims in distress, "O father, father, give me bread; O mother, mother, give me food: hunger overpowers me; and my tongue is parched" (i. 8, 35. Tāta tāta dadasvānam ambāmba bhojanaṁ dada | kṣud me balavati jātū jihvāgraṁ śuśhyate tathā). At this moment Viśvāmitra returns, and after recalling Hariśchandra to consciousness by sprinkling water over him, again urges payment of the present. The king again swoons, and is again restored. The sage threatens to curse him if his engagement is not fulfilled by sunset. Being now pressed by his wife, the king agrees to sell her, adding, however, "If my voice can utter such a wicked word, I do what the most inhuman wretches cannot perpetrate" (i. 8, 48 f. Nṛi-śaṁsair api yat karttūṁ na śakyaṁ tat karomy aham | yadi me śakyate vāṇi vaktum idṛik sudurvachah). He then goes into the city, and in self-accusing language offers his queen for sale as a slave. A rich old Brāhman offers to buy her at a price corresponding to her value, to do his household work. Hariśchandra's heart was torn, and he could make no reply. The Brāhman paid down the money, and was dragging away the queen by the hair of her head, when her little son Rohitāśva, seeing his mother about to be taken away from him, began to cry, and laid hold of her skirts. The mother then exclaims: i. 8, 59, "Munchāryya muncha mām tūrad yāvat pāśyāmy ahaṁ śīsum | durlabhaṁ darśanaṁ tāta punar asya bhavishyati | 60. Paśyaihi vatsa mām evam mātaraṁ dāsyatām gatām | mām mā sprākṣhīḥ rāja-puttra aspriśyā 'haṁ tavā-dhunā" | 61. Tataḥ sa bālāḥ sahasā dṛiṣṭvā kṛiṣṭāṁ tu mātaram | samabhyadhārad ambetī rudan sūsrāvilekṣanaḥ | 62. Brāhmaṇaḥ uvācha | "grīhyatām vittam etat te dīyatām bālako mama" | "'Let me go, let me go, venerable sir, till I look upon my son. I shall hardly ever behold him again. Come, my darling, see thy mother now become a slave. Touch me not, young prince; I may no longer be handled by thee.' Seeing his mother dragged away, the child ran after her, his eyes dimmed with tears, and crying 'mother.' The Brāhman purchaser kicked him when he came up; but he would not let his mother go, and continued crying 'mother, mother.' The queen then said to the Brāhman, 'Be so kind, my master, as to buy also this child, as without him I shall prove to thee but a useless purchase. 64. Be thus merciful to me in my wretchedness; unite me with my son, like a cow to her calf.'¹⁷⁹ The Brāhman agrees: 'Take this money and give me the boy.'" When his wife and son were being carried away, Hariśchandra broke out into lamentations: i. 8, 68. Yāṁ na vāyur na chādityo nendur na cha pri-thag-janaḥ | dṛiṣṭavantaḥ purā patnīm seyaṁ dāsītvam āgatā | 69. Sūrya-vamśa-prasūto 'yaṁ sukumāra-karāṅguliḥ | samprāpto vikrayam

bālo dhiñ mām astu sudurmatim | “‘She, my spouse, whom neither air, nor sun, nor moon, nor stranger had beheld, is now gone into slavery. This my son, a scion of the solar race, with his delicate hands and fingers, has been sold. Woe to me, wicked wretch that I am.’” After the Brāhman had gone out of sight with his purchases, Viśvāmitra again appeared and renewed his demands; and when the afflicted Hariśchandra offered him the small sum he had obtained by the sale of his wife and son, he angrily replied, i. 8, 74: Kshattrabandho mame-mām trañ sadṛṣiñ yajna-dakṣiṇām | manyase yadi tat kshipram paśya tram me balam param | 75. Tapaso 'ttra sutaptasya brāhmaṇasyāmala-sya cha | mat-prabhāvasya chograsya śuddhasyādhyayanasya cha | “‘If, miserable Kshattriya, thou thinkest this a sacrificial gift befitting my deserts, thou shalt soon behold the transcendent power of my ardent austere-fervour, of my spotless Brāhmanhood, of my terrible majesty, and of my holy study.’” Hariśchandra promises an additional gift, and Viśvāmitra allows him the remaining quarter of the day for its liquidation. On the terrified and afflicted prince offering himself for sale, in order to gain the means of meeting this cruel demand, Dharma (Righteousness) appears in the form of a hideous and offensive Chanḍāla, and agrees to buy him at his own price, large or small. Hariśchandra declines such a degrading servitude, and declares that he would rather be consumed by the fire of his persecutor's curse than submit to such a fate. Viśvāmitra however again comes on the scene, asks why he does not accept the large sum offered by the Chanḍāla; and, when he pleads in excuse his descent from the solar race, threatens to fulminate a curse against him if he does not accept that method of meeting his liability. Hariśchandra implores that he may be spared this extreme of degradation, and offers to become Viśvāmitra's slave in payment of the residue of his debt; whereupon the sage rejoins, “If thou art my slave, then I sell thee as such to the Chanḍāla for a hundred millions of money” (i. 8, 95. Yadi preshyo mama bhavān chaṇḍālāya tato mayā | dāsa-bhāvam anuprāpto datto vittūrbudena vai |). The Chanḍāla, delighted, pays down the money, and carries off Hariśchandra, bound, beaten, confused, and afflicted, to his own place of abode. Morning, noon, and evening the unfortunate prince repeats these words: i. 8, 99. Bāla dina-mukhī dṛishṭvā bālāñ dina-mukham puraḥ | mām smaraty asukhāvishṭā “mochayishyati nau nṛipaḥ | 100. Upātta-vitto viṣṇuḥ dattā vittaṃ ato 'dhikam" | na sū mām mṛiga-sūvākṣī vetti pṛpātaram kṛitam | 101. *Rājya-nāśaḥ suhṛit-tyāgo bhāryyā-tanaya-vik-

rayaḥ* | prāptā chaṇḍālātā cheyam aho duḥkha-paramparā | "My tender wife, dejected, looking upon my dejected boy, calls me to mind while she says, 'The king will ransom us (100) after he has gained money, and paid the Brāhman a larger sum than he gave for us.' But my fawn-eyed spouse is ignorant that I have become yet more wretched than before. 101. Loss of my kingdom, abandonment of friends, sale of my wife and son, and this fall into the condition of a Chaṇḍāla,— what a succession of miseries!' Hariśchandra is sent by the Chaṇḍāla to steal grave-clothes in a cemetery (which is described at tedious length, with all its horrors and repulsive features), and is told that he will receive two-sixths of the value for his hire; three-sixths going to his master, and one-sixth to the king. In this horrid spot, and in this degrading occupation, he spent, in great misery, twelve months, which seemed to him like a hundred years (i. 8, 127. Evaṃ dvādaśa-māsas tu nītāḥ śata-samopamāḥ). He then falls asleep and has a series of dreams suggested by the life he had been leading (śmaśānābhyāsa-yogena, verse 129). After he awoke, his wife came to the cemetery to perform the obsequies of their son, who had died from the bite of a serpent (verses 171 ff.). At first the husband and wife did not recognize each other, from the change in appearance which had been wrought upon them both by their miseries. Hariśchandra, however, soon discovers from the tenor of her lamentations that it is his wife, and falls into a swoon; as the queen does also when she recognizes her husband. When consciousness returns, they both break out into lamentations, the father bemoaning in a touching strain the loss of his son, and the wife the degradation of the king. She then falls on his neck, embraces him, and asks "whether all this is a dream, or a reality, as she is utterly be-wilderer;" and adds, that "if it be a reality, then righteousness is unavailing to those who practise it" (verse 210. Rājan swapno 'tha tathyaṃ vā yad etad manyate bhavān | tat kathyatām mahābhūga mano vai muhyate mama | 211. Yady etad evaṃ dharmajña nāsti dharme sahāyatā |).
After hesitating to devote himself to death on his son's funeral pyre without receiving his master's leave, (as such an act of insubordination might send him to hell) (verses 215 ff.), Hariśchandra resolves to do so, braving all the consequences, and consoling himself with the hopeful anticipation: verse 224. Yadi dattaṃ yadi hutaṃ guravo yadi tṣhitāḥ | paratra sangamo bhūyāt puttrena saha cha trayā | "If I have given gifts, and offered sacrifices, and gratified my religious teachers, then may I be reunited with my son and with thee (my wife) in another world."¹⁸⁰ The queen determines to die in the same manner. When Hariśchandra, after placing his son's body on the funeral pile, is meditating on the lord Hari Nārāyaṇa Kṛishṇa, the supreme spirit, all the gods arrive, headed by Dharma (Righteousness), and accompanied by Viśvāmitra.¹⁸¹ Dharma entreats the king to desist from his rash intention; and Indra announces to him that he, his wife, and son have conquered heaven by their good works. Ambrosia, the antidote of death, and flowers, are rained by the god from the sky; and the king's son is restored to life and the bloom of youth. The king, adorned with celestial clothing and garlands, and the queen, embrace their son. Harischandra, however, declares that he cannot go to heaven till he has received his master the Chanḍāla's permission, and has paid him a ransom. Dharma then reveals to the king that it was he himself who had miraculously assumed the form of a Chanḍāla. The king next objects that he cannot depart unless his faithful subjects, who are sharers in his merits, are allowed to accompany him to heaven, at least for one day. This request is granted by Indra; and after Visvāmitra has inaugurated Rohitāśva the king's son to be his successor, Hariśchandra, his friends and followers, all ascend in company to heaven. Even after this great consummation, however, Vasishṭha, the family-priest of Harischandra, hearing, at the end of a twelve years' abode in the waters of the Ganges, an account of all that has occurred, becomes vehemently incensed at the humiliation inflicted on the excellent monarch, whose virtues and devotion to the gods and Brāhmins he celebrates, declares that his indignation had not been so greatly roused even when his own hundred sons had been slain by Viśvāmitra, and in the following words dooms the latter to be transformed into a crane: i. 9, 9. Tasmād durātmā brahma-dviṣ prājñānām avaropitaḥ | mach-chhūpopahato mūḍhaḥ sa vakatvam avāpsyati | "Wherefore that wicked man, enemy of the Brāhmins, smitten by my curse, shall be expelled from the society of intelligent beings, and losing his understanding shall be transformed into a Vaka."¹⁸² Viśvāmitra reciprocates the curse, and changes Vasishṭha into a bird of the species called Āṛi. In their new shapes the two have a furious fight,¹⁸³ the Āṛi being of the portentous height of two thousand yojanas (= 18000 miles), and the Vaka of 3090 yojanas. They first assail each other with their wings; then the Vaka smites his antagonist in the same manner, while the Āṛi strikes with his talons. Falling mountains, overturned by the blasts of wind raised by the flapping of their wings, shake the whole earth, the waters of the ocean overflow, the earth itself, thrown off its perpendicular, slopes downwards towards Pātāla, the lower regions. Many creatures perish by these various convulsions. Attracted by the dire disorder, Brahmā arrives, attended by all the gods, on the spot, and commands the combatants to desist from their fray. They were too fiercely infuriated to regard this injunction: but Brahmā put an end to the conflict by restoring them to their natural forms, and counselling them to be reconciled: i. 9, 28. Na chāpi Kauśika-śreshṭhas tasya rājno 'parādhyate | svarga-prāptikaro brahmann upakāra-pade sthitah | 29. Tapo-vighnasya karttūrau kāma-krodha-vaśam gatau | parityajata bhadrām no brahma hi prachuram balam | 'The son of Kuśika has not inflicted any wrong on Hariśchandra: inasmuch as he has caused the king's elevation to heaven he stands in the position of a benefactor. 29. Since ye have yielded to the influence of desire and anger ye have obstructed your austere fervour; leave off, bless you; the Brahmanical power is transcendent.' The sages were accordingly pacified, and embraced each other."

This interesting legend may be held to have had a double object, viz. first to portray in lively colours the heroic fortitude and sense of duty exhibited by Hariśchandra and his wife in enduring the long series of severe trials to which they were subjected; and secondly, to represent Viśvāmitra in an unamiable light, as an oppressive assertor of those sacerdotal prerogatives, which he had conquered for himself by his austerities,¹⁸³ to place him in striking contrast with the genuine Brāhman Vasishṭha who expresses strong indignation at the harsh procedure of his rival, and to recall the memory of those conflicts between years duration." On this the Commentator remarks: Viśvāmitro rājasūya-dakṣhiṇā-chhalena Hariśchandrasya sarva-svam apahritya yātayāmāsa | tach chhurutvā kupito 'asishṭho'pi Viśvāmitraṁ "tvam āṛi bhava" iti śaśāpa | so 'pi "tvam vako bhava" iti Vasishṭham śaśāpa | tayos' cha yuddham abhūd iti prasiddham | "Viśvāmitra under pretence of taking a present for a rajasūya sacrifice, stripped Hariśchandra of all his property, and afflicted him. Vasishṭha hearing of this, became incensed, and by an imprecation turned him into an Āṛi. Viśvāmitra retorted the curse and changed Vasishṭha into a Vāka. And then a battle took place between them, as is well known." Here it will be seen that the Commentator changes the birds into which the rishis were transformed, making Viśvāmitra the Āṛi and Vasishṭha the Vāka.

the Brāhmuns and Kshattriyas, which were exemplified in the persons of these two sages, of whom the one is said to have been made the "lord of Brāhmans" (Vasishtham īśam viprāṇām, M.Bh. Sāntip. v. 4499), and the other is declared in the story before us to have been the "enemy of the priests."

SECT. X.—Contest of Vasishtha and Viśvāmitra according to the Mahābhārata.

In the Ādiparvan of the Mahābhārata, verses 6638 ff., we find another legend, in the Brahmanical interest, regarding the same two great personages, which begins with a panegyric on Vasishtha, at the expense of the rival rishi :

6638. Brahmaṇo mānasah putro Vasishtho 'rundhati-patiḥ | tūpasā nirjītau śasvad ajeyāv amarair api | kāma-krodhāv ubhau yasya charaṇau saṁvavāhatuḥ | yas tu nochchedanaṁ chakre Kuśikānām udāra-dhīḥ | Viśvāmitrāparādhenā dhārayan manyum uttamam | 6640. Putra-vyasana-santaptaḥ śaktimān apy aśakta-vat | Viśvāmitra-vināsūya na chakre karma dāruṇam | mṛitāmś cha punar āharttum yaḥ sa putrān Yama-kshayāt | kṛitāntaṁ nātichakrāma velām iva mahodadhiḥ | yam prāpya vijitātmānam mahātmanāṁ narādhipāḥ | Ikshvākavo mahīpālūḥ lebhire prithivīm imām | purohitam imam prāpya Vasishtham ṛishi-sattamam | ijire kratubhiś chaiva nṛipās te Kuru-nandana | sa hi tūn yūjayāmāsa sarvān nṛipati-sattamān | brahmarshiḥ Pāṇḍava-śreshtha Vṛihaspatir ivūmarān | 6645. Tasmād dharma-pradhānātmā veda-dharma-vid īpsitaḥ | brāhmaṇo guṇavān kaśchit purodhāḥ paridṛśyatām | kshattriyenābhijātena prithivīm jetum ichhatā | pūrvam purohitaḥ kuryyaḥ pārtha rājyābhisiddhaye | mahīm jigīshatā rājñā brahma kuryam purassaram | . . . 6666. Kshattriyo 'ham bhavān vipras tapaḥ-svādhyāya-sūdhanaḥ | brāhmaneshu kuto vīryam praśānteshu dhṛitātmasu | arbudena gavām yas tvaṁ na dadāsi mamepsitam | eva-dharmaṁ na prahāsyāmi neshyāmi cha balena gām | . . . 6679. "Sthiyatām" iti tach chhṛutvā Vasishthasya payasvinī | ūrdhvaṅchita-śiro-grīvā prababhau raudra-darśanā | 6680. Krodha-raktekshaṇā sā gaur hambhā-rava-ghana-svanā | Viśvāmitrasya tat sainyaṁ vyadrāvayata sarvaśaḥ | kaśāgra-daṇḍābhihatā kālyamānā tatastataḥ | krodha-raktekshaṇā krodham bhūya eva samādadhe | āditya iva mudhyāhne krodha-dīpta-vapur babhau | angāra-varṣham munchantī muhur śāladhito

6638. “Vasishṭha,” a Gandharva informs Arjuna, “was the mind-born son of Brahmā and husband of Arundhatī.¹⁸⁴ By his austere fervour, lust and anger, invincible even by the immortals, were constantly vanquished and embraced his feet. Restraining his indignation at the wrong done by Viśvāmitra, he magnanimously abstained from exterminating the Kuśikas.¹⁸⁵ 6640. Distressed by the loss of his sons, he acted, although powerful, like one who was powerless, and took no

veshā | tena hetunā “lakshyā’lakshyā cha” | “She regards as it were” i.e. by guile ‘the omen’ afforded by her husband’s (bodily) marks, hence she assumed a disguise, and was ‘both to be seen and not to be seen.’*”

¹⁸⁵ As regards the magnanimous character here assigned to Vasishṭha, I quote a passage from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 9, 15 ff., where the irascible Duvāsas (to whom I lately referred, and who is said, in verse 2, to be a partial incarnation of Śiva, S’ankarasyāṁśah), addressing Indra, who, he conceived, had insulted him, thus speaks of that sage’s amiable temper, as contrasted with his own fierce and revengeful disposition: 15. Nāhaṁ kṛpālu-hṛdayo na cha mām bhojate kṣamā | anye te mun-

dreadful measures for the destruction of Viśvāmitra. To recover those sons from the abode of Yama, he would not overstep fate, as the ocean respects its shores. Having gained this great self-mastering personage, the kings of Ikshvāku's race acquired (the dominion of) this earth. Obtaining this most excellent of rishis for their family-priest, they offered sacrifices. This Brāhman-rishi officiated as priest for all those monarchs, as Vṛihaspati does for the gods. 6645. Wherefore let some desirable, virtuous Brāhman, with whom righteousness is the chief thing, and skilled in Vedic observances, be selected for this office. Let a well-born Kshattriya, who wishes to subdue the earth, first of all appoint a family-priest in order that he may augment his dominion. Let a king, who desires to conquer the earth, give precedence to the Brahmanical power." The Gandharva then, at Arjuna's request, goes on (verses 6650 ff.) to relate the "ancient story of Vaśishṭha" (vāśishṭham ākhyānam purāṇam) and to describe the cause of enmity between that rishi and Viśvāmitra. It happened that the latter, who was son of Gādhi, king of Kānyakubja (Kanouj), and grandson of Kuśika, when out hunting, came to the hermitage of Vaśishṭha, where he was received with all honour, entertained together with his attendants with delicious food and drink, and presented with precious jewels and dresses obtained by the sage from his wonder-working cow, the fulfiller of all his desires. The cupidity of Viśvāmitra is aroused by the sight of this beautiful animal (all of whose fine points are enumerated in the legend), and he offers Vaśishṭha a hundred million cows, or his kingdom, in exchange for her. Vaśishṭha, however, replies that he is unable to part with her even in return for the kingdom. Viśvāmitra then tells him that he will enforce the law of the stronger: 6665. "I am a Kshattriya, thou art a Brāhman, whose functions are austere fervour, and sacred study. How can there be any vigour in Brāhmans who are calm and self-restrained? Since thou doest not give up to me, in exchange for a

"I am not tender-hearted: patience lodges not in me. Those munis are different: know me to be Durvāsas. 16. In vain hast thou been rendered proud by Gautama and others: know me to be Durvāsas, whose nature and whose entire substance is irascibility. 17. Thou hast become proud through the loud praises of Vaśishṭha and other merciful saints, since thou thus contemnest me to-day."

hundred million of cows, that which I desire, I shall not abandon my own class-characteristic; I will carry away the cow by force." Vāśishṭha, confident, no doubt, of his own superior power, tells him to do as he proposes without loss of time. Viśvāmitra accordingly seizes the wonder-working cow; but she will not move from the hermitage, though beaten with whip and stick, and pushed hither and thither. Witnessing this, Vāśishṭha asks her what he, a patient Brāhman, can do? She demands of him why he overlooks the violence to which she is subjected. Vāśishṭha replies: "Force is the strength of Kshattriyas, patience that of Brāhmans. As patience possesses me, go, if thou pleasest" (6676. Kshattriyānām balaṁ tejo brāhmaṇānām kṣamā balaṁ | kṣamā mām bhajate yasmāt gamyatām yadi rochate). The cow enquires if he means to abandon her; as, unless he forsakes her, she can never be carried off by force. She is assured by Vāśishṭha that he does not forsake her, and that she should remain if she could. "Hearing these words of her master, the cow tosses her head aloft, assumes a terrific aspect, (6680) her eyes become red with rage, she utters a deep bellowing sound, and puts to flight the entire army of Viśvāmitra. Being (again) beaten with whip and stick, and pushed hither and thither, she becomes more incensed, her eyes are red with anger, her whole body, kindled by her indignation, glows like the noonday sun, she discharges showers of fire-brands from her tail, creates Pahlavas from the same member, Drāviḍas and Śukas, Yavanas, Śabaras," Kānchis, Śarabhas, Paundras, Kirātas, Sinhalas, Vāsas, and other tribes of armed warriors from her sweat, urine, excrement, etc., who assail Viśvāmitra's army, and put it to a complete rout. 6692. "Beholding this great miracle, the product of Brahmanical might, Viśvāmitra was humbled at (the impotence of) a Kshattriya's nature, and exclaimed, 'Shame on a Kshattriya's force; it is the force of a Brāhman's might that is force indeed.' Examining what was and was not force, and (ascertaining) that austere fervour is the supreme force, he abandoned his prosperous kingdom and all its brilliant regal splendour; and casting all enjoyments behind its back, he devoted himself to austerity. Having by this means attained perfection, and Brāhmanhood, he arrested the worlds by his fiery vigour, and disturbed them all by the blaze of his glory; and at length the ~~Kausika drank~~ soma with Indra." 106

"2295. So too the Kauśika, constant in austerities, and subduing his senses, acquired Brāhmaṇhood by the severity of his exercises. There was a great Kshattriya named Gādhi, renowned in the world, whose son was the powerful Viśvāmitra. This Kauśika prince (Gādhi) was greatly addicted to contemplation (mahāyogi): and after having installed his son as king, he resolved to abandon his corporeal existence. His subjects, however, submissively said to him, 'Do not go, o great sage, but deliver us from our great alarm.' He replied, 'My son shall become the protector of the whole world.' 2300. Having accordingly installed Viśvāmitra, Gādhi went to heaven, and his son became king. Viśvāmitra, however, though energetic, was unable to protect the earth. He then heard that there was great cause of apprehension from the Rākshasas, and issued forth from the city, with an army consisting of four kinds of forces. Having performed a long journey, he arrived at the hermitage of Vaśishṭha. There his soldiers constructed many dwellings. In consequence the divine Brāhman Vaśishṭha, son of Brahmā, beheld the whole forest being cut up; and becoming enraged, he said to his cow, (2305) 'Create terrible Savaras.' The cow, so addressed, created men of dreadful aspect, who broke and scattered in all directions the army of Viśvāmitra. Hearing of this rout of his army, the son of Gādhi devoted himself to austerities, which he regarded as the highest (resource). In this sacred spot on the Sarasvatī he macerated his body with acts of self-restraint and fastings, absorbed in contemplation, and living on water, air, and leaves, sleeping on the sacrificial ground, and practising all the other rites. Several times the gods threw impediments in his way; (2310) but his attention was never distracted from his observances. Having thus with strenuous effort undergone manifold austerities, the son of Gādhi became luminous as the sun; and Brahmā regarded his achievements as most eminent. The boon which Viśvāmitra chose was to become a Brāhman; and Brahmā replied, 'So be it.' Having attained Brāhmanhood, the object of his desire, by his severe austerities, the renowned sage traversed the whole earth, like a god."

We have already seen how the power of austere fervour (tapas) is exemplified in the legend of Nahusha (above, pp. 308 ff.). In regard to the sense of this word tapas, and the potency of the exercise which it denotes, I may refer to my articles in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1865, p. 348 f., and for 1864, p. 63, as well as to the fourth volume of this work, pp. 20 ff. and 288; and to pp. 23 and 28 of the present volume. In further illustration of the same subject I quote the following panegyric upon tapas from Manu, xi. 234 ff. where, however, the word cannot have the same sense in all the verses:

“234. All the enjoyment, whether of gods or men, has its root, its centre, and its end in tapas; so it is declared by the wise who have studied the Veda. 235. Knowledge is a Brāhman's tapas; protection that of a Kshattriya; traffic that of Vaiśya; and service that of a Sūdra. 236. It is by tapas that rishis of subdued souls, subsisting on fruits, roots, and air obtain a vision of the three worlds with all things moving and stationary. 237. Medicines, health, science, and the various divine conditions are attained by tapas alone as their instrument of acquisition. 238. Whatever is hard to be traversed, or obtained, or reached, or effected, is all to be accomplished through tapas, of which the potency is irresistible. 239. Both those who are guilty of the great sins, and all other transgressors, are freed from sin by fervid tapas. 240. Worms, serpents, insects, beasts, birds, and beings without motion attain to heaven through the force of tapas. 241. Whatever sin men commit by thought, word, or bodily acts, by tapas they speedily consume it all, when they become rich in devotion. 242. The gods both accept the sacrifices and augment the enjoyments of the Brāhman who has been purified by tapas. 243. It was by tapas that Prajāpati the lord created this scripture; and through it that the rishis obtained the Vedas. 244. Such is the great dignity which the gods ascribe to tapas, beholding its transcendent merit.”

I return for a moment to the story of Vasishṭha and his cow.

Lassen remarks (Ind. Alt. 2nd ed. i. 631, note) that Atharvan is given in the Lexicons as a name of Vasishṭha (see Wilson's Dictionary, s.v.). Weber (Ind. St. i. 289) quotes from Mallinātha's Commentary on the Kirātārjuniya the following words: Atharvanas tu mantrodhāro Vasiṣṭhena kritāḥ ity āgamaḥ | "There is a passage of scripture to the effect that the mantras of the Atharvan were selected by Vasishṭha." In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. Atharvan, it is noticed that the eleventh hymn of the fifth book of the Atharva-veda contains a conversation between Atharvan and Varuṇa about the possession of a wonderful cow bestowed by the latter on the former; and it is remarked that this circumstance may explain the subsequent identification of Atharvan with Vasishṭha. Prof. Roth, however (Diss. on the A.V., Tübingen, 1865, p. 9), thinks the two sages are distinct. The cow is spoken of in A.V. vii. 104, as the "brindled cow given by Varuṇa to Atharvan which never lacked a calf" (prīṣṇīm dhenuṃ Varuṇena dattām Atharvane nitya-vatsūm). The following is the curious hymn referred to :

A.V. v. 11, 1. Katham mahe asurāya abravīr iha katham pitre haraye tvesha-nṛimrah | *prīṣṇīm Varuṇa dakṣiṇāṃ dadūvān punarmaghatvam*¹⁸⁷ manasā 'chikitsīḥ | 2. Na kāmēna punarmagho bhavāmi saṃ chakṣhe kam prīṣṇīm etām upāje | kena nu tvam Atharvan kāryena kena jātena asi jāta-vedūḥ | 3. Satyam ahaṃ gabhīrah kāryena satyaṃ jātena asmi jāta-vedūḥ | na me dāso na āryyo mahitvā vratam mīmāya yad ahaṃ dharishye | 4. Na tvad anyah kavitaro na medhayā dhīrataro Varuṇa svadhāvan | tvāṃ tā viśvā bhuvanāni vettha sa chid nu traj jano māyī bibhāya | 5. Tvaṃ hi anga Varuṇa svadhāvan viśvā vettha janīmā supranīte | kiṃ rajasah enā paro anyad asti enā kim pareṇa avaram amūra | 6. Ekaṃ rajasah enā paro anyad asti enā parah ekena durṇasaṃ chid arvāk | tat te vidvān Varuṇa pra bravīmi adhorarchasah paṇayo bhavantu | nīchair dāsūḥ upa sarpantu bhūmim | 7. Tvaṃ hi anga Varuṇa bravīshi punarmaghesu avadyāni bhūri | mo shu paṇīr abhi etāvato bhūr mā tvā vohann arādhasaṃ janāsaḥ | 8. Mā mā vohann arādhasaṃ janāsaḥ punas te prīṣṇīm jarītar dadāmi | stotram me viśvam ā yāhi śachābhīr antar viśvāsu mānushīshu vikshu | 9. Ā te stotrāni udyatāni yantu antar viśvāsu mānushīshu vikshu | dehi nu me yad me ādatto asi yujyo me sapta-padaḥ sakhā 'si | 10. Samāno bandhur Varuṇa samā jā vedūhaṃ tad yad nāv eshā samā jā | dadāmi tad yat te ādatto asmi yujyas

¹⁸⁷ This is the reading proposed by Professor Aufrecht instead of punarmagha tvam, which is found in Roth and Whitney's edition of the A.V.

1. (Atharvan speaks) "How hast thou, who art mighty in energy, declared before the great deity, how before the shining father (that the cow was mine)?¹⁸⁸ Having bestowed a brindled cow (on me) as a sacrificial gift, thou hast resolved in thy mind to take her back. 2. (Varuṇa replies) It is not through desire that I revoke the gift; I drive hither this brindled cow that I may contemplate her. But by what wisdom, o Atharvan, in virtue of what nature, doest thou know the nature of beings? 3. (Atharvan answers) In truth I am profound in wisdom; in truth by my nature I know the nature of beings. Neither Dāsa nor Āryya can hinder the design which I shall undertake. 4. There is none other wiser or sager in understanding than thou, o self-dependent Varuṇa. Thou knowest all creatures; even the man of deep devices is afraid of thee. 5. Thou, o self-dependent Varuṇa, o wise director, knowest all creatures. What other thing is beyond this atmosphere? and what is nearer than that remotest thing, o thou unerring? 6. (Varuṇa replies) There is one thing beyond this atmosphere; and on this side of that one there is that which is near though inaccessible. Knowing that thing I declare it to thee. Let the glory of the niggards be cast down; let the Dāsas sink downward into the earth. 7. (Atharvan rejoins) Thou, o Varuṇa, sayest many evil things of those who revoke their gifts. Be not thou numbered among so many niggards; let not men call thee illiberal. 8. (Varuṇa replies) Let not men call me illiberal; I restore to thee, o worshipper, the brindled cow. Attend with all thy powers at every hymn in my honour among all the tribes of men. 9. (Atharvan answers) Let hymns ascend to thee among all the tribes of men. Give me that which thou hast taken from me; thou art to me an intimate friend of seven-fold value. 10. We two have a common bond, o Varuṇa, a common descent. I know what this common descent of ours is. (Varuṇa answers) I give thee that which I have taken from thee. I am thy intimate friend of seven-fold value, who, myself a god, confer life on thee a god [or priest, devāya] who praisest me, an intelligent sage on thee a sage. (The poet says) Thou, o self-dependent Varuṇa, hast begotten our father Atharvan, a kinsman of the gods. Grant to him most excellent wealth; thou art our friend and most eminent kinsman."

SECT. XI.—The same, and other legends, according to the Rāmāyaṇa.

The story told in the preceding section is related at greater length in chapters 51–65 ¹⁸⁹ of the Bālakāṇḍa, or first book, of the Rāmāyaṇa, of which I shall furnish an outline, noting any important variations from, or additions to, the account in the Mahābhārata, and at the same time giving an abstract of the other legends which are interwoven with the narrative. There was formerly, we are told, a king called Kuśa, son of Prajāpati, who had a son called Kuśanābha, who was father of Gādhī, the father of Viśvāmitra. The latter ruled the earth for many thousand years. On one occasion, when he was making a circuit of the earth, he came to Vaśiṣṭha's hermitage, the pleasant abode of many saints, sages, and holy devotees (chapter 51, verses 11–29), where, after at first declining, he allowed himself to be hospitably entertained with his followers by the son of Brahmā (ch. 52). Viśvāmitra (ch. 53), however, coveting the wondrous cow, which had supplied all the dainties of the feast, first of all asked that she should be given to him in exchange for a hundred thousand common cows, adding that "she was a gem, that gems were the property of the king, and that, therefore, the cow was his by right" (53, 9. Ratnaṁ hi bhagavann etad ratna-hārī cha pārthivah | 10. Tasmād me śabalāṁ dehi maimaishū dharmato dvija). On this price being refused, the king advances immensely in his offers, but all without effect. He then proceeds (ch. 54)—very ungratefully and tyrannically, it must be allowed—to have the cow removed by force, but she breaks away from his attendants, and rushes back to her master, complaining that he was deserting her. He replies that he was not deserting her, but that the king was much more powerful than he. She answers, 54, 14 : *Na balam kshattrithe Brāhmanas are stronger. The strength of Brāhmanas is divine, and superior to that of Kshattriyas. 15. Thy strength is immeasurable.

Viśvāmitra, though of great vigour, is not more powerful than thou.
Thy energy is invincible. Commission me, who have been acquired by thy Brahmanical power, and I will destroy the pride, and force, and attempt of this wicked prince."¹⁹⁰ She accordingly by her bellowing creates hundreds of Pahlavas, who destroy the entire host (nāśayanti balaṁ sarvam, verse 19) of Viśvāmitra, but are slain by him in their turn. Sakas and Yavanas, of great power and valour, and well armed, were then produced, who consumed the king's soldiers,¹⁹¹ but were routed by him. The cow then (ch. 55) calls into existence by her bellowing, and from different parts of her body, other warriors of various tribes, who again destroyed Viśvāmitra's entire army, foot soldiers, elephants, horses, chariots, and all. A hundred of the monarch's sons, armed with various weapons, then rushed in great fury on Vaśishṭha, but were all reduced to ashes in a moment by the blast of that sage's mouth.¹⁹² Viśvāmitra, being thus utterly vanquished and humbled, appointed one of his sons to be regent, and travelled to the Himālaya, where he betook himself to austerities, and thereby obtained a vision of Mahādeva, who at his desire revealed to him the science of arms in all its branches, and gave him celestial weapons with which, elated and full of pride, he consumed the hermitage of Vaśishṭha, and put its inhabitants to flight. Vaśishṭha then threatens Viśvāmitra and ¹⁹⁰ Compare Manu, xi. 32 : Sva-vīryād rūja-vīryāch cha sva-vīryam balavattaram | tasmāt svenaiva vīryeṇa nigrihṇīyād arin dvijaḥ | "Of the two, his own, and a king's might, let a Brāhman know that his own is superior. By his own might alone, therefore, let him restrain his enemies."

¹⁹¹ We had been before told that they had been killed, so that this looks like a slaying of the slain, as no resuscitation of the army is alluded to.

¹⁹² On this the Commentator remarks that "though these princes were Kshattriyas, they were not actual kings, and had acted tyrannically ; so that a very slight expiation was required for killing them" (kshattriyatve 'pi prithivī-patīvūbhūvāt tad-badho alpa-prāyāschittam ātatāyitvāch cha |).

uplifts his Brahmanical mace. Viśvāmitra, too, raises his fiery weapon and calls out to his adversary to stand. Vaśishṭha bids him to show his strength, and boasts that he will soon humble his pride. He asks: (56, 4) Kva cha te kshattriya-balam kva cha brahma-balam mahat | paśya brahma-balaṁ divyam mama kshattriya-pāṁśana | tasyāstram Gādhipu-trasya ghoram āgneyam udyatam | brahma-daṇḍena tach chhāntam agner cegaḥ ivāmbhasā | “What comparison is there between a Kshattriya’s might, and the great might of a Brāhman? Behold, thou contemptible Kshattriya, my divine Brahmanical power.’ The dreadful fiery weapon uplifted by the son of Gādhi was then quenched by the rod of the Brāhman, as fire is by water.” Many and various other celestial missiles, as the nooses of Brahmā, Kāla (Time), and Varuṇa, the discus of Viṣṇu, and the trident of Śiva, were hurled by Viśvāmitra at his antagonist, but the son of Brahmā swallowed them up in his all-devouring mace. Finally, to the intense consternation of all the gods, the warrior shot off the terrific weapon of Brāhmā (brāhmāstra); but this was equally ineffectual against the Brahmanical sage. Vaśishṭha had now assumed a direful appearance: (56, 18) Roma-kūpeshu sarveshu Vaśishṭhasya mahātmanah | marīchyah iva nishpetur agner dhūmakulārchishah | prajāvalad brahma-daṇḍas cha Vaśishṭhasya karodyataḥ | vidhūmah iva kālāgnir Yama-daṇḍah ivāparaḥ | “Jets of fire mingled with smoke darted from the pores of his body; (19) the Brahmanical mace blazed in his hand like a smokeless¹⁹³ mundane conflagration, or a second sceptre of Yāma.” Being appeased, however, by the munis, who proclaimed his superiority to his rival, the sage stayed his vengeance; and Viśvāmitra exclaimed with a groan: (56, 23) Dhig balam kshattriya-balam brahma-tejo-balam balam | ekena brahma-daṇḍena sarvāstrāṇi hatāni me | “Shame on a Kshattriya’s strength: the strength of a Brahman’s might alone is strength: by the single Brahmanical mace all my weapons have been destroyed.” No alternative now remains to the humiliated monarch, but either to acquiesce in this helpless inferiority, or to work out his own elevation to the Brahmanical order. He embraces the latter alternative: (56, 24) Tad etat prasamīkshyūham prasannendriya-mānasaḥ | tapo mahat samāsthāsye yad vai brahmatra-kāraṇam | “Having pondered well this defeat, I shall betake myself, with composed senses and mind, to strenuous austere fervour, which shall exalt me to the rank of a Brāhman." Intensely vexed and mortified, groaning and full of hatred against his enemy, he travelled with his queen to the south, and carried his resolution into effect; (ch. 57) and we are first of all told that three sons Havishyanda, Madhusyanda, and Dṛiḍhanetra were born to him. At the end of a thousand years Brahmā appeared, and announced that he had conquered the heaven of royal sages (rājārshis); and, in consequence of his austere fervour, he was recognised as having attained that rank. Viśvāmitra, however, was ashamed, grieved, and incensed at the offer of so very inadequate a reward, and exclaimed: "I have practised intense austerity, and the gods and ṛishis regard me only as a rājarshi!"¹⁹⁴ Austerities, it appears, are altogether fruitless" (57, 5. Jitāḥ rājarshi-lokās te tapasū Kuśikātmaja | 6. Anena tapasā tvam hi rājarshir iti vidmahe | . . . 7. Viśvāmitro 'pi tach chhruvā kriyā kinchid avān-mukhaḥ | duḥkhena mahatā 'vishṭaḥ samanyur idam abravīt | tapas cha sumahat taptam rājarshir iti mām viduḥ | devāḥ sarshi-guṇāḥ sarve nāsti manye tapaḥ-phalam |). Notwithstanding this disappointment, he had ascended one grade, and forthwith recommenced his work of mortification.

At this point of time his austerities were interrupted by the following occurrences: King Trisanku, one of Ikshvāku's descendants, had conceived the design of celebrating a sacrifice by virtue of which he should ascend bodily to heaven. As Vaśishṭha, on being summoned, declared that the thing was impossible (aśakyam), Trisanku travelled to the south, where the sage's hundred sons were engaged in austerities, and applied to them to do what their father had declined. Though he addressed them with the greatest reverence and humility, and added that "the Ikshvākus regarded their family-priests as their highest resource in difficulties, and that, after their father, he himself looked to them as his tutelary deities" (57, 22. Ikshvākūnām hi sarveshām purodhāḥ paramā gatiḥ | tasmād anantaram sarve bhavanto daivatam mama), he received from the haughty priests the following rebuke for his presumption: (58, 2) Pratyākhyāto 'si durbuddhe guruṇū satyavādinū | taṁ katham samatikramya śākhāntaram upeyivān | 3. Ikshvākūnām hi sarveshām purodhāḥ paramā gatiḥ | na chātikramituṁ śakyam vachanaṁ satyavādināḥ | 4. "Aśakyam" iti chovācha Vaśishṭho bhagavān ṛishiḥ | taṁ vayam vai samāharttum kratuṁ śaktāḥ katham tava | 5. Bālīśas tvaṁ nara-śreshṭha gamyatām sva-puram punaḥ | yājane bhagavān śaktas trailokyasyāpi pārthiva | avamūnaṁ katham kartuṁ tasya śakshyāmahe vayam | "Fool, thou hast been refused by thy truth-speaking preceptor. How is it that, disregarding his authority, thou hast resorted to another school (śākhā)?"¹⁹⁵ 3. The family-priest is the highest oracle of all the Ikshvākus; and the command of that veracious personage cannot be transgressed. 4. Vaśishṭha, the divine rishi, has declared that 'the thing cannot be;' and how can we undertake thy sacrifice? 5. Thou art foolish, king; return to thy capital. The divine (Vaśishṭha) is competent to act as priest of the three worlds; how can we shew him disrespect?" Trisanku then gave them to understand, that as his preceptor and "his preceptor's sons had declined compliance with his requests, he should think of some other expedient." In consequence of his venturing to express this presumptuous intention, they condemned him by their imprecation to become a Chaṇḍāla (58, 7. "Pratyākhyāto bhagavatā guru-putrais tathaiva cha | anyāṃ gatim gamishyāmi svasti vo 'stu tapodhanāḥ" | rishi-putrās tu tach chhrutvā vākyāṃ ghorābhisaṃhitam | śepuḥ parama-sankruddhās "chāṇḍālatvaṃ gamishyasi" |). As this curse soon took effect, and the unhappy king's form was changed into that of a degraded outcast, he resorted to Viśvāmitra (who, as we have seen, was also dwelling at this period in the south), enlarging on his own virtues and piety, and bewailing his fate. Viśvāmitra commiserated his condition (ch. 59), and promised to sacrifice on his behalf, and exalt him to heaven in the same Chaṇḍāla-form to which he had been condemned by his preceptors' curse. "Heaven is now as good as in thy possession, since thou hast resorted to the son of Kuśika" (59, 4. Guru-śāpa-kṛitāṃ rūpaṃ yad idaṃ tvayi varttate | anena saha rūpeṇa saśarīro gamishyasi | hasta-prāptam aham manye svargaṃ tara narādhipa | yas traṃ Kauśikam āgamyā śaranyāḥ śaranaṃ gataḥ |). He then directed that preparations should be made for the sacrifice, and that all the rishis, including the family of Vaśishṭha, should be invited to the ceremony. The disciples of Viśvāmitra, who had conveyed his message, reported the result on their return in these words: (59, 11) Srutvā te vachanaṃ sarve samāyānti dvijātayaḥ | sarva-deśeshu chāgachhan varjayitvā Mahodayam | Vāśishṭhaṃ tach chhataṃ sarvaṃ krodha-paryākulūksharam | yad uvācha vacho ghoraṃ śṛiṇu tvam muni-pungava | "kshattriyo yājako yasya chāṇḍālasya viśeshataḥ | kathaṃ sadasi bhoktāro havis tasya surarshayaḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ vā mahātmāno bhuktvā chāṇḍāla-bhojanam | kathaṃ svargaṃ gamishyanti Viśvāmitreṇa pālītāḥ" | etad vachana-naishṭhuryyam ūchuḥ saṃrakta-lochanāḥ | Vāśishṭhāḥ muni-sārdūla sarve saha-mahodayāḥ | "Having heard your message, all the Brāhmins are assembling in all the countries, and have arrived, excepting Mahodaya (Vaśishṭha?). Hear what dreadful words those hundred Vaśishṭhas, their voices quivering with rage, have uttered: 'How can the gods and rishis¹⁹⁸ consume the oblation at the sacrifice of that man, especially if he be a Chāṇḍāla, for whom a Kshattriya is officiating-priest? How can illustrious Brāhmans ascend to heaven, after eating the food of a Chāṇḍāla, and being entertained by Viśvāmitra?' These ruthless words all the Vaśiṣṭhas, together with Mahodaya, uttered, their eyes inflamed with anger." Viśvāmitra, who was greatly incensed on receiving this message, by a curse doomed the sons of Vaśiṣṭha to be reduced to ashes, and reborn as degraded outcasts (mṛitapāḥ) for seven hundred births, and Mahodaya to become a Nishāda. Knowing that this curse had taken effect (ch. 60), Viśvāmitra then, after eulogizing Trisanku, proposed to the assembled rishis that the sacrifice should be celebrated. To this they assented, being actuated by fear of the terrible sage's wrath. Viśvāmitra himself officiated at the sacrifice as yājaka; ¹⁹⁷ and the other rishis as priests (ritvijah) (with other functions) performed all the ceremonies. Viśvāmitra next invited the gods to partake of the oblations: (60, 11) Nābhyagaman yadā tatra bhāgārthaṁ sarva-devatāḥ | tataḥ kopa-samāviṣṭo Viśvāmitro mahāmuniḥ | śrūtam udayanya sakro-dhas Trisankum idam abravīt | "paśya me tapaso vīryaṁ svārjitasya nareśvara | eṣha tvām svaśārīreṇa nayāmi svargam ojasā | duṣṭprāpyaṁ svaśārīreṇa svargaṁ gachchha nareśvara | svārjitaṁ kinchid apy asti mayā hi tapasaḥ phalam | "When, however, the deities did not come to receive their portions, Viśvāmitra became full of wrath, and raising aloft the sacrificial ladle, thus addressed Trisanku: 'Behold, o monarch, the power of austere fervour acquired by my own efforts. I myself, by my own energy, will conduct thee to heaven. Ascend to that celestial region which is so arduous to attain in an earthly body. I have surely earned some reward of my austerity.'" Trisanku ascended instantly to heaven in the sight of the munis. Indra, however, ordered him to be gone, as a person who, having incurred the curse of his spiritual preceptors, was unfit for the abode of the celestials;—and to fall down headlong to earth (60, 17. Trisanko gachchha bhūyas tvaṁ nāsi svargakṛitālayaḥ | guru-śūpa-hato mūḍha pata bhūmim avāk-śirāḥ |). He accordingly began to descend, invoking loudly, as he fell, the help of his spiritual patron. Viśvāmitra, greatly incensed, called out to him to stop: (60, 20) Tato brahma-tapo-yogāt Prajāpatir ivāparaḥ | sasārjja dakṣiṇe bhāge saptarśhin aparāṇ punaḥ | dakṣiṇāṁ diśam āsthāya

¹⁹⁵ It does not appear how Trisanku, in asking the aid of Vaśishṭha's sons after applying in vain to their father, could be charged with resorting to another śākhā (school), in the ordinary sense of that word: as it is not conceivable that the sons should have been of another S'ākhā from the father, whose cause they espouse with so much warmth. The Commentator in the Bombay edition explains the word śākhāntaram as = yājānūdinā rakshakāntaram, "one who by sacrificing for thee, etc., will be another protector." Gorresio's Gauḍa text, which may often be used as a commentary on the older one, has the following paraphrase of the words in question, ch. 60, 3: Mūlam utsrija kasmāt tvaṁ śākhāsv ichhasi śāmbitum | "Why, forsaking the root, dost thou desire to hang upon the branches."

rishi-madhye mahāyasaḥ | nakshattra-mūlām aparām asrijat krodha-mūrçchitah | anyam Indraṁ karishyāmi loko vā syād anindrakah | daiva-tāny api sa krodhāt sraśṭuṁ samupachakrame |¹⁹⁸ “Then by the power of his divine knowledge and austere fervour he created, like another Prajāpati, other Seven Rishis (a constellation so called) in the southern part of the sky. Having proceeded to this quarter of the heavens, the renowned sage, in the midst of the rishis, formed another garland of stars, being overcome with fury. Exclaiming, ‘I will create another Indra, or the world shall have no Indra at all,’ he began, in his rage, to call gods also into being.” The rishis, gods (Suras), and Asuras now became seriously alarmed and said to Viśvāmitra, in a conciliatory tone, that Trisanku, “as he had been cursed by his preceptors, should not be admitted bodily into heaven, until he had undergone some lustration” (60, 24. Ayam rājā mahābhāga guru-sūpa-parikshataḥ | saśarīro divaṁ yātuṁ nārhaty akṛita-pāvanaḥ |).¹⁹⁹ The sage replied that he had given a promise to Trisanku, and appealed to the gods to permit his protégé to remain bodily in heaven, and the newly created stars to retain their places in perpetuity. The gods agreed that “these numerous stars should remain, but beyond the sun’s path, and that Trisanku, like an immortal, with his head downwards, should shine among them, and be followed by them,” adding “that his object would be thus attained, and his renown secured, and he would be like a dweller in heaven” (60, 29. Evam bhavatu bhadram te tishṭhantv etāni sarvaśaḥ | gagane tāny anekāni vaiśvānara-pathād vahiḥ | nakshattrāni muni-śreṣṭha teshu jyottishshu jājvalan | avāk-sirās Trisankuś cha tishthatv amara-sannibhaḥ | anuyāsyanti chaitāni jyotiṁśhi nṛipa-sattamam | kṛitārthaṁ kīrtimantaṁ cha svarga-loka-gataṁ yathā |). Thus was this great dispute adjusted by a compromise, which Viśvāmitra accepted.

This story of Trisanku, it will have been observed, differs materially from the one quoted above (p. 375 ff.) from the Harivaṁśa; but brings out more distinctly the character of the conflict between Vaiśiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra.

When all the gods and rishis had departed at the conclusion of the

sacrifice, Viśvāmitra said to his attendant devotees : (61, 2) Mahāvighnaḥ pravṛitto 'yaṁ dakṣiṇām āsthito diśam | diśam anyām prapatsyāmas tattra tapsyāmahe tapaḥ | “This has been a great interruption [to our austerities] which has occurred in the southern region : we must proceed in another direction to continue our penances.” He accordingly went to a forest in the west, and began his austerities anew. Here the narrative is again interrupted by the introduction of another story, that of king Ambārisha, king of Ayodhyā, who was, according to the Rāmāyaṇa, the twenty-eighth in descent from Ikshvāku, and the twenty-second from Trisanku. (Compare the genealogy in the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 70, and ii. 110, 6 ff., with that in Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. iii. pp. 260 ff. 280, 284 ff. and 303 ; which is different.) Viśvāmitra is nevertheless represented as flourishing contemporaneously with both of these princes. The story relates that Ambarisha was engaged in performing a sacrifice, when Indra carried away the victim. The priest said that this ill-omened event had occurred owing to the king's bad administration ; and would call for a great expiation, unless a human victim could be produced (61, 8. Prāyaścittam mahad hy etad naraṁ vā puruṣaḥ śabha | ānayasva pāśūṁ śighraṁ yācat karma pravarttate |). After a long search the royal-rishi (Ambarisha) came upon the Brāhmaṇa-rishi Richika, a descendant of Bhṛigu, and asked him to sell one of his sons for a victim, at the price of a hundred thousand cows. Richika answered that he would not sell his eldest son ; and his wife added that she would not sell the youngest : “eldest sons,” she observed, “being generally the favourites of their fathers, and youngest sons of their mothers” (61, 18. Prāyeṇa hi nara-śreṣṭha jyeshṭhāḥ pitrishu vallaḥḥ | mātṛiṇām cha kaṇḍyāṁsas tasmād rakṣhe kaṇḍyasam |). The second son, S'unaśśepa, then said that in that case he regarded himself as the one who was to be sold, and desired the king to remove him. The hundred thousand cows, with ten millions of gold-pieces and heaps of jewels, were paid down, and S'unaśśepa carried away. As they were passing through Pushkara (ch. 62) S'unaśśepa beheld his maternal uncle Viśvāmitra (see Rāmāyaṇa, i. 34, 7,²⁰⁰ and p. 352 above) who was engaged in austerities there with other rishis, threw himself into his arms,

and implored his assistance, urging his orphan, friendless, and helpless state, as claims on the sage's benevolence (62, 4. Na me 'sti mātā na pitā jñātayo bāndhavāḥ kulāḥ | trātum arhasi mām saumya dharmena muni-pungava | . . . 7. Na me nātho hy anāthasya bhava bharyena chetasū |). Viśvāmitra soothed him; and pressed his own sons to offer themselves as victims in the room of Sunaśśepa. This proposition met with no favour from Madhushyanda²⁰¹ and the other sons of the royal hermit, who answered with haughtiness and derision: (62, 14) Kathaṁ ātma-sutān hitvā trāyase 'nya-sutān rībhō | akūryyam iva paśyūmaḥ sramāṁsam iva bhōjane | "How is it that thou sacrificest thine own sons, and seekest to rescue those of others? We look upon this as wrong, and like the eating of one's own flesh."²⁰² The sage was exceedingly wroth at this disregard of his injunction, and doomed his sons to be born in the most degraded classes, like Vasiṣṭha's sons, and to eat dog's flesh,²⁰³ for a thousand years. He then said to Sunaśśepa: (62, 19) Paritra-pāśair ābaddho rakta-mālyānulepanaḥ | Vaiṣṇavaṁ yūpam āśūdyā vāgbhir Agniṁ udāhara | ime cha gāthe dve dirye gūyethāḥ muni-puttraka | Ambarīṣasya yajne 'smiṁs tataḥ siddhim avāpsyasi | "When thou art bound with hallowed cords, decked with a red garland, and anointed with unguents, and fastened to the sacrificial post of Viṣṇu, then address thyself to Agni, and sing these two divine verses (gāthās), at the sacrifice of Ambarīṣa; then shalt thou attain the fulfilment [of thy desire]." Being furnished with the two gāthās, Sunaśśepa proposed at once to king Ambarīṣa that they should set out for their destination. When bound at the stake to be immolated, dressed in a red garment, "he celebrated the two gods, Indra and his younger brother (Viṣṇu), with the excellent verses. The Thousand-eyed (Indra) was pleased with the secret hymn, and bestowed long life on Sunaśśepa" (62, 25. Sa baddho vāgbhir agryābhir abhituṣṭāva vai surau | Indram Indrānujaṁ chaiva yathāvad muni-puttrakaḥ | tasmai prītaḥ sahasrūkṣo

²⁰¹ The word is written thus in Schlegel's and Gorresio's editions. The Bombay edition reads Madhuchanda.

rahasya-stuti-toshitaḥ | dirgham āyus tadā prādāḥ Chhunaśśephāya Vā-savaḥ |).²⁰⁴ King Ambarīsha also received great benefits from this sacrifice. Viśvāmitra meanwhile proceeded with his austerities, which he prolonged for a thousand years.

At the end of this time (ch. 63) the gods came to allot his reward ; and Brahmā announced that he had attained the rank of a rishi, thus apparently advancing an additional step. Dissatisfied, as it would seem, with this, the sage commenced his task of penance anew. After a length of time he beheld the nymph (Apsāras) Menākā, who had come to bathe in the lake of Pushkara. She flashed on his view, unequalled in her radiant beauty, like lightning in a cloud (63, 5. Rūpenāprati-mām tatra vidyutaṁ jalade yathā). He was smitten by her charms, invited her to be his companion in his hermitage, and for ten years remained a slave to her witchery, to the great prejudice of his austerities.²⁰⁵ At length he became ashamed of this ignoble subjection, and full of indignation at what he believed to be a device of the gods to disturb his devotion ; and, dismissing the nymph with gentle accents, he departed for the northern mountains, where he practised severe austerities for a thousand years on the banks of the Kauśikī river. The gods became alarmed at the progress he was making, and decided that he should be dignified with the appellation of great rishi (māhār-shi) ; and Brahmā, giving effect to the general opinion of the deities, announced that he had conferred that rank upon him. Joining his hands and bowing his head, Viśvāmitra replied that he should consider himself to have indeed completely subdued his senses, if the incomparable title of Brāhman-rishi were conferred upon him (63, 31. Brah-marshi-śabdām atulaṁ svārjitaiḥ karmabhiḥ śubhaiḥ | yadi me bhagavān āha tato 'haṁ vijitendriyaḥ |). Brahmā informed him in answer, that he had not yet acquired the power of perfectly controlling his senses ; but should make further efforts with that view. The sage then began to put himself through a yet more rigorous course of austerities, standing with his arms erect, without support, feeding on air, in summer exposed to five fires (i.e. one on each of four sides, and the sun overhead), in the rainy season remaining unsheltered from the wet, and in winter lying on a watery couch night and day. This he continued for a thousand years. At last Indra and the other deities became greatly distressed at the idea of the merit he was storing up, and the power which he was thereby acquiring; and the chief of the celestials desired (ch. 64) the nymph Rāmbhā to go and bewitch him by her blandishments. She expressed great reluctance to expose herself to the wrath of the formidable muni, but obeyed the repeated injunction of Indra, who promised that he and Kandarpa (the god of love) should stand by her, and assumed her most attractive aspect with the view of overcoming the sage's impassibility. He, however, suspected this design, and becoming greatly incensed, he doomed the nymph by a curse to be turned into stone and to continue in that state for a thousand years.²⁰⁶ The curse took effect, and Kandarpa and Indra slunk away. In this way, though he resisted the allurements of sensual love,²⁰⁷ he lost the whole fruit of his austerities by yielding to anger; and had to begin his work over again. He resolved to check his irascibility, to remain silent, not even to breathe for hundreds of years; to dry up his body; and to fast and stop his breath till he had obtained the coveted character of a Brāhman. He then (ch. 65) left the Himālaya and travelled to the east, where he underwent a dreadful exercise, unequalled in the whole history of austerities, maintaining silence, according to a vow, for a thousand years. At the end of this time he had attained to perfection, and although thwarted by many obstacles, he remained unmoved by anger. On the expiration of this course of austerity, he prepared some food to eat; which Indra, coming in the form of a Brāhman, begged that he would give him. Viśvāmitra did so, and though he had none left for himself, and was obliged to remain fasting, he said nothing to the Brāhman, on account of his vow of silence. 65, 8. Tasyānuchchhvasamānasya mūrdhni dhūmo vyajjyata | 9. Trailokyaṃ yena sambhrāntam ātāpitaṃ ivābhavat | . . . 11. ²⁰⁶ On this the Commentator remarks that this incident shews that anger is more difficult to conquer than even lust (etena kāmān api krodho durjayaḥ iti sūchitam).

The gods, rishis, etc., then addressed Brahmā: "The great muni Viśvāmitra has been allured and provoked in various ways, but still advances in his sanctity. If his wish is not conceded, he will destroy the three worlds by the force of his austerity. All the regions of the universe are confounded, no light anywhere shines; all the oceans are tossed, and the mountains crumble, the earth quakes, and the wind blows confusedly. 15. We cannot, o Brahmā, guarantee that mankind shall not become atheistic. . . . 16. Before the great and glorious sage of fiery form resolves to destroy (everything) let him be propitiated." The gods, headed by Brahmā, then addressed Viśvāmitra: "Hail Brāhmaṇ rishi, we are gratified by thy austerities; o Kauśika, thou hast, through their intensity, attained to Brāhmaṇhood. I, o Brāhmaṇ, associated with the Maruts, confer on thee long life. May every blessing attend thee; depart wherever thou wilt.' The sage, delighted, made his obeisance to the gods, and said: 'If I have obtained Brāhmaṇhood, and long life, then let the mystic monosyllable (omākāra) and the sacrificial formula (vashatkāra) and the Vedas recognise me in that capacity. And let Vasiṣṭha, the son of Brahmā, the most eminent of those who are skilled in the Kshattri-veda, and the Brāhma-veda (the knowledge of the Kshattriya and the Brahmanical disciplines), address me simi-

Early.' Accordingly Vasiṣṭha, being propitiated by the gods, became reconciled to Viśvāmitra, and recognised his claim to all the prerogatives of a Brāhman rishi. . . . Viśvāmitra, too, having attained the Brahmanical rank, paid all honour to Vasiṣṭha." Such was the grand result achieved by Viśvāmitra, at the cost of many thousand years of intense mortification of the body, and discipline of the soul. During the course of the struggle he had manifested, as the story tells us, a power little, if at all, inferior to that of Indra, the king of the gods; and as in a former legend we have seen King Nahusha actually occupying the throne of that deity, we cannot doubt that—according to the recognised principles of Indian mythology—Viśvāmitra had only to recommence his career of self-mortification in order to raise himself yet higher than he had yet risen, to the rank of a devarshi, or divine rishi (if this be, indeed, a superior grade to that of brahmarshi), or to any other elevation he might desire. But, as far as the account in the Rāmāyaṇa informs us, he was content with his success. He stood on a footing of perfect equality with his rival Vasiṣṭha, and became indifferent to further honours. In fact, it was not necessary for the purpose of the inventors of the legend to carry him any higher. They only wished to account for his exercising the prerogatives of a Brāhman; and this had been already accomplished to their satisfaction.

In the story of Sakuntalā, however, as narrated in the Mahābhārata, Ādiparvan, sixty-ninth and following sections, we are informed that, to the great alarm of Indra, Viśvāmitra renewed his austerities, even long after he had attained the position of a Brāhman, verse 2914 : Tapyamānaḥ kila purā Viśvāmitro mahat tapaḥ | subhriṣaṁ tāpayāmāsa Sakraṁ sura-gaṇeśvaram | tapasū dīpta-vīryyo'yaṁ sthānād mām chyāyayed iti | "Formerly Viśvāmitra, who was practising intense austere fervour, occasioned great distress to Sakra (Indra), the lord of the deities, lest by the fiery energy so acquired by the saint he himself should be cast down from his place." Indra accordingly resorted to the usual device of sending one of the Apsarases, Menakā, to seduce the sage by the display of her charms, and the exercise of all her allurements, "by beauty, youth, sweetness, gestures, smiles, and words" (verse 2920, Rāpa-yauvana-mādhuryya-cheshṭita-smita-bhāshitaiḥ), into the indulgence of sensual love; and thus put an end to his efforts after increased sanctity. Menakā urges the dangers of the mission arising from the great power and irascibility of the sage, of whom, she remarked, even Indra himself was afraid, as a reason for excusing her from undertaking it; and refers to some incidents in Viśvāmitra's history, verse 2923: Mahābhāgam Vasiṣṭhaṁ yaḥ putrair iṣṭair vyayojayat | kṣhattra-jātaś cha yaḥ pūrvam abhavad brāhmaṇo balāt | śaughārthaṁ yo nadiṁ chakre durgamām bahubhir jalaiḥ | yām tām punyatamām loke Kauśikīti vidur janāḥ | 2925. Babhāra yatrāsyā purā kāle durge mahātmanaḥ | dārūn Matango dharmātmā rājarshir vyādhatām gataḥ | atita-kāle durbhikṣhe abhyetya punar āśramam | munih Pāreti nadyāḥ vai nūma chakre tadā prabhukḥ | Matangam yūjayānchakre yatra prīta-manāḥ svayam | tvaṁ cha somam bhayād yasya gataḥ pātuṁ sureśvara | chakūrānyaṁ cha lokam vai krudho nakṣhattra-sampadā | pratiśravaṇa-pūrvāṇi nakṣattrāṇi chakūra yaḥ | guru-śūpa-hatasyāpi Triśankoḥ śaraṇam dadau | "2923. He deprived the great Vasiṣṭha of his beloved sons; and though born a Kshatriya, he formerly became a Brāhmaṇ by force. For the purpose of purification he rendered the holy river, known in the world as the Kauśikī, unfordable from the mass of water. 2925. His wife was once maintained there in a time of distress by the righteous rājarshi Matanga, who had become a huntsman; and when the famine was past, the muni returned to his hermitage, gave to the river the name of Pārā, and being gratified, sacrificed for Matanga on its banks; and then thou thyself, Indra, from fear of him wentest to drink his soma. He created, too, when incensed, another world, with a garland of stars, formed agreeably to his promise, and gave his protection to Triśanku, even when smitten by his preceptor's curse." Menakā, however, ends by saying that she cannot decline the commission which has been imposed upon her; but begs that she may receive such succours as may ensure her success. She accordingly shows herself in the neighbourhood of Viśvāmitra's hermitage. The saint yields to the influence of love, invites her to become his companion, and as a result of their intercourse Sakuntalā is born. The Apsaras then returns to Indra's paradise.

SECT. XII.—Other accounts, from the Mahābhārata, of the way in which Viśvāmitra became a Brāhmaṇ.

In the Udyogaparvan of the Mahābhārata, sections 105–118, a story is told regarding Viśvāmitra and his pupil Gālava, in which a different account is given of the manner in which Viśvāmitra attained the rank of a Brāhman; viz. by the gift of Dharma, or Righteousness, appearing in the form of his rival. M. Bh. Udyogap. 3721: Viśvāmitraṁ tapyantam Dharmo jijnāsaya purā | abhyūgachhat evayam bhūtvā Vāsishṭho bhagavān ṛishiḥ | . . . 3728. Atha varsha-śate pārṇe Dharmah punar upāgamat | Vāsishṭhaṁ reśam āsthūya Kauśikam bhojanepsaya | sa dṛishṭvā śirasā bhaktāṁ dhriyamāṇam maharshiṇā | tiṣṭhatā vāyubhaktena Viśvāmitrena dhīmata | pratigrihya tato Dharmaḥ tathairōṣhaṇāṁ tathā naram | bhuktvā "prito 'smi ripraśhe" tam uktvā sa munir gataḥ | kshattrā-bhāvād apagato brāhmaṇatvam upāgataḥ | Dharmasya echanāt prito Viśvāmitras tathā 'bharat | "Dharma, assuming the personality of the sage Vāsishṭha, once came to prove Viśvāmitra, when he was living a life of austerity;" and after consuming some food, given¹ him by other devotees, desired Viśvāmitra, who brought him some² freshly³ cooked charu, quite hot, to stand still for the present. Viśvāmitra accordingly stood still, nourished only by⁴ air, with the boiled rice⁵ on his head. "The same personage, Dharma, in the same disguise, reappeared after a hundred years, desiring food, and consumed the rice (still quite hot and fresh), which he saw supported upon the hermit's head, while he himself remained motionless, feeding on air. Dharma then said to him, 'I am pleased with thee, o Brāhman rishi;' and went away. Viśvāmitra, having become thus transformed from a Kshattriya into a Brāhman by the word of Dharma, was delighted."

In the Anuśāsanaparvan of the Mahābhārata, we have another reference to the story of Viśvāmitra. King Yudhisṭhira enquires of Bhīshma (verse 181) how, if Brāhmanhood is so difficult to be attained by men of the other three castes, it happened that the great Kshattriya acquired that dignity. The prince then recapitulates the chief exploits of Viśvāmitra: 183. Tena hy amita-vīryeṇa Vāsishṭhasya mahātmanaḥ | hatam putra-śataṁ sadyas tapasā 'pi pitāmaha | yātudhānās cha bahavo rūkhasās tigma-tejasah | manyunā "vishṭa-dehena spishṭāḥ kālāntakopamāḥ | 185. Mahān Kuśika-vamśas cha brahmarshi-śata-sankulāḥ | sthūpito nara-loke 'smin vidvān brāhmaṇa-saṁyutaḥ | Rikikasyātma-jaś chaiva Sunahṣepho mahātapaḥ | vimokṣhito mahāsattrāt paśutām apy upāgataḥ | Hariśchandra-kṛatau devāṁs toshayitvā "tma-tejasā | putratām anusamprāpto Viśvāmitrasya dhīmataḥ | nūbhivādayato jyeshṭhaṁ Devarātaṁ narā-

dhīpa | puttrāḥ panchāśad evāpi saptaḥ śvapachatām gatāḥ | Trisankur bandhubhir muktaḥ Aikshvākuḥ prīti-pūrvakam | avāk-śīrāḥ divaṁ nīto dakṣiṇām āśrito diśam | . . . tato vighnakarī chaiva Panchachūdā su-sammataḥ | Rambhā nāmāpsarāḥ śūpād yasya śailatvam āgatā | tathaiṇdriya bhayād baddhvā Vasiṣṭhaḥ salile purā | ātmānam majjayan śrīmān vipūṣaḥ punar utthitah | "For he destroyed Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons by the power of austere-fervour; when possessed by anger, he created many demons, fierce and destructive as death; he (185) established the great and wise family of the Kuśikas, which was full of Brāhman and hundreds of Brāhman rishis; he delivered Sunaśsepha, son of Richika, who was on the point of being slaughtered as a victim, and who became his son, after he had, at Hariśchandra's sacrifice, through his own power, propitiated the gods; he cursed his fifty sons who would not do homage to Devarāta, (adopted as) the eldest, so that they became outcastes; through affection he elevated Trisanku, when forsaken by his relations, to heaven, where he remained fixed with his head downwards in the southern heavens; (191) . . . he changed the troublesome nymph Rambhā, known as Panchachūdā, by his curse into a form of stone; he occasioned Vasiṣṭha through fear to bind and throw himself into the river, though he emerged thence unbound;" and performed other deeds calculated to excite astonishment. Yudhisṭhira ends by enquiring, "how this Kshattriya became a Brāhman without transmigrating into another body" (197. Dehāntaram anūsūdyā katham sa brāhmaṇo 'bhavat |). In answer to this question, Bhīṣma (verses 200 ff.) deduces the descent of Viśvāmitra from Ajāmīḍha, of the race of Bharata, who was a pious priest, or sacrificer (yajvā dharmā-bhṛitām varah), the father of Jahnu, who again was the progenitor of Kuśika, the father of Gādhi; and narrates the same legend of the birth of Viśvāmitra, which has been already extracted from the Vishṇu Purāṇa (see above, pp. 349 f.). The conclusion of the story as here given is, that the wife of Richika bore Jamadagni, while "the wife of Gādhi, by the grace of the rishi, gave birth to Viśvāmitra, who was a Brāhman rishi, and an utterer of the Veda; who, though a Kshattriya, attained to Brāhmanhood, and became afterwards also the founder of a Brāhman race" (246. Viśvāmitraṁ chājanayad Gādhi-bhāryyā yāśasvinī | rīṣheḥ prasādād rājendra brahmarshim brahmavādinam | tato brāhmaṇatām yāto Viśvāmitro mahātapaḥ | kshattriyaḥ so 'py atha tathā brahma-vaiśasya kārakaḥ |).

of which the members are detailed,²⁰⁸ including the great rishi Kapila. In regard to the mode in which Viśvāmitra was transformed from a Kshattriya into a Brāhman, we are only told that he belonged to the former class, and that "Rīchika infused into him this exalted Brīhmanhood" (259. Tathaira kshattriyo rājan Viśvāmitro mahātapaḥ | Rīchikenāhitam brahma param etad Yudhishṭhira |).

This version of the story is different from all those preceding ones which enter into any detail, as it makes no mention of Viśvāmitra having extorted the Brahmanical rank from the gods by force of his austerities; and ascribes his transformation to a virtue communicated by the sage Rīchika.

I have above (p. 296 f.) quoted a passage from Manu on the subject of submissive and refractory monarchs, in which reference is made to Viśvāmitra's elevation to the Brahmanical order. Nothing is there said of his conflict with Vaśishṭha, or of his arduous penances, endured with the view of conquering for himself an equality with his rival. On the contrary, it is to his submissiveness, i.e. to his dutiful recognition of the superiority of the Brāhmins, that his admission into their class is ascribed. Kullūka, indeed, explains the word submissiveness (vināya) to mean virtue in general; but the contrast which is drawn between Prithu, Manu, and Viśvāmitra, on the one hand, and Veṇa, Nahusha, Sudās, and Nimi, the resisters of Brāhmanical prerogatives (as all the legends declare them to have been), on the other, makes it tolerably evident that the merit which Manu means to ascribe to Viśvāmitra is that of implicit submission to the spiritual authority of the Brāhmins.

In the reign of Mitrasaha, also called Saudāsa, and Kalmāshapāda, the son of Sudāsa, and the descendant of Trisanku in the twenty-second generation (see p. 337, above), we still find Vaśishṭha figuring in the legend, as the priest of that monarch, and causing him, by an imprecation, to become a cannibal, because he had, under the influence of a delusion, offered the priest human flesh to eat. I shall not extract the version of the story given in the Vishṇu Purāṇa in detail (Wilson, V.P. vol. iii. pp. 304 ff.), as it does not in any way illustrate the rivalry of Vaśishṭha and Viśvāmitra.

The Mahābhārata gives the following variation of the history (Ādi-parvan, sect. 176): "Kalmāshapāda was a king of the race of Ikshvāku. Viśvāmitra wished to be employed by him as his officiating priest; but the king preferred Vaśishṭha" (verse 6699. Akāmayaṭ taṁ yājyārthe Viśvāmitraḥ pratāpavān | sa tu rājā mahātmānaṁ Vaśishṭham ṛishi-sat-tamam |). It happened, however, that the king went out to hunt, and after having killed a large quantity of game, he became very much fatigued, as well as hungry and thirsty. Meeting Saktri, the eldest of Vaśishṭha's hundred sons, on the road, he ordered him to get out of his way. The priest civilly replied (verse 6703): Mama panthāḥ mahārāja dharmāḥ eṣa sanātanaḥ | rājā sarveṣu dharmeshu deyaḥ panthāḥ dvijā-taye | "The path is mine, o king; this is the immemorial law; in all observances the king must cede the way to the Brāhman." Neither party would yield, and the dispute waxing warmer, the king struck the muni with his whip. The muni, resorting to the usual expedient of offended sages, by a curse doomed the king to become a man-eater. "It happened that at that time enmity existed between Viśvāmitra and Vaśishṭha on account of their respective claims to be priest to Kalmāshapāda" (verse 6710. Tato yājya-nimittam tu Viśvāmitra-Vaśishṭhayoḥ | rairam āsīt tadā taṁ tu Viśvāmitro'nvapadyata |). Viśvāmitra had followed the king; and approached while he was disputing with Saktri. Perceiving, however, the son of his rival Vaśishṭha, Viśvāmitra made himself invisible, and passed them, watching his opportunity. The king began to implore Saktri's clemency: but Viśvāmitra wishing to prevent their reconciliation, commanded a Rākshasa (a man-devouring demon) to enter into the king. Owing to the conjoint influence of the Brāhman-rishi's curse, and Viśvāmitra's command, the demon obeyed the injunction. Perceiving that his object was gained, Viśvāmitra left things to take their course, and absented himself from the country. The king having happened to meet a hungry Brāhman, and sent him, by the hand of his cook (who could procure nothing else), some human flesh to eat, was cursed by him also to the same effect as by Saktri. The curse, being now augmented in force, took effect, and Saktri himself was the first victim, being eaten up by the king. The same fate befell all the other sons of Vasiṣṭha at the instigation of Viśvāmitra :

beasts of the forest.²⁰⁹ On hearing of the destruction of his sons by Viśvāmitra, Vaśiṣṭha supported his affliction, as the great mountain sustains the earth. He meditated his own destruction, but never thought of exterminating the Kauśikas. 6740. This divine sage hurled himself from the summit of Meru, but fell upon the rocks as if on a heap of cotton. Escaping alive from his fall, he entered a glowing fire in the forest; but the fire, though fiercely blazing, not only failed to burn him, but seemed perfectly cool. He next threw himself into the sea with a heavy stone attached to his neck; but was cast up by the waves on the dry land. He then went home to his hermitage; (6745) but seeing it empty and desolate, he was again overcome by grief and went out; and seeing the river Vipāśā which was swollen by the recent rains, and sweeping along many trees torn from its banks, he conceived the design of drowning himself into its waters: he accordingly tied himself firmly with cords, and threw himself in; but the river severing his bonds, deposited him unbound (vipāśā) on dry land; whence the name of the stream, as imposed by the sage.²¹⁰ 6752. He afterwards saw and threw himself into the dreadful Satadru (Sutlej), which was full of alligators, etc., and derived its name from rushing away in a hundred directions on seeing the Brāhman brilliant as fire. In consequence of this he was once more stranded; and seeing he could not kill himself, he went back to his hermitage. After roaming about over many mountains and countries, he was followed home by his daughter-in-law Adṛiṣyāntī, Śaktri's widow, from whose womb he heard a sound of the recitation of the Vedas, as she was pregnant with a child, which, when born, received the name of Parāśara, verse 6794. Learning from her that there was

²¹⁰ The Nirukta, ix. 26, after giving other etymologies of the word Vipāś, adds a verse: Pāśāḥ asyām vyapāśyanta Vasishṭhasya mumūrshataḥ | tasmād Vipāś uchyaṭe pūrvam āsīd Uruñjirā | "In it the bonds of Vaśiṣṭha were loosed, when he was on the point of death: hence it is called Vipāś. It formerly bore the name of Uruñjirā." It does not appear whether or not this verse is older than the Mahābhārata. On this text of the Nirukta, Durga (as quoted by Prof. Müller, Rig-veda, ii. Pref. p. liv.) annotates: Vasishṭhaḥ kila nimamajja asyām mumūrshuḥ putra-maraṇa-śokārtitaḥ pāśair ātmānam badhvā | tasya kila te pāśāḥ asyām vyapāśyanta vyamuchyanta udaya-kena | "Vaśiṣṭha plunged into it, after binding himself with bonds, wishing to die when grieved at the death of his sons. In it (the river) his bonds were loosed by the water."

thus a hope of his line being continued, he abstained from further attempts on his own life. King Kalmāshapāda, however, whom they encountered in the forest, was about to devour them both, when Vasiṣṭha stopped him by a blast from his mouth; and sprinkling him with water consecrated by a holy text, he delivered him from the curse by which he had been affected for twelve years. The king then addressed Vasiṣṭha thus: “‘Most excellent sage, I am Saudāsa, whose priest thou art: what can I do that would be pleasing to thee?’ Vasiṣṭha answered: ‘This which has happened has been owing to the force of destiny: go, and rule thy kingdom; but, o monarch, never contemn the Brāhmanas.’ The king replied: ‘Never shall I despise the most excellent Brāhmanas; but submitting to thy commands I shall pay them all honour. And I must obtain from thee the means of discharging my debt to the Ikshvākus. Thou must give me the offspring which I desire.’” Vasiṣṭha promised to comply with his request. They then returned to Ayodhyā. And Vasiṣṭha having been solicited by the king to beget an heir to the throne²¹¹ (verse 6787. Rājnas tasyājñayā devī Vasiṣṭham upachakrame | maharshiḥ saṁvidāṁ kṛtvā sambabhūva tayā saha | devyā divyena vidhinā Vasiṣṭho bhagavān ṛishiḥ), the queen became pregnant by him, and brought forth a son at the end of twelve years. This extraordinary proceeding, so contrary to all the recognized rules of morality, is afterwards (verses 6888–6912) explained to have been necessitated by the curse of a Brāhmaṇi, whose husband Kalmāshapāda had devoured when in the forest, and who had doomed him to die if he should attempt to become a father, and had foretold that Vasiṣṭha should be the instrument of propagating his race (verse 6906: Patnīm ṛitāv anuprāpya sadyas tyakshyasi jīvitam | yasya charsher Vasiṣṭhasya tvayā putrāḥ vināśitūḥ | tena sangamya te bhūryyā tanayam janayishyati).²¹²

²¹¹ The same story is told in the Vishṇu Pur. iv., 4, 38 (Wilson, vol. 3, p. 310).

²¹² This incident is alluded to in the Ādip., section 122. It is there stated that in the olden time women were subject to no restraint, and incurred no blame for abandoning their husbands and cohabiting with anyone they pleased (verse 4719. Anāvṛitāḥ kila purā striyaḥ āsan varānane | kama-chāra-vihārīṇyaḥ svatantrāḥ chāru-hāsini | tāsāṁ vyuchcharamāṇāṁ kaumārāt subhage patīm | nādharmo 'bhūd varārohe sa hi dharmah purā 'bhavat, compare verse 4729). A stop was, however, put to this practice by Uddālaka Śvetaketu, whose indignation was on one occasion aroused by a Brāhmaṇ taking his mother by the hand, and inviting her to go away with him, although his father, in whose presence this occurred, informed him that

The Mahābhārata has a further legend, regarding Viśvāmītra's jealousy of Vaśiṣṭha, which again exhibits the former in a very odious light, and as destitute of the moral dispositions befitting a saint, while Vaśiṣṭha is represented as manifesting a noble spirit of disinterestedness and generosity.

Sālyap. 2360. *Viśvāmītrasya viprarsher Vaśiṣṭhasya cha Bhārata | bhṛīsaṁ vairam abhūd rājaṁ tapaḥ-sparddhā-kṛitam mahat | āsramo vai Vaśiṣṭhasya sthānu-tīrthe 'bhavad mahān | pūrvataḥ pūrvataḥ chāśīd Viśvāmītrasya dhīmataḥ | . . . 2366. there was no reason for his displeasure, as the custom was one which had prevailed from time immemorial (verse 4726. S'vetaketoh kila purā samaksham mātaram pituḥ | jagrūha brāhmaṇaḥ pūṇau "gachhāva" iti chābravīt | ṛishi-puttras tataḥ kopaṁ chakūrāmarsha-choditāḥ | mātaraṁ tām tathā dṛiṣṭvā nīyamānām balād iva | kruḍ-dham tām tu pitū dṛiṣṭvā S'vetaketuḥ uvācha ha | "mā tāta kopaṁ kārṣhṣi tvam esha dharmah sanātanaḥ | "). But S'vetaketu could not tolerate the practice, and introduced the existing rule (verse 4730. Ṛishi-putro 'tha tāṁ dharmāṁ S'vetaketur na chakshame | chakūra chaiva maryādū imāṁ strī-puṁsayoḥ bhuvi |). A wife and a husband indulging in promiscuous intercourse were therefore thenceforward guilty of sin. But a wife, when appointed by her husband to raise up seed to him (by having intercourse with another man), is in like manner guilty if she refuse (4734. Paṭyā niyuktā yā chava patnī putrārtham eva cha | na karishyati tasyās cha bhaviṣyati tad eva hi | iti tena purā bhīru maryādā sthūpita balāt |). Pūṇḍu, the speaker, then proceeds to give an instance of the latter procedure in the case of Madayanti, the wife of Saudāsa, who, by her husband's command, visited Vaśiṣṭha for the purpose in question (4736. Saudāsaṁ cha ramdhoru niyuktā putra-janmani | Madayanti jagāmarṣiṁ Vaśiṣṭhaṁ iti naḥ śrutam |). “2360. There existed a great enmity, arising from rivalry in their austerities, between Viśvāmitra and the Brāhman rishi Vaśiṣṭha. Vaśiṣṭha had an extensive hermitage in Sthānputrīrtha, to the east of which was Viśvāmītra's 2366. These two great ascetics were every day exhibiting intense emulation in regard to their respective austerities. But Viśvāmītra, beholding the might of Vaśishṭha, was the most chagrined; and fell into deep thought. The idea of this sage, constant in duty (!), was the following: 'This river Sarasvatī will speedily bring to me on her current the austere Vaśishṭha, the most eminent of all mutterers of prayers. When that most excellent Brāhmaṇ has come, I shall most assuredly kill him.' 2370. Having thus determined, the divine sage Viśvāmītra, his eyes reddened by anger, called to mind the chief of rivers. She being thus the subject of his thoughts, became very anxious, as she knew him to be very powerful and very irascible. Then trembling, pallid, and with joined hands, the Sarasvatī stood before the chief of munis. Like a woman whose husband has been slain, she was greatly distressed; and said to him, 'What shall I do?' The incensed muni replied, 'Bring Vaśishṭha hither speedily, that I may slay him.' 2375. The lotus-eyed goddess, joining her hands, trembled in great fear, like a creeping plant agitated by the wind." Viśvāmītra, however, although he saw her condition, repeated his command. 2377. "The Sarasvatī, who knew how sinful was his design, and that the might of Vaśishṭha was unequalled, went trembling, and in great dread of being cursed by both the sages, to Vaśishṭha, and told him what his rival had said. 2380. Vaśishṭha seeing her emaciated, pale, and anxious, spoke thus: 'Deliver thyself, o chief of rivers; carry me unhesitatingly to Viśvāmītra, lest he curse thee.' Hearing these words of the merciful sage, the Sarasvatī considered how she could act most wisely. She reflected, 'Vaśishṭha has always shown me great kindness; I must seek his welfare.' Then observing the Kauśika sage [so in the text, but does not the sense require Vaśishṭha?] praying and sacrificing on her brink, she regarded (2385) that as a good opportunity, and swept away the bank by the force of her current. In this way the son of Mitra and Varuṇa (Vaśishṭha) was carried down; and while he was being borne along, he thus celebrated the river: 'Thou, o Sarasvatī, issuest from the lake of Brahmā, and pervadest the whole world with thy excellent streams. Residing in the sky, thou dischargest water into the clouds. Thou alone art all waters. By thee we study.' [Here the river Sarasvatī is identified with Sarasvati the goddess of speech.] ²¹⁴ 'Thou art nourishment, radiance, fame, perfection, intellect, light. Thou art speech; thou art Svāhā; this world is subject to thee. 2390. Thou, in fourfold form, dwellest in all creatures.' . . . 2392. Beholding Vaśishṭhā brought near by the Sarasvatī, Viśvāmitra searched for a weapon with which to make an end of him. Perceiving his anger, and dreading lest Brahmanicide should ensue, the river promptly carried away Vaśishṭha in an easterly direction; thus fulfilling the commands of both sages, but eluding Viśvāmitra. Seeing Vaśishṭha so carried away, (2395) Viśvāmitra, impatient, and enraged by vexation, said to her: 'Since thou, o chief of rivers, hast eluded me, and hast receded, roll in waves of blood acceptable to the chief of demons,' [which are fabled to gloat on blood]. "The Sarasvatī, being thus cursed, flowed for a year in a stream mingled with blood. . . . 2401. Rākshasas came to the place of pilgrimage, where Vaśishṭha had been swept away, and revelled in drinking to satiety the bloody stream in security, dancing and laughing, as if they had conquered heaven." Some rishis who arrived at the spot some time after were horrified to see the blood-stained water, and the Rākshasas quaffing it, and (2407) "made the most strenuous efforts to rescue the Sarasvatī." After learning from her the cause of the pollution of her waters, they propitiated Mahādeva by the most various austerities, and thus obtained the restoration of the river to her pristine purity (2413 ff.).

We have another reference to the connection of the families of Sudās and Vaśishṭha in the legend of Paraśurāma,²¹⁵ the destroyer of the Kshattriyas, in the 49th section of the Śāntiparvan of the Mahābhārata. Sarvakarman, a descendant of Sudās, is there mentioned as one of those

Kshatriyas who had been preserved from the general massacre by Parāsara, grandson of Vasiṣṭha: verse 1792. Tathā 'nukampamānena yajvanā 'mita-tejasū | Parāsaṛeṇa dāyudāḥ Saudāsaśābhirakṣitaḥ | sarva-karmāṇi kurute śūdra-vat tasya vai dvijaḥ | Sarvakarmety abhikhyātaḥ sa mām rakṣatu pāṛthivaḥ | “Sarvakarman, the son of Saudāsa, was preserved by the tender-hearted priest Parāsara, who performed, though a Brāhman, all menial offices for him, like a Śūdra; whence the prince's name;—may this king protect me (the earth).” The same book of the Mahābhārata, when recording a number of good deeds done to Brāhmans, has also the following allusion to Mitrasaha and Vasiṣṭha: verse 8604. Rājā Mitrasahaś chāpi Vasiṣṭhāya mahātmane | Damayantīm priyām dattvā tayā saha divaṁ gataḥ | “King Mitrasaha, having bestowed his dear Damayanti on Vasiṣṭha, ascended to heaven along with her.”²¹⁶

The same passage has two further allusions to Vasiṣṭha, which, though unconnected with our present subject, may be introduced here. In verse 8591 it is said: Rantidevaś cha Sankṛityo Vasiṣṭhāya mahātmane | apaḥ pradūya śitoshnāḥ nāka-prishṭhe mahīyate | “Rantideva, son of Sankṛiti, who gave Vasiṣṭha tepid water, is exalted to the heavenly regions.” (See the Bhāg. Pur. ix. 21, 2–18, where the various acts of self-sacrifice practised by this prince are celebrated.) It is said of Vasiṣṭha in verse 8601: Avarshati cha Parjanya sarva-bhūtāni bhūta-kṛit | Vasiṣṭho jīvayāmāsa prajāpatir ivāparaḥ | “When Parjanya failed to send rain, the creative Vasiṣṭha, like Brahmā, gave life to all beings.”

Vasiṣṭha, in short, is continually reappearing in the Mahābhārata. I will here adduce but one other passage. In the Śāntiparvan, verses 10, 118 ff., it is said: Tasya Vṛittrārdditasayātha mohaḥ āsich chhatakratoḥ | rathantareṇa taṁ tatra Vasiṣṭhaḥ samabodhayat | Vasiṣṭhaḥ uvācha | deva-śreṣṭho 'si devendra daityāsura-nibarhaṇa | trilokya-bala-

²¹⁶ This appears to refer to the story told above, p. 418 ff., of Kalmāshapāda (who was the same as Mitrasaha), allowing Vasiṣṭha to be the agent in propagating the royal race; for both there (v. 6910) and in the Vishṇu Pur. (Wilson, vol. iii., pp. 308 and 310), the name of the queen is said to have been Madayanti, which is probably the right reading here also, the first two letters only having been transposed. If so, however, it is to be observed that a quite different turn is given to the story here, where it is represented as a meritorious act on the king's part, and as a favour to Vasiṣṭha, that the queen was given up to him; whilst, according to the other account, the king's sole object in what he did was to get progeny.

saṁyuktaḥ kasmāch chhakra nishīdasi | eṣa Brahmā cha Viṣṇuḥ cha S'ivaś chaiva jagat-patiḥ | Somaś cha bhagavān devaḥ sarve cha paramarshayaḥ | mā kārshīḥ kasmalaṁ S'akra kaśchid evetaro yathā | āryyām yuddhe matiṁ kṛtvā jahi śatrūn surādhipa | "By reciting the Rathantāra, Vasiṣṭha encouraged Indra, when he had become bewildered and distressed in his conflict with Vritra, saying to him, 'Thou art the chief of the gods, o slayer of the Daityas and Asuras, possessing all the strength of the three worlds: wherefore, Indra, dost thou despond? There are here present Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Siva, the divine Soma, and all the chief rishis. Faint not, o Indra, like an ordinary being. Assume a heroic spirit for the fight, and slay thine enemies, etc.'" Strength was thus infused into Indra.

In a later work, the Rāja Taranginī, Book IV. verses 619-655 (pp. 188 ff. and note, pp. 521 and 522, of Troyer's edition, vol. i. and vol. ii. 189, 469, note), a curious echo of these old legends is found still reverberating. A story is there told of a king Jayāpiḍa who oppressed his people, and persecuted the Brāhmins, and was eventually destroyed by them in a miraculous manner. He is compared to Saudāsa in verse 625: Sa Saudāsaḥ ivāṅka-loka-prāṇūpakūrakṛit | astutya-kṛtya-sauhitṛyām evapne 'pi na samāyayau | "Like Saudāsa, depriving many persons of their lives, he was not satiated with wicked deeds even in his dreams." One of the Brāhmins stood up on behalf of the rest to remonstrate: Āha sma "Viśvāmitro vā Vasiṣṭho vā taponidhiḥ | tvam Agastyo 'thavā kiṁ stha" iti darpeṇa taṁ nṛipaḥ | . . . bhavān yatra Hariśchandras Triśankur Nahusho 'pi vā | Viśvāmitra-mukhebhyaḥ haṁ tatraiko bhavitūṁ kṣamaḥ | vihasyovācha taṁ rājā "Viśvāmitrādīkopataḥ | Hariśchandrāyo nashṭās tvayi kruddhe tu kim bhavet" | pūninā tūdayann ūrviṁ tataḥ kruddho 'bhyadhād dvijāḥ | "mayi kruddhe kṣaṇād eva brahma-daṇḍaḥ pated na kim" | tach chkrutvā vihasan rājā kopād brāhmaṇam abravīt | "patatu brahma-daṇḍo 'sau kim adyāpi vilambate" | nanv ayam patito jālmety atha vipreṇa bhūṣhite | rājnaḥ kanaka-daṇḍo 'nge vitāna-skhalito 'patat | "The king haughtily asked him: 'Art thou Viśvāmitra, or Vasiṣṭha, so rich in devotion? or Agastya? or what art thou?' . . . The Brāhman answered, swelling with indignation: 'Just as thou art a Hariśchandra, a Triśanku, or a Nahusha, so too have I power to be a Viśvāmitra, or one of those other rishis.' The king answered with a smile of contempt: 'Hariśchandra and the rest perished by the wrath of Viśvāmitra and the other sages : but what will come of thy wrath ?' The Brāhman angrily replied, smiting the ground with his hand, ' When I am incensed, shall not the Brahmanical bolt instantly descend ?' The king retorted with an angry laugh : ' Let it descend ; why does it not come down at once ?' ' Has it not fallen, tyrant ?' said the Brāhman ; and he had no sooner spoken, than a golden beam fell from the canopy and smote the king," so that he became tortured by worms, and shortly after died ; and went, as the story concludes, to hell.

Professor Lassen, who quotes the stories regarding Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra (Ind. Alt. 2nd ed. i. 718 f.), makes the following remarks on their import :

"The legend of the struggle between Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra embraces two distinct points : one is the contest between the priests and warriors for the highest rank ; the other is the temporary alienation of the Ikshvākus from their family priests. Vasishṭha is represented as the exemplar of such a priest ; and the story of Kalmāshapāda is related for the express purpose of showing by an example that the Ikshvākus, after they had retained him, were victorious, and fulfilled perfectly the duties of sacrifice (see above, p. 390) : in his capacity of priest he continues to live on, and is the representative of his whole race. We may conclude from the legend that his descendants had acquired the position of family priests to the Ikshvākus, though neither he himself nor his son Śaktri belonged to their number. Triśanku is the first prince who forsook them, and had recourse to Viśvāmitra. His successor Amba-risha received support from that personage, as well as from Richika, one of the Bhrigus ;—a family whose connection with the Kuśikas appears also in the story of Paraśurāma. The hostility between the Ikshvākus and the family of Vasishṭha continued down to Kalmāshapāda. Viśvāmitra is represented as having intentionally fostered the alienation ; while Vasishṭha is described as forbearing (though he had the power) to annihilate his rival.

"The conflict between the two rivals with its motives and machinery is described in the forms peculiar to the fully developed epos. To this style of poetry is to be referred the wonder-working cow, which supplies all objects of desire. There is no ground for believing in any actual war with weapons between the contending parties, or in any participation of degraded Kshattriyas, or aboriginal tribes, in the contest; for all these things are mere poetical creations. Besides, the proper victory of Vasishṭha was not gained by arms, but by his rod. The legend represents the superiority of the Brāhmins as complete, since Viśvāmitra is forced to acknowledge the insufficiency of a warrior's power; and acquires his position as a Brāhman by purely Brahmanical methods.

"From Viśvāmitra are derived many of the sacerdotal families, which bear the common name of Kauśika, and to which many rishis famous in tradition belong. As there were also kings in this family, we have here an example of the fact that one of the old Vedic races became divided, and in later times belonged to both of the two higher castes. It appears impossible that any of the aboriginal tribes should have been among the descendants of Viśvāmitra's sons, as the legend represents; and the meaning of this account may therefore be that some of his sons and their descendants accepted the position of priests among these tribes, and are in consequence described as accursed."²¹⁷

Aruneya, Somaśushma Sātyayajni, and Yājñavalkya, and said to them, 'How do ye respectively offer the agnihotra oblation?' 2. Svetaketu replied, 'I, o monarch, in sacrificing, throw the one of the two eternal heats which pervade the world with their splendour into the other.' 'How is that done,' asked the king. (S. replied), 'Āditya (the sun) is one heat; in the evening I throw him into Agni (Fire). Agni is the other heat; in the morning I throw him into Āditya.' 'What' (enquired the king) 'does he become who thus sacrifices?' 'He acquires' (replied S.) 'perpetual prosperity and renown; conquers for himself an union with these two deities, and dwells in the same region as they.' 3. Then Somaśushma answered, 'I, o monarch, in sacrificing, throw light into light.' 'How is that done,' asked the king. 'The Sun' (answered S.) 'is light; in the evening I throw him into Fire: and Fire is light; in the morning I throw him into the Sun.' 'What' (enquired the king) 'does he become who thus sacrifices?' 'He becomes' (rejoined S.) 'luminous, and renowned, an eater of food, and conquers for himself an union with these two deities, and dwells in the same region as they.' 4. Then Yājñavalkya said, 'When I take up the fire I lift the agnihotra. All the gods follow the Sun when he sets; and when they see me take up the Fire, they come back to me. Then, after washing and putting down the vessels, and having the Agnihotra Cow milked, beholding them as they behold me, I satisfy them (with sacrificial food).' The king answered, 'Thou hast approached very close to a solution of the Agnihotra, o Yājñavalkya; I give thee a hundred milch-cows: but thou hast not discovered the ascent of these two (oblations), nor the course, nor the resting-place, nor the satisfaction, nor the return, nor the world where they reappear(?)' Having so spoken, Janaka mounted his car and drove away. 5. The Brāhmins then said amongst themselves, 'This Rājanya has surpassed us in speaking; come, let us invite him to a theological discussion.' Yājñavalkya, however, interposed, 'We are Brāhmins, and he a Rājanya; if we overcome him, we shall ask ourselves, whom have we overcome? but if he overcome us, men will say to us, a Rājanya has overcome Brāhmins. Do not follow this course.' They assented to his advice. Then Yājñavalkya mounted his car, and drove after the king; and came up to him. Janaka asked, 'is it to learn the agnihotra (that thou hast come), Yājñavalkya?' 'The agnihotra, o monarch,' said Y. 6. The king rejoined, 'These two oblations, when offered, ascend; they enter the air, they make the air their āhavanīya fire, the wind their fuel, the rays their bright oblation, they satisfy the air, and thence ascend. 7. They enter the sky, they make the sky their āhavanīya fire, the sun their fuel, the moon their bright oblation; they satisfy the sky, they return thence. 8. They enter this earth, they make this earth their āhavanīya fire, Agni their fuel, the plants their bright oblation; they satisfy the earth, they ascend thence. They enter man, they make his mouth their āhavanīya fire, his tongue their fuel, food their bright oblation; they satisfy man. (He who, thus knowing, eats, truly offers the agnihotra). 9. They ascend from him, they enter into woman [the details which follow are better left untranslated], they satisfy her. The man who, thus knowing, approaches his wife, truly offers the agnihotra. The son who is then born is the world of re-appearance. This is the agnihotra, o Yājñavalkya; there is nothing beyond this.' Y. offered the king the choice of a boon. He replied, 'Let me enquire of thee whatever I desire, o Yājñavalkya.' Henceforward Janaka was a Brāhmān."²¹⁹

By Brāhmān in the last sentence we have, I presume, to understand a Brāhman. Even if it were taken to dignify a priest of the kind called Brāhmān, the conclusion would be the same; as at the time when the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa was written, none but Brāhmans could officiate as priests.²²⁰

Janaka's name occurs frequently in the Mahābhārata. In the Vana-parvan of that poem (8089) he is called a rājarshi. In the Sānti-parvan, verse 6640, it is said: Atrāpy udāharantīmam itihāsam purāṭanam | gītāṁ Videha-rājena Janakena praśāmyatū | "anantaṁ vata me vittaṁ yasya me nāsti kinchana | Mithilāyām pradīptāyām na me dahyati kinchana" | "They here relate an ancient story,—the words recited by Janaka the tranquil-minded king of Videha:

• Though worldly pelf I own no more,
Of wealth I have a boundless store:
While Mithilā the flames devour,
My goods can all defy their power.'"

²¹⁹ The Commentator explains brahmā by brahmishṭhaḥ, "Most full of divine knowledge."

The same sentiment is ascribed to the same royal rishi in verse 7891 : Api cha bhavati Mai'ihilena gītaṁ nagaram upāhitam agninaḥ bhivikshya | "na khalu mama hi dahyate 'ttra kinchit" svayam idam āha sma bhūmi-pālah | "And these words were repeated by the king of Mithilā when he beheld the city enveloped in fire, 'nothing of mine is burnt here ;' —so said the king himself."

Another "ancient story" of Janaka is related in verses 7882–7983 of the same book. It is there stated that this king was constantly engaged in thinking on matters connected with a future life ; and that he had a hundred religious teachers to instruct him on different points of duty (verse 7884). He was, however, visited by the rishi Panchaśikha²²¹ (verses 7886, 7888), a pupil of Āsuri (verse 7890), who so confounded the king's hundred instructors by his reasoning, that they were abandoned by their pupil, who followed this new teacher (7898. Upetya śatam āchāryān mohayāmāsa hetubhiḥ | 7899. Janakas tv abhisamraktuḥ Kāpileyānudarśanāt | utsrijiya śatam āchāryān prishṭhato 'nujagāmatam). Panchaśikha appears also, at verse 11839, as his instructor. At verse 10699 Janaka is again brought forward as receiving religious information from Parāśara ; in verses 11545–11836 as being taught by the rishi Yājñavalkya the principles of the Yoga and Sāṅkhya philosophies ; and in verses 11854–12043 as holding a conversation with a travelling female mendicant (bhikṣukī), named Sulabhā, who sought to prove him, and to whom he declares himself to be a pupil of Panchaśikha (here said to belong to the family of Parāśara, verse 11875), and an adept in the systems just mentioned ; and from whom, in answer to some reproaches he had addressed to her regarding her procedure, he learns that she belongs to the Rājanya class, like himself, of the family of the rājarshi Pradhāna, that she had obtained no suitable husband, and wandered about, following an ascetic life, and seeking final emancipation (verses 12033 ff.).

A further story in illustration of Janaka's indifference to worldly objects is told in the Āśvamedhikaparvan, verses 887 ff.

SECT. XV.—Other instances in which Brāhmanas are said to have been instructed in divine knowledge by Kshattriyaas.

Two other cases in which Brāhmanas are recorded to have received instruction from Kshattriyaas are thus stated by Professor Müller :²²³

“For a Kshattriya to teach the law was a crime (sva-dharmātikrama), and it is only by a most artificial line of argument that the dogmatic philosophers of the Mīmāṃsā school tried to explain this away. The Brāhmanas seem to have forgotten that, according to their own Upanishads, Ajātaśatru, the king of Kāśi, possessed more knowledge than Gārgya, the son of Bālāka, who was renowned as a reader of the Veda, and that Gārgya desired to become his pupil, though it was not right, as the king himself remarked, that a Kshattriya should initiate a Brāhman. They must have forgotten that Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, king of the Panchālas, silenced Svetaketu Āruṇeya and his father, and then communicated to them doctrines which Kshattriyaas only, but no Brāhmanas, had ever known before.” I subjoin two separate versions of each of these stories. The first is that of Ajātaśatru :

Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa Upanishad, iv. 1. Atha ha vai Gārgyo Bālākir anūchānaḥ saṁspashtaḥ āsa | so 'vasad Uśinareshu savasan Matsyeshu Kuru-panchāleshu Kāśi-videheshv iti | sa ha Ajātaśatruṁ Kāśyam ārrajya uvācha “brahma te bravūṇi” iti | taṁ ha uvācha Ajātaśatruḥ “sahasraṁ dadmaḥ” iti “etasyāṁ vāchi | ‘Janako Janakaḥ’ iti vai u janāḥ dhāvanti” iti | . . . 19. Tataḥ u ha Bālākiś tūshnīm āsa | taṁ ha uvācha Ajātaśatruḥ “etāvad nu Bālāke” iti | “etāvad” iti ha uvācha Bālākiḥ | tam ha uvācha Ajātaśatruḥ “mrishā vai khalu mā saṁvādayishthāḥ “brahma te bravūṇi” iti | yo vai Bālāke eteshāṁ puruṣhānāṁ karttā yasya vai tat karma sa vai veditaryāḥ” iti | tataḥ u ha Bālākiḥ samit-pāṇiḥ pratichakrame “upāyāni” iti | taṁ ha uvācha Ajātaśatruḥ “pratiloma-rūpam eva tad manye yat kshattriyo brāhmaṇam upanayeta ehi vy eva tvā jnapayishyāmi” iti | taṁ ha pāṇāv abhipadya pravavrāja |

“Now Gārgya Bālāki was renowned as a man well read in the Veda. He dwelt among the Uśīnaras, Matsyas, Kurus, Panchālas, Kāśis, and Videhas, travelling from place to place. He came to of being instructed in divine knowledge. (But) I will teach thee.' He took him by the hand, and rose."

The second story is that of Pravāhana Jaivali:

"Svetaketu Āruṇeya came to the assembly of the Panchūlas. He came to Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, who was receiving service from his attendants. Seeing Svetaketu, the king said, 'o youth.' 'Sire,' he answered. (King) 'Hast thou been instructed by thy father?' (Svetaketu) 'I have.' 2. (K.) 'Dost thou know how these creatures, when departing, proceed in different directions?' (S.) 'No.' (K.) 'Dost thou know how they return to this world?' (S.) 'No.' (K.) 'Dost thou know how it is that the other world is not filled with those numerous beings who are thus constantly departing?' (S.) 'No.' 3. (K.) 'Dost thou know after the offering of what oblation the waters, acquiring human voices, rise and speak?' (S.) 'No.' (K.) 'Dost thou know the means of attaining the path which leads to the gods, or that which leads to the Pitris; by what act the one or the other is gained?' 4. And we have heard the words of the rishi: (R.V. x. 88, 15 = Vaj. S. 19, 47) "I have heard of two paths for mortals, one to the pitris, another to the gods. By these proceeds every moving thing that exists between the father and the mother (i.e. between Dyaus and Prithivī, heaven and earth)." 'I know none of all these things,' answered Svetaketu. 5. The king then invited him to stay. The youth, however, did not accept this invitation, but hastened away, and came to his father, to whom he said, 'Thou didst formerly declare me to be instructed.' 'How now (my) intelligent (son)?' asked his father. 'The Rājanya,' replied the son, 'asked me five questions, of which I know not even one.' 'What were the questions?' 'They were these,' and he told him the initial words of each of them. 6. The father then said, 'Be assured, my son, that I told thee all that I myself know. But come, let us proceed thither, and become (his) pupils. 'Do thou thyself go,' rejoined the son. 7. Gantama accordingly arrived (at the abode) of Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, who caused a seat to be brought, and water and the madhuparka mess to be presented: 8. and said, 'We offer thee a boon, Gautama.' Gautama replied, 'Thou hast promised me this boon: explain to me the questions which thou hast proposed to the youth.' 9. The king replied, 'That is one of the divine boons; ask one of those that are human.' 10. Gautama rejoined, 'Thou knowest that I have received gold, cows, horses, female slaves, attendants, raiment; be not illiberal towards us in respect to that which is immense, infinite, boundless.' 'This, o Gautama,' said the king, 'thou rightly desirest.' 'I approach thee (as thy) disciple,' answered Gautama. The men of old used to approach (their teachers) with words (merely). He (accordingly) attended him by merely intimating his intention to do so.²²⁸ 'Do not,' then said the king, 'attach any blame to me, as your ancestors (did not). This knowledge has never heretofore dwelt in any Brāhman; but I shall declare it to thee. For who should refuse thee when thou so speakest?' "

"1. Svetaketu Āruṇeya came to the assembly of the Panchūlas. Pravāhaṇa Jaivali asked him, 'Young man, has thy father instructed thee?' 'He has, sire,' replied Svetaketu. 2. 'Dost thou know,' asked the king, 'whither living creatures proceed when they go hence?' (S.) 'No, sire.' (King) 'Dost thou know how they return?' (S.) 'No, sire.' (K.) 'Dost thou know the divergences of the two paths whereof one leads to the gods, and the other to the pitris?' (S.) 'No, sire.' 3. (K.) 'Dost thou know how it is that the other world is not filled?' (S.) 'No, sire.' (K.) 'Dost thou know how at the fifth oblation the waters acquire human voices?' (S.) 'I do not, sire.' 4. (K.) 'And hast thou then said "I have been instructed?" for how can he who does not know these things allege that he has been so?' The young man, mortified, went to his father, and said, 'Thou didst tell me, I have instructed thee, when thou hadst not done so. 5. That Rājanya proposed to me five questions, of which I could not solve even one.' The father replied, 'As thou didst then say to me regarding these five questions, I know not one of them,—(so I ask thee whether) if I had known them, I would not have told them to thee?' 6. Gautama went to the king, who received him with honour. In the morning, having received his share (of attention), he presented himself before the king, who said to him, 'Ask, o reverend Gautama, a present of human riches.' He replied, 'To thee, o king, belongs wealth of that description. Declare to me the questions which thou proposedst to the youth.' 7. The king was perplexed and desired him to make a long stay: and said to him, 'As thou hast declared to me, o Gautama, that this knowledge has not formerly reached the Brāhmans (who lived) before thee, it has therefore been among all peoples a discipline inculcated by the Kshattriya class alone.' He then declared it to him.

"Viśvantara, the son of Sushadman, setting aside the Syāparṇas, was performing a sacrifice without their aid. Hearing of this the Syāparṇas came to the ceremony, and sat down within the sacrificial enclosure. Observing them, the king said, 'Remove these Syāparṇas, doers of evil deeds, and speakers of impure language,²²⁹ who have sat down within my sacrificial enclosure.' Saying, 'So be it,' they removed them. When they were being removed, they exclaimed, 'The Kaśyapas found champions in the Asitamṛigas who conquered for them from the Bhūtāvīras the soma-draught at the sacrifice which Janamejaya, the son of Parikshit, was performing without their (the Kaśyapas') aid. Who is the champion who will conquer for us this soma-draught?' 'I am your champion,' cried Rāma Mārgaveya. This Rāma was a learned man, belonging to the Syāparṇa race. When the Syāparṇas were moving away, he said, 'Do they, o king, remove from the sacrificial enclosure a man who possesses such knowledge [as I]?' 'How dost thou possess it, Brāhman?' asked the king. 28. (Rāma answered) "When the deities rejected Indra, who had killed Tvāshṭra,²³⁰ prostrated Vṛittra, given over the Yatis to the wolves, slain the Arurmāghas, and contradicted Bṛihaspati, then he (Indra) forfeited the soma-draught. In consequence of his forfeiture, the Kshāttṛa (Kshattriya) class lost it also. (But Indra recovered a share in the soma-draught, having stolen Tvashtri's soma.) Hence at present also the Kshatriyas are excluded from the soma-draught. Why do they remove from the sacrificial enclosure a man who knows that (other) draught which (properly belongs) to the Kshatriyas who are excluded from the soma-draught, and by which they are rendered prosperous? 'Dost thou, o Brāhman, know that draught?' asked the king. 'I know it,' answered Rāma. 'Declare it then to us,' rejoined the prince. 'I declare it to thee, o king,' said the other. 29. 'Of the three draughts they shall bring one, either soma, or curds, or water. If he (the priest, bring) the soma, that is the draught of the Brāhmans, and with it thou shalt satisfy the Brāhmans. One like a Brāhman shall be born in thy line, a receiver of gifts, a drinker (of soma), a seeker of food,²³¹ a rover at will.' Whenever the offence (of drinking the Brāhman's draught)²³² is chargeable to a Kshatriya, one like a Brāhman is born in his line, who in the second or third generation from him has the power of becoming a Brāhman, and likes to live as a Brāhman. Next, if (the priest bring) curds, that is the Vaiśya's draught; with it thou shalt satisfy the Vaiśyas. One like a Vaiśya shall be born in thy line, one who is tributary to another, who is to be used (lit. eaten) by another, and who may be oppressed at will. Whenever the offence (of consuming the Vaiśya's portion) is chargeable to a Kshatriya, one like a Vaiśya is born in his line, who in the second or third generation from him has the power of becoming a Vaiśya, and is desirous of living as a Vaiśya. Next, if (the priest bring) water, that is the Sūdra's draught; with it thou shalt satisfy the Sūdras. One like a Sūdra shall be born in thy line, the servant of another, who may be expelled and slain at pleasure. When the offence (of drinking the Sūdra's draught) is chargeable against a Kshatriya, one like a Sūdra is born in his line, who in the second or third generation from him has the power of becoming a Sūdra, and desires to live like a Sūdra. 30. 'These, o king, are the three draughts, which the Kshatriya when sacrificing should not desire. His own proper draught is as follows: Let him squeeze the descending branches

The continuation may be read in Dr. Haug's translation, pp. 486 ff. After the priest has given the king a deal of further information the result is told in par. 34, as follows :

Tam eram etam bhaksham prōvācha Rāmo Mārgaveyo Viśvantarāya Saushadmanāya | tasmīn ha urācha prokte "sahasram u ha brāhmaṇa tubhyaṁ dadmaḥ | saśyāparṇaḥ u me yajnaḥ" iti |

"This draught did Rāma Mārgaveya declare to Viśvantara the son of Sushadman. When it had been declared the king said, 'Brāhman, we give thee a thousand (cows): and my sacrifice (shall be performed) with (the aid of the) S'yāparṇas.'"

SECT. XVII.—Story of Matanga who tried in vain to raise himself to the position of a Brāhman.

The legend of Matanga, which is narrated in the Anuśāsana-parvan of the Mahābhārata, verses 1872 ff., is introduced by a question which Yudhishtira addresses to Bhishma, verse 1867: Kshattriyo yadi vā vaiśyaḥ śūdro vā rājasattama | brāhmaṇyam prāpnuyād yena tad me vyākhyātum arhasi | tapasū vā sumahatā karmaṇā vā śrutena vā | brāhmaṇyaṁ atha ched ichhet tad me brūhi samāsataḥ | Bhīṣmaḥ urācha | 1870. Brāhmaṇyaṁ tāta dushprāpyaṁ varṇaiḥ kshattrādibhis tṛibhiḥ | paraṁ hi sarva-bhūtānāṁ sthānam etad Yudhishtira | bahvīḥ tu saṁsaran yonīr jāyamānaḥ punaḥ punaḥ | paryāye tāta kasmīṁśchid brāhmaṇo nāma jāyate | "Explain to me the means—whether it be intense austere-fervour, or ceremonies, or Vedic learning—whereby a Kshatriya, a Vaiśya, or a Śūdra, if he desire it, can attain to the state of a Brāhman. Bhishma replies (1870), The state of a Brāhman is hard to be acquired by men of the other three classes, the Kshatriyas, etc.; for this Brāhmanhood is the highest rank among all living creatures. It is only after passing through numerous wombs, and being born again and again, that such a man, in some revolution of being, becomes a Brāhman." Bhishma proceeds to illustrate this principle by the case of Matanga, who was apparently the son of a Brāhman, was distinguished for his good qualities, and was esteemed to be himself of the same class as his father (verse 1873 : dvijāteḥ kasyachit tātā tulya-varṇaḥ sutas tv abhūt | Matango nāma nāmnā vai sarvairṣaṃ samudito guṇairṣaḥ |) He was, however, discovered to be of spurious birth in the following manner: He happened to be sent somewhere by his father to perform sacrifice, and was travelling in a car drawn by asses. On his way he repeatedly pierced on its nose with the goad the colt which was conveying him along with its mother. Feeling for the wound thus inflicted on her offspring, the she-ass said: "Be not distressed, my son, it is a Chanḍāla who is on the car. There is nothing dreadful in a Brāhman; he is declared to be kindly, a teacher who instructs all creatures: how then can he smite any one? This man of wicked disposition shows no pity to a tender colt, and thereby indicates his origin; for it is birth which determines the character" (verse 1876. Uvācha mā śuchaḥ puttra chaṇḍālas tv adhitishṭhati | brāhmaṇe dārūṇaṃ nāsti maitro brāhmaṇa uchyate | āchāryaḥ sarva-bhūtānāṃ śāstā kim praharishyati | ayaṃ tu pāpa-prakṛitir bāle na kurute dayāṃ | sva-yonim mūnayaty eṣha bhāro bhāvaṃ niyachhati |). Overhearing this colloquy, Matanga instantly got down from the car and besought the she-ass, whom he honoured with the epithet of "most intelligent," to tell him how she knew him to be a Chanḍāla and how his mother had been corrupted. The she-ass informs him that his mother when intoxicated had received the embraces of a low-born barber, and that he was the offspring of this connection and consequently no Brāhman (verse 1882. Brāhmanyāṃ vṛishalena tvam mat-tūyāṃ nūpitenā ha | jātās tvam asi chaṇḍālo brāhmanyāṃ tena te 'naśat |). On receiving this unwelcome revelation, Matanga returned home, and being questioned by his reputed father about the cause of his speedy reappearance, he told him what he had heard; and expressed his determination to enter on a course of austerities. He does so accordingly with such effect that he alarms the gods, and receives the offer of a boon from Indra. He asks for Brāhmanhood; but Indra tells him that he must perish if he continues to make that request, as the high position he seeks cannot be obtained by one born as a Chanḍāla (verse 1895). Matanga, however, continues his exercises for a hundred years, when Indra repeats his former determination, and supports it by reasons, explaining (1901 ff.) that a Chanḍāla can only become a Sūdra in a thousand births, a Sūdra a Vaiśya after a period thirty times as long, a Vaiśya a Rājanya after a period sixty times the length, a janya a Brāhman after a period of sixty times the duration, and so on, a Brāhman only becoming a Kāṇḍapriṣṭha, a Kāṇḍapriṣṭha a Japa, a Japa a Srotriya, after immense intervals. Indra therefore advises Matanga to choose some other boon. But the devotee is still dissatisfied with the god's decision, and renews his austerities for a thousand years. At the end of that period he receives still the same answer, and the same advice. But though distressed he did not yet despair; but proceeded to balance himself on his great toe; which, although reduced to skin and bone, he succeeded in doing for a hundred years without falling. At length, when he was on the point of tumbling, Indra ran up and supported him; but continued inexorably to refuse his request; and though further importuned, would only consent to give him the power of moving about like a bird, and changing his shape at will, and of being honoured and renowned (verses 1934 ff.).

The assertion here made of the impossibility of a Kshattriya becoming a Brāhman until he has passed through a long series of births is of course in flagrant contradiction with the stories of Viśvāmītra, Vītahavya, and others.

Matanga (or a Matanga) is mentioned in a passage already quoted in p. 411 as a rājarshi who supported Viśvāmītra's family and for whom that sage sacrificed. He is also named in the Sabhā-parvan, verse 340, as sitting in Yama's assembly along with Agastya, Kāla, and Mṛityu, etc., etc.; in the Vana-parvan, 8079, as a great rishi (maharshi); and in the Sānti-parvan, 10875, as one of certain sages who had acquired their position by austerities (see above, p. 132). His disciples, he himself, and his forest are mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa, iii. 73, 23, 29, 30.

As Paraśurāma belonged to the race of the Bhṛigus, it may be advisable to premise some particulars regarding that family.

In his Lexicon, s.v., Professor Roth tells us that the Bhṛigus were a class of mythical beings, who, according to the Nirukta, xi. 19, belonged to the middle or aërial class of gods ("mādhyamiko deva-gaṇaḥ" iti Nairuktāḥ). They were the discoverers of fire and brought it to men,

(R. V. x. 46, 2, etc.)²³³ He adds, however, that this race has also a connection with history, as one of the chief Brahmanical families bears this name, and allusions are made to this fact even in the hymns of the Rig-veda (vii. 18, 6; viii. 3, 9, 16; viii. 6, 18; viii. 91, 4). Bhṛigu is also, as Prof. Roth observes, the name of a rishi representing a family, who is mentioned in Atharva-veda, v. 19, 1, as suffering injury at the hands of the Sṛinjayas (see above, p. 286). As regards his birth, it is said in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 34, that first the Sun, and then Bhṛigu arose out of the seed which had issued from Prajāpati,²³⁴ that Bhṛigu was adopted by Varuṇa, and was consequently called Vāruṇi, etc. (Tasya yad retasaḥ prathamam udadīpyata tad asāv ādityo 'bhavat | yad dvitīyam āsīt tad Bhṛigur abhavat | taṁ Varuṇo nyagrihṇīta | tasmāt sa Bhṛigur Vāruṇiḥ). He is accordingly called by this name in the S. P. Br. xi. 6, 1, 1, where he is said to have conceived himself to be superior in knowledge to his father Varuṇa (Bhṛigur ha vai Vāruṇir Varuṇam pitaram vidyayā 'timene); and also in the Taittiriya Upaniṣad (Bibl. Ind. p. 123: Bhṛigur vai Vāruṇir Varuṇaṁ pitaram upasāsāra).²³⁵ The preceding story of Bhṛigu's birth is developed and modified in the Anuśāsana-parvan of the Mahābhārata, verse 4104 ff.: Vaśiṣṭhaḥ uvācha | api chedam purā Rāma śrutam me Brahma-darśanam | Pitāmahasya yad vṛttam Brahmanāḥ paramātmanāḥ | devasya mahatas tāta Vāruṇim bibhratas tanum | aiśvarye vāruṇe Rāma Rudrasyeśasya vai prabhoḥ | "Vaśiṣṭha said, 4104: I have also heard, o Rāma (i.e. Paraśurāma), of this vision of Brahmā, of that which occurred regarding Pitāmaha, Brahma, the supreme spirit, the great god (i.e. Mahādeva), Rudra, Īśa, the lord, assuming the body of Varuṇa, and invested with the dominion of Varuṇa." After this singular description of Mahādeva as identified with Brahmā, Brahma the supreme spirit, and Varuṇa, the speaker goes on to tell us that the munis, the gods headed by Agni, the embodied portions of the sacrifice, and the Vedas, etc., assembled on the occasion referred to, and then proceeds, verse 4112: Esha Brahmā Sivo Rudro Varuṇo 'gniḥ Prajāpatiḥ | kīrttyate bhagavān devaḥ sarva-bhūta-patiḥ śivaḥ | tasya yajnaḥ

 "4112. This adorable and gracious god, lord of all creatures, is known as Brahmā, Śiva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, Prajāpati. This Paśupati (had) a sacrifice.²²⁶ Austere-fervour, Oblations, Consecration, (Dīkshā) that goddess with brilliant rites, the Points of the compass, their regents, the wives, daughters and mothers of the gods came all together with joy (4115) to this sacrifice of Paśupati the great Varuṇa. When Svayambhū (Brahmā) saw these goddesses his seed fell to the ground.
 Pūshan in consequence collected the particles of dust which were thus moistened, and threw them into the fire. When the sacrifice with its blazing fires had begun, there was seen an apparition of Brahmā offering an oblation. Collecting with the sacrificial ladle that which had fallen,* ²²⁶ Such seems to be the construction of this line.

he cast it, like butter, with sacred texts, into the fire. And thence the powerful god generated all beings. . . . 4121. When the seed had been cast into the fire, there arose three men endowed with bodies, and with their own respective qualities derived from their generation. Bhṛigu sprang first from bhṛik (the blazing of the fire), Angiras from the cinders, and Kavi²³⁷ from a heap of cinders. Bhṛigu was so named because he was produced together with flames." The god, called Mahādeva, Varuṇa, and Pavana, claimed these three men as his own, and the fruit of his sacrifice (verse 4133 f.). Agni and Brahmā also claimed them (4135 f.). The other gods, however, entreated Brahmā to accede to the wishes of Agni and Varuṇa: "4140. 'And let Varuṇa, the lord, the god, also receive the object of his desire.' By the gift of Brahmā, Varuṇa, lord of sea-monsters, first received for his offspring Bhṛigu brilliant as the sun. And Īśvara (Mahādeva) appointed Angiras to be Agni's son. And Pitāmaha, who knows the reality of things took Kavi as his offspring. Then Bhṛigu, the progenitor of creatures, was named the son of Varuṇa, Angiras the son of Agni, and the glorious Kavi the son of Brahmā. The Bhārgava and the Āngirasa are distinguished in the world as the propagators of mankind. For all these three lords of creatures were propagators. Know the whole of this world to be their offspring. Bhṛigu had seven sons, all equal to their father in good qualities, Chyavana, Vajraśirsha, Suchi, Aurva, Sukra, Varen̄ya, Vibhu, and Savana. These were all Bhārgavas, and Vāruṇas, to whose race you (Paraśurāma) yourself also belong."

In another passage of the M. Bh. Ādip. 869, it is similarly said. Bhṛigur maharshir bhagavān Brahmanū vai Svayambhuvā | Varuṇasy kratau jātāḥ pāvakād iti naḥ śrutam | "We have heard that the great and venerable rishi Bhṛigu was produced by Brahmā from fire at the sacrifice of Varuṇa."

The Nirukta, iii. 17, has the following etymology of Bhṛigu: Archishī Bhṛiguḥ sambabhūva | Bhṛigur bhṛijyamāno na dehe | "Bhṛigu was produced in the flame; though roasted, he was not consumed."

The Taitt. Br. Ī. 8, 2, 5, has a different account: Indrasya sushuvānasya tredhā indryam vīryam parūpatat | Bhṛigus tṛitīyam abhavat ²³⁷ In the M. Bh. Ādip. v. 2606, Kavi is said to be Bhṛigu's son (Bhṛigoḥ puttra Kavir vidvān Sukrah). On the other hand he, or another person of the same name is said in the Anusāsana-p. 4150, to be, along with Kavi, a son of Kavi.

"While Indra was continuing to pour out Soma, his manly vigour fell in three portions. The third became Bhṛigu." Indra's Soma

Bhṛigu is declared in the Vishṇu P. (see above, p. 65) to have been one of the nine Brāhmās, mental sons of Brāhmā. The Bhāg. P. iii. 12, 23, says he sprang from the skin of the creator (Bhṛigus tvachi). The M. Bh. Ādip. 2605, on the contrary declares: Brahmaṇo hṛidayam bhit-trā nissṛito bhagavān Bhṛiguḥ | "The venerable Bhṛigu, having split Brāhmā's heart, issued forth" (Weber, Ind. St. ii. 231). So, too, the Vāyu P. i. 9, 100: Bhṛigus tu hṛidayāj jāyate rishih Salilajanmanah | "Bhṛigu was produced from the heart of the Water-born (Brāhmā);" and adds, verse 103: Ity ete mānasāḥ puttrāḥ vijneyāḥ Brahmanah sutāḥ | Bhṛigu-ūdayas tu ye śriṣṭāḥ navaita brahma-rādinah | 104. Gṛihamedhinaḥ purāṇas dharmas taiḥ prāk pravarttitah | "These were the mind-born sons of Brāhmā. Bhṛigu, and the others, nine in all, who were created, were declarers of sacred knowledge and ancient householders; by them was duty of old established." Manu mentions Bhṛigu (i. 35, see above, p. 36) as one of his own ten sons. He also speaks of him (i. 59, 60, above, p. 38) as commissioned by himself (Manu) to promulgate his code. In Manu, v. 1. however, the sage is said to have sprung from fire (idam ūchur mahātmanam anala-prabhavam Bhṛigum). As, however, he had been previously declared to be one of Manu's ten sons, and is so called also in the third verse of book v. and the second of book vii., where he is styled Mānava Bhṛiguḥ, Kullūka thinks it necessary to explain this other alleged descent from fire by saying that that had been the sage's origin in a previous mundane era (Kalpa): Yadyapi prathamādhyāye daśa-prajāpati-madhye "Bhṛiguṁ Nāradam eva cha" iti Bhṛigu-śriṣṭir api Manuḥ eva uktā tathāpi kalpa-bhedena agni-prabhavatvam uchyaṭe | tathā cha śrutiḥ "tasya yad retasāḥ prathamam dedīpyate tad asāv ūdityo 'bhavat | yad dvitīyam āsīt Bhṛigur" iti | atah eva bhrashṭād retasāḥ utpannatvād Bhṛiguḥ | "Though the creation of Bhṛigu, as one of the ten Prajāpātis, is declared, in the 35th verse of the first book, to have proceeded from Manu, still he is here said to have been produced from fire, from the difference in the manner of his birth in the different Kalpas. And so the Veda says (in the passage quoted above from the Ait. Br.). Hence he is called Bhṛigu, because he sprang from the seed which fell (bhrashṭāt).²³⁸

²³⁸ See Prof. Wilson's note, Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i. p. 100 ff., in the course of Professor Roth (Lit. and History of the Veda, p. 135) says: "The Bhrigus are one of the most important Vedic families, to which Jamadagni, Chyavana, Aurva, Apnavāna, and other rishis are assigned. Many conjectures might be formed in connection with the part which these several Bhrigus play in the later legends; but it seems to me unsafe to draw any conclusions till we are in possession of the intermediate links, and especially till we have learnt more precisely from the Vedic hymns themselves the relations of these families to each other. Nevertheless I will remark that Sunahśepha, the adopted son of Viśvāmītra, is, according to the Purāṇas, a Bhrigu; and consequently the Bhrigus appear in intimate connection with the enemy of Vasishṭha; and further, that Sagara, who was reared by the Bhrigu Aurva, is restrained by Vasishṭha in his war of extermination against the Sakas and other barbarous tribes. His enemies, when hard pressed, had resorted to Vasishṭha as an intercessor." (See above, p. 337, and Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. iii. p. 291.)

The story of Paraśurāma and the Kshattriyas is briefly mentioned in the second section of the Ādiparvan of the Mahābhārata (verses 272–280), where the events referred to are said to have occurred in the interval between the Tretā and Dvāpara ages (Tretā-dvāparayoḥ sandhau Rāmaḥ śāstra-bhritām varaḥ | asakṛit pāṛthivām kshattrām jaghānāmarsha-choditaḥ | sa sarvaṁ kshattram utsādyā sva-vīryeṇānala-dyutiḥ |). The history is more fully told in other parts of the Mahābhārata. In the 178th–180th sections of the Ādiparvan there is a legend in which no mention is made of Paraśurāma, or the slaughter of the Kshattriyas; but in which we have the following particulars: Parāśara was son of Saktri, and grandson of Vaśishṭha, as we have seen above, p. 417. When he heard of the way in which his father had met his death, he determined to execute a general slaughter of all creatures (v. 6800);²³⁹ but his grandfather restrained him by narrating the history of the

which he says, "The Vāyu has also another account of their (the Prajāpatīs) origin, and states them to have sprung from the fires of a sacrifice offered by Brahmā; an allegorical mode of expressing their probable original—considering them to be in some degree real persons—from the Brahmanical ritual, of which they were the first institutors and observers."

Bhrigus and Kshattriyas, as follows: There was a king named Krita-vīrya, by whose liberality the Bhrigus, learned in the Vedas, who officiated as his priests, had been greatly enriched with corn and money (verse 6802. Yājño veda-vidām loke Bhrigūnām pārthivarsha-bhaḥ | sa tām agra-bhujas tāta dhūnyena cha dhanena cha | somānte tarpayāmāsa vipulena viśāmpate 1). After he had gone to heaven, his descendants were in want of money, and came to beg for a supply from the Bhrigus, of whose wealth they were aware. Some of the latter hid their money under ground, others bestowed it on Brāhmans, being afraid of the Kshattriyas, while others again gave these last what they wanted. It happened, however, that a Kshattriya, while digging the ground, discovered some money buried in the house of a Bhrigu. The Kshattriyas then assembled and saw this treasure, and, being incensed, slew in consequence all the Bhrigus, whom they regarded with contempt, down to the children in the womb (verse 6809. Avamānya tataḥ krodhād Bhrigūns tām śaraṇāgatām | nijaghnūḥ parameshvāsāḥ sarvāms tām niśitaiḥ śaraiḥ | ā-garbhād avakṛintantaś cheruḥ sarvām vasundhārām 2). The widows, however, fled to the Himālaya mountains. One of them concealed her unborn child in her thigh. The Kshattriyas, hearing of its existence from a Brāhmaṇī informant, sought to kill it; but it issued forth from its mother's thigh with lustre, and blinded the persecutors. After wandering about bewildered among the mountains for a time, they humbly supplicated the mother of the child for the restoration of their sight; but she referred them to her wonderful infant Aurva into whom the whole Veda, with its six Vedāṅgas, had entered (verse 6823. Shad-angas chākhilo vedaḥ imaṁ garbhastham eva ha | viveśa Bhrigu-vaṁśasya bhūyah priya-chikīrshayā 3), as the person who (in retaliation of the slaughter of his relatives) had robbed them of their eyesight, and who alone could restore it. They accordingly had recourse to him, and their eyesight was restored. Aurva, however, meditated the destruction of all living creatures, in revenge for the slaughter of the Bhrigus, and entered on a course of austerities which alarmed both gods, asuras, and men; but his progenitors (Pitris) themselves appeared, and sought to turn him from his purpose by saying that they had no desire to be revenged on the Kshattriyas: 6834. Nāniśair hi tadā tāta Bhrigubhir bhāvitātmabhiḥ | badho hy upekṣitāḥ sarvaiḥ kshattriyāṇām vihiṁsatām | āyushā viprakṛiṣṭena yadā nah

*kheda āviśat | tadā 'smābhir badhas tāta kshattriyaair īpsitah svayam |
nikhātāṃ yach cha vai vittaṃ kenachid Bhṛigu-vesmani | vairāyaiva tadā nyastāṃ kshattriyaṇ kopayishṇubhiḥ | kiṃ hi vittaṇa naḥ kāryyaṃ svor-gepsūnāṃ dvijottama | . . . 6841. Mā badhiḥ kshattriyaṃs tāta na
lokān sapta puttraka | dūshayantaṃ tapas-tejaḥ krodham utpatitaṃ jahi |* “6834. It was not from weakness that the devout Bhṛigus overlooked the massacre perpetrated by the murderous Kshattriya. When we became distressed by old age, we ourselves desired to be slaughtered by them. The money which was buried by some one in a Bhṛigu's house was placed there for the purpose of exciting hatred, by those who wished to provoke the Kshattriya. For what had we, who were desiring heaven, to do with money?” They add that they hit upon this device because they did not wish to be guilty of suicide, and concluded by calling upon Aurva to restrain his wrath; and abstain from the sin he was meditating, verse 6841: “Destroy not the Kshattriya, o son, nor the seven worlds. Suppress thy kindled anger which nullifies the power of austere-fervour.” Aurva, however, replies that he cannot allow his threat to remain unexecuted. His anger, unless wreaked upon some other object, will, he says, consume himself. And he argues on grounds of justice, expediency, and duty, against the clemency which his progenitors recommend. He is, however, persuaded by the Pitṛis to throw the fire of his anger into the sea, where they say it will find exercise in assailing the watery element, and in this way his threat will be fulfilled. “It accordingly became the great Hayaśiras, known to those who are acquainted with the Veda, which vomits forth that fire and drinks up the waters” (Mahad Hayaśiro bhūtā yat tad vedavido viduḥ | tam agnim udgirad vaktrāt pibaty āpo mahodadhau). It is worthy of remark that in a legend, one object of which, at least, would seem to be to hold up to abhorrence the impiety of the Kshattriya in oppressing the Brāhmins, we should thus find a palliation of the conduct of the oppressors, coming from the other world. But here the principle of the nothingness of mundane existence asserts itself; and the final superiority of the Brāhmins is vindicated, while their magnanimity is exemplified.

The next version of this legend, which I shall quote, is that given in the 115th-117th sections of the Vanaparvan. Arjuna, son of Kṛiṣṇavīrya, and king of the Haihāyas, had, we are told, a thousand arms.

He obtained from Dattātreyā an aerial car of gold, the march of which was irresistible. He thus trod down gods, Yākshas, rishis, and oppressed all creatures (10137. Atyāhata-gatis chaiva rathas tasya mahāt-manaḥ | rathena tena tu tadā vara-dānena vīryavān | mamardda devān yakshāṁś cha rishīṁś chaiva samantataḥ | bhūtāṁś chaiva sa sarvāṁś tu pīḍayāmāsa sarvataḥ |). The gods and rishis applied to Viṣṇu, and he along with Indra, who had been insulted by Arjuna, devised the means of destroying the latter. At this time, the story goes on, there lived a king of Kānyakubja, called Gādhi, who had a daughter named Satyavatī. The marriage of this princess to the rishi Ṛichika, and the birth of Jamadagni, are then told in nearly the same way as above narrated in page 350. Jamadagni and Satyavatī had five sons, the youngest of whom was the redoubtable Paraśurāma. By his father's command he kills his mother (who, by the indulgence of impure desire, had fallen from her previous sanctity), after the four elder sons had refused this matricidal office, and had in consequence been deprived of reason by their father's curse. At Paraśurāma's desire, however, his mother is restored by his father to life, and his brothers to reason; and he himself is absolved from all the guilt of murder; and obtains the boon of invincibility and long life from his father. His history now begins to be connected with that of king Arjuna (or Kārtavīrya). The latter had come to Jamadagni's hermitage, and had been respectfully received by his wife; but he had requited this honour by carrying away by force the calf of the sage's sacrificial cow, and breaking down his lofty trees. On being informed of this violence, Paraśurāma was filled with indignation, attacked Arjuna, cut off his thousand arms, and slew him. Arjuna's sons, in return, slew the peaceful sage Jamadagni, in the absence of Paraśurāma. The narrative thus proceeds:

“Rāma, after performing, on his return, his father's funeral obsequies, vowed to destroy the whole Kshattriya race; and executed his threat by killing first Arjuna's sons and their followers. Twenty-one times did he sweep away all the Kshattriyas from the earth, and formed five lakes of blood in Samantapanchaka; (10,205) in which he satiated the manes of the Bhṛigus, and beheld face to face (his grand-father) Rīchīka, who addressed himself to Rāma. The latter gratified Indra by offering to him a grand sacrifice, and gave the earth to the officiating priests. He bestowed also a golden altar, ten fathoms long and nine high, on the mighty Kaśyapa. This, by his permission, the Brāhmans divided among themselves, deriving thence the name of Khāṇḍavāyanas. Having given away the earth to Kaśyapa, Paraśu-rāma himself dwells on the mountain Mahendra. Thus did enmity arise between him and the Kshattriyas, and thus was the earth conquered by Rāma of boundless might.”

The means by which the Kshattriya race was restored are described in the following passage from the Ādiparvan, verses 2459 ff.:

“2459. Having one and twenty times swept away all the Kshattriyas from the earth, the son of Jamadagni engaged in austerities on Mahendra the most excellent of mountains. 2460. After he had cleared the world of Kshatriyas, their widows came to the Brāhmanas, praying for offspring. The religious Brāhmanas, free from any impulse of lust, cohabited at the proper seasons with these women, who in consequence became pregnant, and brought forth valiant Kshatriya boys and girls, to continue the Kshatriya stock. Thus was the Kshatriya race virtuously begotten by Brāhmanas on Kshatriya women, and became multiplied and long-lived. Thence there arose four castes inferior to the Brāhmanas."

This restoration of the Kshatriyas and their rule is said to have been followed by a state of great virtue, happiness, and prosperity. As one exemplification of the religious perfection which prevailed, it is said that "the Brāhmanas did not sell their sacred lore, nor recite the Vedas in the vicinity of Sūdras" (verse 2474. Na cha vikrīṇate brahma brāhmaṇās cha tadā nriṇa | na cha śūdra-samābhyāse vedān uchchārayanty uta {}).

Another version of this legend is given in the Śāntiparvan, section 49. The birth of Jamadagni as the son of Rīchika and Satyavati is related very much as in the Vishṇu Purāṇa (see above, p. 349 f.); but Rīchika tells his wife that the whole of her father's race shall become Brāhmanical (verse 1741. Brahma-bhūtaṁ ki sakalam pituṣ tava kulam bhavet); and of Viśvāmitra, the son of Gādhi, we are told that he "had the character of a Brāhman, and was possessed of all Brahmanical qualities" (1745. Viśvāmitraṁ cha dāyādāṁ Gādhiḥ Kuśika-nandanah | yam prāpa brahma-samitaṁ viśvair brahma-guṇair yutam {}). Jamadagni was father of the dreadful Paraśurāma, "who became perfect in science, thoroughly versed in archery, and the slayer of the Kshatriyas, himself violent as flaming fire. By propitiating Mahādeva he obtained, among other weapons, the irresistible axe (paraśu)" (1747. Sarva-vidyānta-gaṁ śreṣṭhaṁ dhanur-vedasya pāragam | Rāmaṁ kshatriya-hantāram pradāptam iva pāvakam | toshayitvā Mahādevam parvate Gandhamādane | astrāṅi varayāmāsa paraśum chātitejasam {}), from which his name is derived. Arjuna, son of Kṛitavīrya, king of the Haihayas, is here also represented as having a thousand arms, but in opposition to the previous account he is described as a "pious and religious monarch, who at an asvamedha (horse-sacrifice) beset the Brāhmanas the earth with its seven continents and mountains, which he had conquered by his arms and weapons" (verse 1751. Chakravartī mahātejā viprāṇām āsvamedhike | dadau sa prithivīm sarvām sapta-dvīpām sa-parvatām | svabāhv-astra-balenājau jītvā parama-dharma-vit |). He had, however, at the solicitation of Agni permitted that voracious deity to consume his towns, villages, forests, etc.; and as the hermitage of Āpava (Vasishṭha) had been destroyed in the conflagration, Arjuna was doomed by the sage's curse to have his arms cut off by Paraśurāma. The story proceeds:

"Being of a meek, pious, kind, and charitable turn of mind, the valiant Arjuna thought nothing of the curse; but his sons, who were of an arrogant and barbarous disposition, became the cause of its resulting in his death. Without their father's knowledge they took away Jamadagni's calf; and in consequence Paraśurāma attacked Arjuna and cut off his arms." His sons retaliated by killing Juma-dagni. 1766. Paraśurāma incensed at the slaughter of his father, having vowed in consequence to sweep away all Kshattriyas from the earth, seized his weapons; and slaying all the sons and grandsons of Arjuna, with thousands of the Haihayas, he turned the earth into a mass of ensanguined mud. 1770. Having thus cleared the earth of

Kshattriyas, he became penetrated by deep compassion and retired to the forest. After some thousands of years had elapsed, the hero, naturally irascible, was taunted by Parāvasu, the son of Raibhya and grandson of Viśvāmītra, in a public assembly in these words: 'Are not these virtuous men, Pratardana and the others, who are assembled at the sacrifice in the city of Yayāti,—are they not Kshattriyas? Thou hast failed to execute thy threat, and vainly boastest in the assembly. Thou hast withdrawn to the mountain from fear of those valiant Kshattriyas, while the earth has again become overrun by hundreds of their race.' Hearing these words, Rāma seized his weapons. The hundreds of Kshattriyas who had before been spared had now grown powerful kings. These, however, Paraśurāma now slew with their children, and all the numerous infants then unborn as they came into the world. Some, however, were preserved by their mothers. Having twenty-one times cleared the earth of Kshattriyas, Rāma gave her as a sacrificial fee to Kaśyapa at the conclusion of an aśvamedha. 1780. Making a signal with his hand, in which he held the sacrificial ladle, Kaśyapa, in order that the remaining Kshattriyas should be spared, said to Paraśurāma, 'Go, great muni, to the shore of the southern ocean. Thou must not dwell in my territory.' Sāgara (the ocean) created for him a country called Sūrpāraka on the remotest verge of the earth. Having received dominion over the earth, Kaśyapa made it an abode of Brāhmanas, and himself withdrew to the forest. Sūdras and Vaiśyas then began to act lawlessly towards the wives of the Brāhmanas; and, in consequence of there being no government, the weak (1785) were oppressed by the strong, and no one was master of any property. The Earth, being distressed by the wicked, in consequence of that disorder, and unprotected according to rule by the Kshattriyas, the guardians of justice, descended to the lower regions. Perceiving her moving from place to place in terror, Kaśyapa upheld her with his thigh (ūru). From this circumstance she derives her name of urvī.²⁴⁰ The goddess Earth then propitiated Kaśyapa, and supplicated him for protection, and for a king. 'I have,' she said, 'preserved among females many Kshattriyas who have been born in the race of the Haihayas; let them be my protectors. There is the heir of the Pauravas, the son of Vidūratha, who has been brought up by bears on the mountain Rikshavat: let him protect me. So, too, the heir of Saudāsa has been preserved by the tender-hearted and glorious priest, Parāśara, who has performed, though a Brāhman, all menial offices (sarvakarmāṇi) for him, like a Sūdra;—whence the prince's name Sarvakarman." After enumerating other kings who had been rescued, the Earth proceeds: "All these Kshatriyas' descendants have been preserved in different places, abiding continually among the classes of dyokāras and goldsmiths. If they protect me, I shall continue unshaken. Their fathers and grandfathers were slain on my account by Rāma, energetic in action. It is incumbent on me to avenge their cause. For I do not desire to be always protected by an extraordinary person [such as Kaśyapa]; but I will be content with an ordinary ruler. Let this be speedily fulfilled.' Kaśyapa then sent for these Kshatriyas who had been pointed out by the Earth, and installed them in the kingly office."

This reference to the bestowal of the Earth upon Kaśyapa is founded on an older story which occurs both in the Aitareya and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas. The passage in the first-named work is as follows, viii. 21. Etena ha vai Aindreṇa mahābhishekeṇa Kaśyapo Viśvakarmānam Bhauvanam abhishishecha | tasmād u Viśvakarmā Bhauvanah samantaṁ sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan pariyāya āsvena cha madhyena ije | bhūmir ha jagāv ity udāharanti "na mā marttyaḥ kaśchana dātum arhati Viśvakarman Bhauvana mām didāsitha | nimankshye 'haṁ salilasya madhye moghas te esha Kaśyapūyāsa sangaraḥ" iti | "With this great inauguration like that of Indra did Kaśyapa consecrate Viśvakarman Bhauvana, who in consequence went round the Earth in all directions, conquering it; and offered an āsvamedha sacrifice. They relate that the Earth then recited this verse:

"Me may no mortal give away; but thou, oh king, dost so essay; Deep will I plunge beneath the main; thy pledge to Kaśyapa is vain."

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 7, 1. 15, says: Taṁ ha Kaśyapo yā-jayāṇchakāra | tad api bhūmiḥ slokaṁ jagau "na mā marttyaḥ kaśchana dātum arhati Viśvakarman Bhauvana mandaḥ āsitha | upamankshyati syā salilasya madhye mṛishaisha te sangaraḥ Kaśyapūya" iti | "Kaśyapa officiated for him at this sacrifice. Wherefore also the Earth recited this verse: 'No mortal may give me away. Viśvakarman, son of Bhauvana, thou wast foolish (in offering to do so). She will sink into the midst of the waters. Thy promise to Kaśyapa is vain.”²⁴¹

The story is also related in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa in a similar way. I note the chief points and variations. When Gādhi's daughter was demanded in marriage by the rishi Richika, the king considered that the suitor was not a fit husband for a daughter of his noble race; and said, “Give me a thousand horses white as the moon, each with one black ear, as a marriage gift for the maiden; for we are Kuśikas” (ix. 15, 5. Varaṁ visadrīṣam matvā Gādhir Bhūrgavam abravīt | 6. Ekataḥ śyāma-karṇā-nām hayānām chandra-varchasām | sahasraṁ diyatām śulkaṁ kanyāyāḥ Kuśikāḥ vayam |). The youngest offspring of their union was, we are told, “Paraśurāma, who is declared to have been a portion of Vāsudeva (Viṣṇu in the form of Kriṣṇa),²⁴² and who exterminated the Haihaya race. Thrice seven times he swept away from this earth all the Kshatriyas, that depraved and impious race, full of passion and darkness, with which she was burthened. He destroyed them, though the offence which they had committed was but insignificant (v. 14. Yam āhur Vāsudevāmśam Haihayānaṁ kulāntakam | trissaptakṛto yaḥ imām cakre niḥkshattriyaṁ mahīm | duṣṭāṁ kshattram bhuvō bhāram abrahmanyam anīnaśat | rajas-tamo-vṛitam ahan phalguny api kṛite 'mhasi |). King Arjuna, who had been endowed with miraculous powers, took Rāvana prisoner, then released him, and afterwards carried away by force Jamadagni's cow and calf. Paraśurāma, in revenge, after a terrible battle, and the defeat of the king's army, cut off Arjuna's arms and head, and recovered the cow and calf. When his father was informed of the king's death, he said to Paraśurāma: “Rāma, Rāma, thou hast committed sin, in that thou hast causelessly slain the lord of men, who is composed of all the deities.²⁴³ It is by longsuffering that we, the Brāhmans, have acquired respect; the same means whereby the deity, the instructor of all worlds, attained the highest rank of godhead. By patience the fortune of Brahmā shines like the splendour of the Sun. Hari, the lord, is speedily pleased with those who are patient. The murder of a king who has been formally inaugurated is worse than that of a Brāhman. Go and expiate thy sin by visiting holy places, with thy mind intent upon Achyuta (Vishṇu)" (ix. 15, 38. *Rāma Rāma mahābhāga bhavān pāpam akārashīt*²⁴¹ | abadhīd nara-devaṁ yat sarva-devamayaṁ vṛithā | vayaṁ hi brāhmaṇās tāta kshamayā 'rhanatām gatāḥ | yayā loka-gurur devaḥ pārameshṭhyam ayāt padam | kshamayā rochate lakshmīr Brāhmī saurī yathā prabhā | kshaminām āśu bhagavāms tushyate Harir īśvaraḥ | rājno mūrdhābhishiktasya badho brahma-badhād guruḥ | tīrtha-saṁsevayā chāmho jahy angūchyuta-chetanaḥ |). On his return from this pilgrimage Rāma was desired by his father to kill his mother (on grounds similar to those stated in the account quoted above, p. 450, from the Mahābhārata), as well as his brothers, and executed the order; but at his intercession they were all restored to life. During his absence in the forest, his father Jamadagni was slain, and his head cut off, notwithstanding the entreaties of his wife, by the sons of Arjuna, in revenge for the loss of their own father. Paraśurāma, hearing his mother's outcries, hastened back to the hermitage, and laying hold of his axe, proceeded to avenge this outrage: ix. 16, 17. Gatvā Māhishmatīm Rāmo brahma-ghna-vihata-śriyam | teshām sa śīrshabhiḥ rājan madhye chakre mahūgirim | 18. Tad-raktena nadīm ghorām abrahmanya-bhayāvaham | hetuṁ kṛtvā pitṛi-badhaṁ kshatṛe 'mangalakūriṇi | . . . 20. Pituh kāyena sandhūya śīraḥ ādāya barkishi | sarva-devamayaṁ devam ātmānam ayajad makhaiḥ | 21. Dadau prāchīm diśaṁ hotre brahmaṇe dakṣiṇām diśam | adhvaryave pratichīm vai udgātre uttarām diśam | 22. Anyebhyo 'vāntara-diśaḥ Kāśyapūya cha madhyataḥ | āryāvarttam upadrashṭre sadasyebhyas tataḥ param | 23. Tataś chāvabhṛitha-enūna-vidhūtāsēsha-kilvishaḥ | Sarasvatyām brahma-nadyām reje vyabhṛaḥ ivāṁsumān | . . . 26. Āste 'dyūpi Mahendrādrau nyastadandāḥ prasūntadhīḥ | upagīyamūna-charitāḥ siddha-gandharva-chāranaiḥ | 27. Evam Bhṛiguśhu viśvātmā bhagavān Harir īśvaraḥ | avatīrya param bhāraṁ bhuvo 'han bahuśo nṛpān | "17. He went to the city of Māhishmatī, which had been robbed of its glory by those Brāhman-slayers, and raised in the midst of it a great mountain composed of their heads. With their blood he formed a dreadful river, which struck fear into the impious; justifying his action against the oppressive Kshatriyas by their murder of his father. . . . 20. He then united his father's head to his body, laying it on the sacred grass; and offered a sacrifice to the divine Spirit, who is formed of all the deities. On this occasion he gave the eastern region of the earth to the hotṛi priest, the south to the brahman, the west to the adhvaryu, and the north to the udgāṭri. To others he gave the intermediate regions (south-east, south-west, etc.), to Kaśyapa the central; on the upadrashṭṛi he bestowed Āryāvartta, and on the Sadasyas what was beyond. Having then cleansed all his impurity by the avabhṛitha ablution in the Sarasvatī, the river of Brahmā, he shone like the sun unobscured by clouds. . . . 26. Having laid aside his weapons, he sits to this day in tranquillity of mind on the mountain Mahendra, whilst his exploits are celebrated by the Siddhas, Gandharvas, and Chāranas. Thus did the universal Spirit, the divine lord, Hari, become incarnate in the Bhṛigus, and destroy numerous kings who were a burden to the earth." It is singular that sin requiring expiation should be, as it is in this narrative, imputed to Paraśurāma, while he is at the same time declared to have been a portion of Viṣṇu, the supreme Spirit.

The story of Paraśurāma is also told in the Dronaparvan of the Mahābhārata, verses 2427 ff., after those of many other kings and warriors, to illustrate the truth that death must sooner or later overtake even the most pious and distinguished personages. The earlier incidents are briefly narrated; but some of the details, as the slaughter of the Kshatriyas, are dwelt on at greater length than in the other accounts. Some of the victims of the hero's vengeance are described as "haters of Brāhmanas" (brahma-dvishām, verse 2431). The Kshatriyas who were slain are described as of various provinces, viz. Kāśmīras, Daradas, Kuntis, Kshudrakas, Mālavas, Angas, Vangas, Kalingas, Videhas, Tāmraliptakas, Rakshovāhas, Vitihoṭras, Trigarttas, Mārttikāvatas, Sivas, and other Rājanyas (S'ivān anyāṃś cha rājanyān, verse 2437). At verse 2443 the narrative proceeds: Nirdasyum pṛithivīm kṛtvā śiṣṭeṣṭa-jana-sankulām | Kaśyapāya dadau Rāmo haya-medhe mahāmakhe | trisapta-vārān pṛithivīm kṛtvā nīkshatṛiyām prabhuḥ | iṣṭvā kratu-satair viro brāhmaṇa-bhyo hy amanyata | sapta-dvīpām vasumatim Mūrīcho 'grihṇata dvijaḥ | Rāmam procvācha "nirgachha vasudhūto mamājñayā | sa Kaśyapasya

Having twenty-one times cleared the earth of Kshattriya, and offered hundreds of sacrifices, he destined the earth for the Brāhmans. The Brāhman, the son of Marīchi (i.e. Kaśyapa), received the earth, and then said to Rāma, ‘Depart out of her by my command.’ Having repelled the ocean by his arrows, and established the rule of the Brāhmans, Rāma dwelt on the mountain Mahendra.”

The Anuśāsanaparvan of the same poem has another “ancient story” about Paraśurāma, which, like the preceding passage from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, adverts to the pollution incurred by that warrior from his numerous deeds of blood. It begins as follows: verse 3960. *Jāmad-

Rāma, son of Jamadagni, having thrice seven times cleared the world of Kshattriya, and conquered the whole earth, performed the horse-sacrifice, venerated by Brāhmans and Kshattriya, which confers all objects of desire, which cleanses all creatures, and augments power and lustre; and became thereby sinless and glorious. He did not, however, feel relieved in his mind, but after offering the most excellent of sacrifices, at which presents were bestowed, he (3965) enquired of the rishis skilled in the scriptures, and of the gods, what was that which most perfectly cleansed those men who had committed deeds of violence; for he felt compunction for what he had done. The rishis skilled in the Vedas and Śāstras replied, ‘Let the Brāhmans be the objects of your liberality, as the authority of the Vedas requires; let the Brāhman-rishis be further consulted in regard to the means of lustration; and do whatever these wise men may enjoin.” Paraśurāma accordingly consulted Vaśishṭha, Agastya, and Kaśyapa. They replied that a sinner was cleansed by bestowing cows, land, and other property, and especially gold, the purifying power of which was very great. “Those who bestow it, bestow the gods,” a proposition which is thus compendiously proved: “for Agni comprehends all the gods; and gold is of the essence of Agni” (verse 3987. Devatās te prayachhanti ye suvarṇam dadaty atha | Agnir hi devatāḥ sarvāḥ suvarṇam cha tadātmakam). In regard to the origin of this precious metal, Vaśishṭha tells a very long story, which he had heard Prajāpati relate, how it was born by the goddess Gangā to Agni, by whom she had been impregnated, and was thus the son of that god. “Thus was gold born the offspring of Jātavedas (Agni). That which is produced in Jambūnada is the best, and a fit ornament even for the gods. It is called the chief of gems and of ornaments, the most pure of all pure things, the most auspicious of all auspicious objects; and one with the divine Agni, the lord Prajāpati” (verse 4099. Evaṁ suvarṇam utpannam apatyam Jātavedasaḥ | tatra Jambūnadam śreṣṭham devānām api bhūṣaṇam | 4001. Ratnānām uttamaṁ ratnam bhūṣaṇānām tathottamam | pavitraṁ cha pavitrānām mangalānām cha mangalam | yat suvarṇam sa bhagavān Agnir īśaḥ prajāpatiḥ |). It must be highly consolatory for those who are disposed to be liberal to the Brāhman, to be assured that the gold which they bestow has such a high mystical, as well as current, exchangeable value. “Paraśurāma,” the story concludes, “after being thus addressed by Vaśishṭha, gave gold to the Brāhmans, and was freed from sin” (verse 4183. Ity ūktaḥ sa Vaśishṭhena Jāmadagnyaḥ pratāpavān | dadau suvarṇam viprebhyo vyamuchyata cha kilbiṣāt).

It is interesting to remark how the different distinctive principles of Indian religion and sentiment severally assert themselves in turn, and thus, occasionally, come into conflict with each other, as in the story of Paraśurāma. The primary object of this legend is no doubt to illustrate the vengeance which inevitably overtakes all those who violate the sacredness of the Brāhmanical prerogative, and the meritorious character of those who act as its defenders. No sooner, however, is this end accomplished, and the impious foes of the priesthood swept away again and again from the face of the earth, than a revulsion of feeling takes place, and the higher principles of the sacredness of life, and of the blessedness of mercy, come forward to claim recognition; and a deep sense of the pollution of bloodshed calls aloud for atonement. In the Bhāgavata, as we have seen, Jamadagni imputes it as a crime to the avenger of the Brāhmins that he had slain a king; and even goes the length of declaring that in doing so he had incurred greater guilt than if he had murdered a Brāhman.

In the same book of the Mahābhārata, verses 7163 ff., an extravagant description is given of the prerogatives and powers of the Brāhmins; and Arjuna is again brought forward, in verses 7187 ff., as at first scouting their pretensions, but as ultimately conceding their unapproachable superiority: "The magnificent and mighty Kārtavīrya (Arjuna), possessing a thousand arms, was lord of this whole world, living in Māhishmatī. This Haihaya of unquestioned valour ruled over the whole sea-girt earth, with its oceans and continents" (verse 7187. Sahasra-bhūja-bhṛit śrīmān Kārtavīryo 'bhavat prabhuḥ | asya lokasya sarvasya Mūhishmatyām mahābalaḥ | sa tu ratnākaravatīm sadvipām sāgarāmbaram | śaśūsa pṛithivīm sarvām Haihayaḥ satya-vikramah). He obtained boons from the muni Dattātreyā, a thousand arms whenever he should go into battle, power to make the conquest of the whole earth, a disposition to rule it with justice, and the promise of instruction from the virtuous in the event of his going astray. 7196. *Tataḥ sa ratham āsthūya jvalanūrka-samadyutim | abravīd vīryyasammohāt "ko nv asti sadṛīṣo mama | dhairyye vīryye yaśaḥ-śauryye vikramenaujasā 'pi vū" | tad-vākyānte 'ntarīkṣhe vai vāg uvāchāśarīrīṇī | "na tvam mūḍha vijānīṣhe brāhmaṇam kṣhattriyaḥ varam | sahito brāhmaṇeneha kṣhattriyaḥ śūsti vai prajāḥ" | Arjuna uvācha | kuryām bhūtāni tushṭo 'haṁ kruddho nāśam tathā naye | karmaṇā manasā vāchā na matto 'sti varo dvijaḥ | 7200. At the end of this speech a bodiless voice in the sky addressed him: 'Thou knowest not, o fool, that a Brāhmaṇ is better than a Kshattriya. It is with the help of the Brāhmaṇ that the Kshattriya rules his subjects.' Arjuna answers: 'If I am pleased, I can create, or, if displeased, annihilate, living beings; and no Brāhmaṇ is superior to me in act, thought, or word. The first proposition is that the Brāhmans are superior; the second that the Kshattriyas are superior; both of these thou hast stated with their grounds, but there is a difference between them (in point of force). The Brāhmans are dependant on the Kshattriyas, and not the Kshattriyas on the Brāhmans; and the Kshattriyas are eaten up by the Brāhmans, who wait upon them, and only make the Vedas a pretence. Justice, the protection of the people, has its seat in the Kshattriyas. From them the Brāhmans derive their livelihood: how then can the latter be superior? I always keep in subjection to myself those Brāhmans, the chief of all beings, who subsist on alms, and who have a high opinion of themselves. For truth was spoken by that female the Gāyatrī in the sky. I shall subdue all those unruly Brāhmans clad in hides. 7200. No one in the three worlds, god or man, can hurl me from my royal authority; wherefore I am superior to any Brāhman. Now shall I turn the world in which Brāhman have the upper hand into a place where Kshattriyas shall have the upper hand: for no one dares to encounter my force in battle.' Hearing this speech of Arjuna, the female roving in the night became alarmed. Then Vāyu, hovering in the air, said to Arjuna: 'Abandon this sinful disposition, and do obeisance to the Brāhman. If thou shalt do them wrong, thy kingdom shall be convulsed. They will subdue thee: those powerful men will humble thee, and expel thee from thy country.' The king asks him, 'Who art thou?' Vāyu replies, 'I am Vāyu, the messenger of the gods, and tell thee what is for thy benefit.' Arjuna rejoins, 'Oh, thou displayest to-day a great warmth of devotion to the Brāhman. But say that a Brāhman is like (any other) earth-born creature. Or say that this most excellent Brāhman is something like the wind. But fire is like the waters, or the sun, or the sky.'"²⁴⁵ Vāyu, however, goes on to answer this spirited banter by adducing various instances in which the superiority or terrible power of the Brāhman had been manifested: 7124. Tyaktvā mahītram bhūmis tu sparddhayā'nga-nripasya ha | nāsāṁ jagāma tām vipro vyashṭambhayata Kāśyapaḥ | "The earth, being offended with king Anga, had abandoned her form and become destroyed: but the Brāhman Kāśyapa supported her." This is afterwards told more at length, verse 7232: Imūm bhūmīm dvijātibhyo ditsur vai dakṣiṇām purā | Ango nāma nripo rājāṁs tatas chintām mahī yayau | "dhūraṇīm sarva-bhūtānām ayam prāpya varo nripaḥ | katham ichhati mām dātum dvijebhyo Brahmanāḥ sutām | sū 'haṁ tyaktvā gamishyāmi bhūmitram Brahmanāḥ padam | ayaṁ sa-rūṣṭro nripatir mā bhūd " iti tato 'gamat | 7235. Tatas tām Kāśyapo dṛisṭvā vrajantīm prithivīm tadā | praviveśa mahīm sadyo muktvā "tmānaṁ samāhitaḥ | ṛiddhā sū sarvato jajne trinaushadhi-samanvitā | . . . 7238. Athāgamya mahārāja namaskṛitya cha Kāśyapam | prithivī Kāśyapī jajne sutā tasya mahūtmānaḥ | eṣha rājann īdṛiṣo vai brāhmaṇāḥ Kāśyapo 'bhavat | anyam prabrūhi vā tvam cha Kāśyapūt kshattriyaṁ varam | "King Anga wished to bestow this earth on the Brāhman as a sacrificial fee. The earth then reflected, 'How does this excellent king, after having obtained me, the daughter of Brahman, and the supporter of all creatures, desire to give me to the Brāhmans? I shall abandon my earthly form, and depart to the world of Brahmā. Let this king be without any realm.' Accordingly she departed. 7235. Beholding her going away, Kaśyapa, sunk in contemplation, entered into her, leaving his own body. She then became replenished, and covered with grass and plants, etc., etc. . . . 7238. She afterwards came and did obeisance to Kaśyapa, and became his daughter. Such was the Brāhman Kaśyapa: Declare, on your part, any Kshattriya who has been superior to him."

“Angiras, too, himself formerly drank up the waters by his own²⁴⁶ night. Drinking them up like milk he was not satisfied: and filled the whole earth with a great flood. When he was thus wroth, I abandoned the world and departed, and dwelt for a long time in the agnihotra. The divine Purandara (Indra), who had a passion for Ahalyā, was cursed by (her husband) Gautama; but, from motives of religion, he was not injured.²⁴⁶ The sea, which is filled and purified by water, being cursed by the Brāhmans, became salt,” 7223. The great kingdom of the Dandakas was overthrown by a Brāhman; and the great Kshattriya family of the Tālajanghas was destroyed by Aurva alone. 7225. And why dost thou, o Arjuna, worship Agni (who is) a Brāhman? for knowest thou not that he bears the oblations of the whole world?" The story of Utathya, of the race of Angiras, is afterwards told: "7241. Bhadrā was the daughter of Soma, and considered to be a person of great beauty. Soma regarded Utathya as a fitting husband for her. She practised severe austerities in order to gain him. Atri (the father of Soma, according to the Vishṇu Purāṇa, Wilson, 1st ed. p. 392) then sent for Utathya, and gave her to him, and he married her in due form, presenting large gifts. 7245. The god Varuṇa, however, who had formerly been enamoured of her, came and carried her off from the abode of the hermit, who was living on the banks of the Yamunā, and took her to his own city, to a very wonderful lake of six hundred thousand (yojanas). No city was more delightful than that, adorned as it was by palaces and apsaras, and rich in celestial objects of enjoyment. There the god enjoyed her society. His wife's dishonour being made known to Utathya by Nārada, he requested the latter to go and deliver a severe message to Varuṇa: 'I command thee to let my wife go, who was given to me by Soma; wherefore hast thou carried her away? Thou art a guardian of the world, not a robber.' . . . 7251. Varuṇa answered, 'She is my beloved; I cannot bear to give her up.' Nārada, in no very gratified humour, reported this answer to Utathya, and said, 'Varuṇa took me by the throat, and cast me out. He will not give up thy wife. Take whatever measures thou esteemest proper.' Utathya was greatly incensed (7255), and stopped up and drank all the sea. Still Varuṇa, though urged by his friends, would not give up the female. Utathya then desired the earth to try some other stratagem; and the lake above described was turned into a salt wilderness, and the ocean swept away. The saint then addressed himself to the countries and to the river: 'Sarasvatī, disappear into the deserts; and let this land, deserted by thee, become impure.' After the country had become dried up, Varuṇa submitted himself to Utathya, and brought back Bhadrā. The sage was pleased to get his wife, and released both the world and Varuṇa from their sufferings. . . . He said to the latter (7262) 'This, my wife, was gained by my austerities in spite of thy remonstrances.' 7263. . . . 'Such, o king, I say, was the Brāhman Utathya; tell me of any Kshattriya superior to him.”

A story is next told (verses 7265 ff.) of the gods being conquered by the Asuras or Dānavas, deprived of all oblations, and stripped of their dignity, and of their coming to earth, where they saw the sage Agastya, and applied to him for protection. The succour they implored was granted to them by the sage, who scorched the Dānavas, expelled them from heaven and earth, and made them fly to the south. Thus were the gods reinstated in their dominion.

We have then, verses 7280–7290, the following legend of Vasishṭha: The Ādityas were performing a sacrifice, bearing Vasishṭha in their remembrance, when they were attacked by the Dānavas, called Khalins, who came in tens of thousands to slay them:

Verse 7284. Tatas tair ardditāḥ devūḥ śaraṇaṁ Vāsavaṁ yayuḥ | sa cha tair vyathitaḥ Sakro Vasishṭhaṁ śaraṇaṁ yayau | tato 'bhayaṁ dadau tebhyo Vasishṭho bhagavān ṛishiḥ | tadā tūn duḥkhitān jñtvā ānṛiṣaṁsya-paro munīḥ | ayatnenādahat sarvān Khalinaḥ svena tejasā | 7289. Evāṁ sendrūḥ Vasishṭhena rakshitās tridivaukasaḥ | Brahma-datta-varās chaiva hatāḥ daityāḥ mahātmanā | etat karma Vasishṭhasya kathitaṁ hi mayā 'nagha | bravīmy aham brūhi vā tvam Vasishṭhāt kshattriyaṁ varam |

“The gods being distressed by them, resorted to Indra; and he too, being harassed by them, went to Vasishṭha for help. This reverend and benevolent sage gave them all his protection; and being aware of their distress, without any exertion, burnt up all the Dānavas 7289. Thus were the gods, including Indra, preserved by Vasishṭha, and the Daityas, even although they had obtained a boon from Brahmā, were slain. Such was the exploit of Vasishṭha: can you tell me of any Kshattriya who was superior to him?”

A further tale is told of the prowess of the sage Atri, who interposed to deliver the gods and restore light to the celestial luminaries:

Verse 7292. Ghore tamasy ayudhyanta sahitūḥ deva-dānavāḥ | avidhyata śarais tatra Svarbhānuḥ Soma-bhāskarau | atha te tamasā grastūḥ viha-nyante sma dānavaiḥ | devūḥ nṛipati-śārdūla sahaiva Balibhis tadā | asurair badhyamānās te kṣhīṇa-prāṇāḥ divaukasaḥ | apśyanta tapasyan-tam Atriṁ vipraṁ tapodhanam | 7297. Te 'bruvamās “chandramāḥ bhava | timira-ghnās cha savitā dasyu-hantā cha no bhava” | evam uktas tadā 'trir vai tamo-nud abhavat śaśi | apaśyat saumya-bhāvāch cha soma-

“The gods and Dānavas fought together in dreadful darkness; when Svarbhānu pierced with his arrows the sun and moon. Enveloped in gloom the gods were slaughtered by the Dānavas, together with the Balis. Being thus slain and exhausted, the celestials beheld the Brāhman Atri employed in austerities;” and invoked his aid in their extremity. He asked what he should do. They reply, verse 2297: “‘Become the moon, and the gloom-dispelling sun, the slayer of the Dasyus.’ Atri then became the gloom-dispelling moon, and in his character as such looked beautiful as Soma. Perceiving the sun and moon to be shorn of their brightness, Atri threw light upon the conflict, (7300) freed the world from darkness, by the power of his austere-fervour, and vanquished the enemies of the gods. . . . 7303. Behold the deed done by Atri, the Brāhman, attended by Agni, the mutterer of prayers, clad in a skin, and living upon fruits. . . . 7304. ‘Tell me of any Kshattriya superior to Atri.’”

This story is founded on some verses of the Rīg-veda, v. 40, 5 :

“When Svarbhānu of the Asura race pierced thee, o Sun, with darkness, all worlds appeared like a man who is bewildered in a region which he does not know. 6. When, Indra, thou didst sweep away the magical arts of Svarbhānu, which were operating beneath the sky, Atri discovered by the fourth text the Sun, which had been hidden by the hostile darkness. 8. Applying the (soma-crushing) stones, performing worship, serving the gods with reverence and praise, the priest Atri placed the eye of the Sun in the sky, and dispelled the illusions of Svarbhānu. 9. The Atris discovered the Sun which Svarbhānu had pierced with darkness. No others could."

We have next a curious legend about the sage Chyavana, of the race of Bhṛigu :

7306. Āsvinoḥ pratisaṁśrutya Chyavanaḥ Pākaśāsanam | provācha sahito devaiḥ "somapāv Āsvinau kuru" | Indraḥ uvācha | "asmābhir ninditāv etau bharetām somapau katham | devair na sammitāv etau tasmūd mairam vadasva naḥ | Āsvibhyām saha nechhūmaḥ somam pātum mahāvratā | yad anyad vakshyase vipra tat karishyāma te vacaḥ" | Chyavanaḥ uvācha | "pibetām Āsvinau somam bharadbhiḥ sahitāv ubhau | ubhāv etāv api surau sūryya-puttrau sureśvara | 7310. Kṛiyatām mad-vacho devūḥ yathā vai samudāhṛitam | etad vaḥ kurvatām śreyo bhared naitad akurvatām" | Indraḥ uvācha | "Āsvibhyām saha somaṁ vai na pāsyāmi dvijottama | pibantv anye yathākūmaṁ nāham pātum ihotsahe" | Chyavanaḥ uvācha | "na chet karishyasi vacho mayoktam balu-sūdana | mayā pramathitāḥ sadyaḥ somam pāsyasi vai makhe" | tataḥ karma samārabdham hitāya sahasā 'śvinoḥ | Chyavanena tato mantrair abhībūtāḥ surā bhavan | tat tu karma samārabdham dṛishṭrendraḥ krodha-mūrckhitāḥ | udyamya vipulaṁ śailaṁ Chyavanaṁ samupādravat | 7315. Tathā rajreṇa bhagavān amarśhākula-lochanaḥ | tam ūpatantaṁ dṛishṭvaiva Chyavanas tapasā 'nritaḥ | adbhiḥ siktvā 'stambhayat taṁ sa-vajraṁ saha-parratam | athendrasya mahāghoraṁ so 'srijat śatrum eva hi | Mayāṁ nāmāhuti-mayaṁ vyādītāsyam mahāmuniḥ | . . . 7319. Jihvā-mūlāsthitās tasya sarve devūḥ sa-vāsavāḥ | tiner āsyam anupraptāḥ yathā matsyūḥ mahārṇave | te sammantrya tato deva Mudasyāsya samīpagāḥ | abruran sahitūḥ Sakram praṇamāsmāi dvijūṭaye | Āsvibhyām saha somaṁ cha pibāma vigata-jvarāḥ | tataḥ sa praṇataḥ Sakraś chakāra Chyavanasya tat | Chyavanaḥ kṛitavān etāv Āsvinau soma-pūyinau | tataḥ pratyūharat karma Madam cha vyabhajad muniḥ |

"Having given a promise to that effect, Chyavana applied, along with the other gods, to Indra, to allow the Āsvins to partake in the soma juice. Indra answered, 'How can they become drinkers of the soma, seeing they are reviled by us, and are not on an equality with the gods? We do not wish to drink soma in their company; but we shall accede to your wishes in any other respect.' Chyavana repeats his request, and urges that the Āsvins also are gods, and the offspring of the Sun. 7310. He adds that it will be well for the gods if they accede to this demand, and ill if they do not. Indra rejoins that the other gods may drink with the Aśvins if they please, but he cannot bring himself to do it. Chyavana retorts that if he does not, he shall be chastised by the sage, and made to drink soma (with them) at the sacrifice. A ceremony was then instantly begun by Chyavana for the benefit of the Aśvins; and the gods were vanquished by sacred texts. Indra, seeing this rite commenced, became incensed, uplifted a vast mountain (7315), and rushed with his thunderbolt, and with angry eyes, on Chyavana. The sage, however, sprinkling him with water, arrested him with his mountain and thunderbolt. Chyavana then created a fearful open-mouthed monster, called Mada, formed of the substance of the oblation," who is further described as having teeth and grinders of portentous length, and jaws, one of which enclosed the earth and the other the sky: and the gods, including Indra, are said (7319), "to have been at the root of his tongue [ready to be devoured] like fishes in the mouth of a sea monster. Finding themselves in his predicament, the gods took counsel and said to Indra, 'Make salutation to Chyavana, and let us drink soma along with the Aśvins, and so escape from our sufferings.' Indra then, making obeisance, granted the demand of Chyavana, who was thus the cause of the Aśvins becoming drinkers of the soma. He then performed the ceremony, and clove Mada to pieces."

Does this legend mean that this rishi of the Bhṛigu family was the first to introduce the Aśvins within the circle of the Arian worship?

Compare the passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa iv. 1, 5, 1 ff., and from the Vanaparvan of the M. Bh. verses 10316 ff. quoted in my "Contributions to a knowledge of the Vedic theogony and mythology," No. II., in the Journ. R. A. S., for 1866, pp 11 ff.; Ind. St. i. 188, and the Āśvamedhika-parvan of the M. Bh., verses 249 ff., there referred to. The Aśvins are, in different passages of the Rīg-veda, as iii. 58, 7, 9; viii. 8, 5; viii. 35, 7-10, invited to drink the soma-juice.

Vāyu relates to Arjuna yet one more instance of the irresistible power of the Brāhmans:

“When the gods, including Indra, were enclosed within the mouth of Mada, the earth was taken from them by Chyavana. The gods then considering that they had lost both worlds, in their distress resorted to Brahmā, and said, ‘Since we have been swallowed up in the mouth of Mada, the earth has been taken from us by Chyavana, and the heaven by the Kapas.’ Brahmā answered, ‘Go speedily, ye gods, with Indra, to the Brāhmans for help. After propitiating them ye shall regain both worlds.’ They did so, and the Brāhmans, after ascertaining that the gods would themselves deal with those of their enemies who were on earth, began a ceremony for the destruction of the Kapas. The Kapas upon this sent a messenger to the Brāhmans, to say that they themselves were all, like them, skilled in the Vedas, learned, and offerers of sacrifice, all pure in their observances, and all resembling great rishis, etc., etc. How then should the Brāhmans be able to conquer them? It would be more for their interest to desist from the attempt. The Brāhmans, however, would not be persuaded; and when, in consequence, the Kapas assailed them, they hurled forth fires by which the Kapas were destroyed. The gods themselves conquered the Dānavas, and learning from Nārada what the illustrious Brāhmins had effected, they sang their praises."²⁴⁷

"I live altogether and always for the sake of the Brāhmins. I am devoted to the Brāhmins, and do obeisance to them continually. And it is through the favour of Dattātreya (a Brāhman) that I have obtained all this power and high renown, and that I have practised righteousness. Thou hast declared to me truly all the acts of the Brāhmins, and I have listened intently." Vāyu then says to him : "Protect the Brāhmins, fulfilling a Kshattriya's function ; and restrain your senses. A dreadful cause of apprehension impends over you from the Bhṛigus, but it will only take effect after some time." This last remark may have been introduced to bring this story into harmony with the other legend about the destruction of Arjuna and the Kshattriyas.

The narrative, which has just been quoted, is, as I have already stated, preceded by a panegyric of some length pronounced by Bhīṣma on the Brāhmins (verses 7163-7184), of which the following are specimens :

"The prowess of the Brāhmins can destroy even the gods. 7164.

²⁴⁷ This translation is a good deal condensed.

Those wise beings uphold all these worlds. 7175. To them it is indifferent whether they are perfumed with sandal wood or deformed with mire, whether they eat or fast, whether they are clad in silk, or in sackcloth or skins. 7177. They can turn what is not divine into what is divine, and the converse; and can in their anger create other worlds with their guardians. 7179. They are the gods of the gods; and the cause of the cause. 7181. An ignorant Brāhman is a god, whilst a learned Brāhman is yet more a god, like the full ocean." (Compare the similar eulogies in p. 130, above.)

In the Anuśāsanaparvan, sections 52 ff., we have the story of Paraśurāma, in connection with that of Viśvāmitra, yet once more handled. Yudhisṭhira says he is very curious to know something more about these two personages :

2718. Katham esha samutpanno Rāmaḥ satya-parākramaḥ | katham brahmarshi-vaṁśo 'yaṁ kshattrā-dharmā vyajāyata | tad asya sambhavaṁ rājan nikhilenānukirttaya | Kauśikāc cha katham vaṁśāt kshattrād vai brāhmaṇo 'bhavat | aho prabhāvaḥ sumahān āsīd vai sumahātmanaḥ | Rāmasya cha nara-vyūghra Viśvāmitrasya chaiva hi | katham putirān atikramya teshāṁ napṛishv athābhavat | esha doṣaḥ sūtān hitvā tat tvaṁ vyākhyātum arhasi |

"How was this valiant Rāma, descended from the family of a Brāhman-rishi, born with the qualities of a Kshattriya? Tell me the whole story: and how did a Brāhman spring from the Kshattriya race of Kuśika? Great was the might of Rāma, and of Viśvāmitra. How did it happen that, passing over the sons [of Richika and Kuśika], this defect showed itself in their grandsons?"

Then there follows a long dialogue related by Bhīṣma as having taken place between king Kuśika and the sage Chyavana. The latter, it seems, "foreseeing that this disgrace was about to befall his race [from connection with the Kuśikas], and entertaining, in consequence, after he had weighed all the good and evil, and the strength and weakness (on either side), the desire of burning up that whole family" (verse 2723. Etāṁ doṣam purā dṛiṣṭvā Bhārgavaḥ Chyavanas tadā | āgāminam mahābuddhiḥ sva-vaṁśe muni-sattamaḥ | niśchitya manasā sarvaṁ guṇa-doṣam balābalaṁ | dagdhu-kāmaḥ kulaṁ sarvaṁ Kuśikānāṁ tapodhanaḥ |), came to Kuśika. Chyavana is welcomed and treated with great attention, and receives from Kuśika the offer of all his kingdom, etc. The saint, however, does not requite this honour with corresponding kindness, but makes the king and his wife perform many menial offices, rub his feet, attend while he sleeps, bring him food, and draw him in a chariot, while he lacerates their backs with a goad. All this is submitted to so patiently, that the sage is propitiated, addresses them in kindly tones, and touches their wounded bodies with his godlike hands. After creating a magical golden palace, with all the accompaniments of pleasure (2826 ff.), in order to give them a conception of heaven, (2892 ff.) the sage offers to bestow any boon the king may choose; and to solve any of his doubts. Kuśika asks the reason of the sage's unaccountable procedure. Chyavana answers that he had heard from Brahmā that there would be "a confusion of families in consequence of the hostility of Brāhmans and Kshattriyas, and that a grandson of great glory and heroism would be born to Kuśika" (verse 2878. Brahma-kshattra-virodhena bhavitā kula-sankarah | pautras te bhavitā rājāṁś tejo-vīryya-samanvitāh |); that he had intended in consequence to burn up the race of the Kuśikas, but that the king had come so well out of the severe ordeal to which he had been subjected, that the sage had become thoroughly pacified, and would grant the boon which Kuśika desired :

"This thy desire shall be fulfilled; from a Kausika a Kausika Brāhman shall arise: in the third generation thy race shall attain to Brāhmanhood by the might of the Bhṛigus. Thy son's son shall become a Brāhman, a devotee, splendid as fire, who shall alarm both gods and men." Kuśika being anxious to know how all this was to be brought to pass, Chyavana informs him :

"The Bhṛigus have always been the priests of the Kshattriyas; but these will become hostile to each other for a fated reason. The Kshattriyas shall slay all the Bhṛigus, even to children in the womb, being oppressed by a divine nemesis. Then shall arise the glorious Ūrva,²⁴⁸ like the sun in splendour, who shall augment the glory of our race. He shall create a fire of wrath for the destruction of the three worlds, which shall reduce the earth with its mountains and forests to ashes. After a time he will extinguish the fire, throwing it into the ocean into the mouth of Vaḍavā (the submarine fire). Into his son Rīchīka shall ²⁴⁸ Ūrva is here said (verse 2907) to belong to the race of Chyavana, but whether as a near or remote descendant is not stated. In verse 2910 Rīchīka is said to be the son of Ūrva. In the Ādiparvan, verses 2610 ff., the matter is somewhat differently stated: Ārushī tu Manoh kanyā tasya patnī yaśasvinī | Aurvas tasyām samabhavad ūrum bhitvā mahāyaśūḥ | mahātejāḥ mahāvīryyo bālaḥ eva gunair yutaḥ | Rīchīkas tasya puttras tu Jamadagnis tato 'bhavat | "Ārushī, the daughter of Manu, was the wife of the sage (Chyavana); of her was the illustrious Aurva born, having split his mother's thigh. He was great in glory and might, and from his childhood endowed with eminent qualities. Rīchīka was his son, and Rīchīka's was Jamadagni." Here Aurva is said to derive his name from having divided his mother's thigh (ūru); and no allusion is made to Ūrva, though the same person appears to be meant. In the passage of the Anuśāsana-parvan, however, we have an Ūrva, the father of Rīchīka, whose patronymic will thus be Aurva; as it is, in fact, in the Vishnu Purāṇa, as quoted above in p. 352.

This science he shall transmit to his great son Jamadagni, whose mind shall be spiritualized by devotion, and who shall possess that Veda. He (R̥ichika) shall obtain [for his wife] a maiden of thy family, to prolong thy race. This great devotee, wedding thy grand-daughter, the daughter of Gādhi, shall beget a Brāhman (i.e. Paraśurāma), fulfilling the functions of a Kshattriya; (2915) and shall bestow on thy family a Kshattriya who shall perform the functions of a Brāhman, Viśvāmitra, the son of Gādhi, an austere devotee, and glorious as Vrihaspati. The two wives shall be the cause of this interchange of characters. According to the decree of Brahmā all this shall so happen. Brāhmanhood shall come to thee in the third generation, and thou shalt become connected with the spiritual-minded Bhṛigus.” 2923. “Thus (concludes Bhīshma) have I told thee at length the cause of the connection between the Bhṛigus and the Kuśikas. All this was accordingly fulfilled in the births of Paraśurāma and Viśvāmitra.”

Is this legend intended to account for a real fact? Was Paraśurāma of a sacerdotal tribe, and yet by profession a warrior, just as Viśvāmitra was conversely of royal extraction, and yet a priest by profession?

According to the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 11, 3 (Wilson, 4to. ed. pp. 416, 417), Arjuna was of the race of Yadu, and the ninth in descent from Haihaya, the great-grandson of that prince. It is there said of him:

Kṛitavīryyād Arjunaḥ sapta-dvīpapatir bāhu-sahasrī jajne yo 'sau bhagavad-aṁsam Atri-kula-prasūtaṁ Dattātreyaḥkhyam ārādhya bāhu-sahasram adharmā-sevā-nivāraṇaṁ dharmena pṛithivījayaṁ dharmatāś chānupūlanam arātibhyo 'parājayaṁ akhila-jagat-prakhyāta-purushāc cha mṛityum ity etān varān abhilashitavān lebhe cha | tena iyaṁ aśeshādvīpavati pṛithvī samyak paripālītā | daśa-yajna-sahasraṇy asāv ayajat | tasya cha śloko 'dyūpi giyate “na nūnaṁ kṛttavīryasya gatiṁ yāsyanti pṛithivāḥ | yajnair dānair tapobhir vā praśrayeṇa damena cha” | anashṭa-dravyatū tasya rājye 'bhavat | 4. “From Kṛitavīrya sprang Arjuna, who was lord of the seven dvīpas [circular and concentric continents of which the earth is composed], and had a thousand arms. Having worshipped a portion of the divine Being, called Dattātreya, sprung from the race of Atri, he sought and obtained these boons, viz. a thousand arms, the power of restraining wrong by justice, the conquest of the earth, and the disposition to rule it righteously, invincibility by enemies, and death at the hands of a man renowned over the whole world. By him this earth, with all its dvīpas, was perfectly governed. He offered ten thousand sacrifices. To this day this verse is repeated respecting him: ‘No other king shall ever equal Kārtavīrya in regard to sacrifices, liberality, austerities, courtesy, and self-restraint.’ In his reign no property was ever lost. 4. Thus he ruled for eighty-five thousand years with unbroken health, prosperity, strength, and valour. When he was excited by sporting in the Narmadā and by drinking wine, he had no difficulty in binding like a beast Rāvaṇa, who had arrived in Māhishmatī in his career of conquest, and who was filled with arrogance, arising from the pride of victory over all the gods, daityas, and gandharva chiefs, and imprisoning him in a secret place in his capital. At the end of his reign of eighty five thousand years Arjuna was destroyed by Paraśurāma, who was a portion of the divine Nārāyaṇa.”

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ix. 23, 20-27, assigns to him the same descent, and relates of him nearly the same particulars. Verse 23 says: Arjunaḥ Kṛitavīryasya sapta-dvīpeśvaro 'bhavat | Dattātreyaṁ Harer aṁśāt prāpta-yoga-mahāguṇaḥ | “Arjuna was the son of Kṛitavīrya, and ruler of the seven dvīpas. He obtained the great attribute of Yoga (supernatural powers arising from devotion) from Dattātreya, who was a portion of Hari,” etc.

The legend of Paraśurāma, as related, is of course fabulous. Not to speak of the miraculous powers which are ascribed to this hero, and the incredible number of the exterminations which he is said to have executed, we cannot even suppose it probable that the Brāhmins should in general have been sufficiently powerful and warlike to overcome the Kshattriyas by force of arms. But the legend may have had some small foundation in fact. Before the provinces of the sacerdotal and military classes were accurately defined, there may have been cases in which ambitious men of the former successfully aspired to kingly dominion, just as scions of royal races became distinguished as priests and sages. But even without this assumption, the existence of such legends is sufficiently explained by the position which the Brāhmans eventually occupied. With the view of maintaining their own ascendancy over the minds of the chiefs on whose good will they were dependent, and of securing for themselves honour and profit, they would have an interest in working upon the superstitious feelings of their contemporaries by fabricating stories of supernatural punishments inflicted by their own forefathers on their royal oppressors, as well as by painting in lively colours the prosperity of those princes who were submissive to the spiritual order.

CHAPTER V.

RELATION OF THE BRAHMANICAL INDIANS TO THE NEIGHBOURING TRIBES, ACCORDING TO MANU AND THE PURANAS.

I now propose to enquire what account the Indian writers give of the origin of those tribes which were not comprehended in their own polity, but with which, as dwelling within, or adjacent to, the boundaries of Hindustan, their countrymen were, in ancient times, brought into continual and familiar contact.

It appears to have been the opinion of Manu, the great authority in all matters regarding the Hindu religion and institutions in their full development, that there was no original race of men except the four castes of Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras; and that all other nations were derived from these. His own words (x. 4) are these: Brāhmaṇaḥ kshattriyo vaiśyas trayo varṇāḥ dvijātayaḥ | chaturthaḥ ekajātis tu śūdro nāsti tu pañchamaḥ | “Three castes, the Brāhman, the Kshattriya, and the Vaiśya, are twice-born; the fourth, the Sūdra, is once-born; and there is no fifth.” On the last clause of this verse Kullūka Bhaṭṭa annotates thus: Pañchamaḥ punar varṇo nāsti sankirṇa-jātinām to aśvatara-vad mātā-pitṛi-jāti-vyatirikta-jāty-antaravād na varnatvam | ayaṁ cha jāty-antaropadeśaḥ śāstre saṁvyavaharaṇārthaḥ | “There is no fifth caste; for caste cannot be predicated of the mixed tribes, from the fact that, like mules, they belong to another species, distinct from that of their father and mother. And this reference, which is made in the Śāstras to castes other than the four, is merely for the sake of convenience and conformity to common usage.”

Accordingly, in the following description which Manu gives in the same chapter of the rise of the inferior castes, they are all, even the very lowest, such as Nishādas and Chāṇḍālas, derived from the mixture the four so-called original castes. Thus, in verse 8 : Brāhmaṇād vaiśya-kanyāyām ambashṭho nāma jāyate | nishādaḥ śūdra-kanyāyām yaḥ parāśava uchyaṭe | "From a Brāhmaṇ father and a Vaiśya mother springs an Ambashṭha : from a Brāhmaṇ father and a Śūdra mother is born a Nishāda, called also Parāśava."¹ Again, in verse 12 . Śūdrād āyogavaḥ kshattū chāṇḍālaś chādhamo nṛiṇām | vaiśya-rājanya-viprāsu jāyante varṇa-sankarāḥ | "From a Śūdra, by women of the Vaiśya, Kshattriya, and Brāhmaṇ castes are born those mixed classes, the Āyogava, the Kshattṛi, and the Chāṇḍāla, lowest of men." Again, in verse 20 : Dvijātayaḥ savarṇāsu janayanty avratāṁs tu yān | tām sāvitṛi-paribhrashtān vrātyāḥ iti vinirdiśet | "Persons whom the twice-born beget on women of their own classes, but who omit the prescribed rites, and have abandoned the gāyatrī, are to be designated as Vrātyas."² In the next three verses the inferior tribes, which spring from the Brāhmaṇ Vrātya, the Kshattriya Vrātya, and the Vaiśya Vrātya respectively, are enumerated.

¹ It does not appear how the account of the origin of the Nishāda race from king Vena, given above in pp. 301 and 303, can be reconciled with this theory of Manu ; unless recourse be had to the explanation that that story relates to the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. But Manu's narrative seems to refer to the same period. See above, p. 39. If the Vedic expressions pañchajanāḥ and the other corresponding phrases signifying "the five tribes" be rightly interpreted of the "four castes, and the Nishādas," we might understand this as intimating that the Nishādas had at one time been regarded as a distinct race. But the phrase is variously understood by the old Vedic commentators ; as has been shewn above, p. 177.

² Manu says, ii. 38 f. : Ā-shodasād brāhmaṇasya sāvitṛī nātivarttate | ā-dvāviṁśāt kshattrabhandhor ā-chaturviṁśater viśaḥ | atah ūrdhham trayo'py ete yathā-kālam asaṁskṛitāḥ | sāvitṛī-patitāḥ vrātyāḥ bhavanty āryya-nigarhitāḥ | "The gāyatrī should not, in the case of a Brāhmaṇ, be deferred beyond the sixteenth year ; nor in the case of a Kshattriya beyond the twenty-second ; nor in that of a Vaiśya beyond the twenty-fourth. After these periods youths of the three classes, who have not been invested, become fallen from the gāyatrī, Vrātyas, condemned by respectable men (Āryyas)." In the following verse of the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsanaparvan, line 2621, a different origin is ascribed to the Vrātyas : Chāṇḍālo vrātya-vaidyaḥ cha brāhmaṇyām kshattriyāsu cha | vaiśyāyām chaiva śūdrasya lakshyante pasādus trayāḥ | "The three outcaste classes are the Chāṇḍāla, the Vrātya, and the Vaidya, begotten by a Śūdra on females of the Brāhmaṇ, Kshattriya, and Vaiśya castes respectively." A Vrātya, therefore, according to this account, is the son of a Śūdra man and Kshattriya woman. On the Vrātyas, see Weber's Indische Studien, i. 33, 52, 138, 139, 445, 446, etc.

kshattriya-jātayaḥ | vṛishalatvaṁ gatūḥ loke brāhmanūdarśanena cha | Paundrakāś chodra-draviḍāḥ Kāmbojāḥ Yavanāḥ Śakāḥ | Pāradaḥ Pahlavāś Chināḥ Kirātāḥ Daradāḥ Khasāḥ | “The following tribes of Kshattriyas have gradually sunk into the state of Vṛishalas (outcasts), from the extinction of sacred rites, and from having no communication with Brāhmins; viz. Paundrakas, Oḍras, Draviḍas, Kāmbojas, Yavanas, Śakas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Chīnas, Kirātas, Daradas, and Khasās.”

The same thing is affirmed in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsanaparvan, verses 2103 f.: Śakāḥ Yavana-kāmbojās tās tāḥ kshattriya-jātayaḥ | vṛishalatvam parigatūḥ brāhmanūnām adarśanāt | Draviḍāś cha Kalindāś cha Pulindāś chāpy Uśīnarāḥ | Kolisarpāḥ Māhishakās tās tāḥ kshattriya-jātayaḥ ityādi | “These tribes of Kshattriyas, viz. Śakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Drāviḍas, Kalindas, Pulindas, Uśīnaras, Kolisarpas, and Māhishakas, have become Vṛishalas from seeing no Brāhmins.” This is repeated in verses 2158–9, where the following additional tribes are named: Mekalas, Lāṭas, Konvaśiras, Śaunḍikas, Darvas, Chauras, Śavaras, Barbaras, and Kirātas, and the cause of degradation is, as in verse 2103, restricted to the absence of Brāhmins. (Then follow the lines (2160 ff.) in glorification of the Brāhmins, already quoted in p. 130.)

The Yavanas are said in the Mahābhārata, Ādiparvan, section 85, verse 3533, “to be descended from Turvasu, the Vaibhojas from Druhyu, and the Mlechha tribes from Anu” (Yados tu Yādavāḥ jātās Turvasor Yavanāḥ smṛitāḥ | Druhyoḥ sutās tu Vaibhojāḥ Anos tu mlechha-jātayaḥ |). Is it meant by this that the Yavanas are not to be reckoned among the Mlechhas? Their descent from Turvasu is not however, necessarily in conflict with the assertion of the authorities above quoted, that they are degraded Kshattriyas.

I shall not attempt to determine who the Yavanas, and other tribes mentioned in the text, were.

The verse which succeeds that last quoted from Manu is the following: 45. Mukha-bāhūru-paj-jānām yāḥ loke jātayo vahiḥ | mlechha-vāchaś chāryya-vāchaḥ sarve te dasyavaḥ smṛitāḥ | “Those tribes which are outside of the classes produced from the mouth, arms, thighs, and feet, [of Brāhmā, i.e. Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras,] whether they speak the language of the Mlechhas or of the Āryas, are called Dasyus.” The interpretation to be given to this verse turns upon the sense which we assign to "outside" (vāhiḥ). Does it mean that the Dasyus were of a stock originally distinct from that of the four primeval castes, and therefore altogether separate from those tribes which sprang from the intermixture of those four castes, or which, by the neglect of sacred rites, apostatized from their communion? Or does it merely mean that the Dasyus became eventually excluded from the fellowship of the four castes? If the latter sense be adopted, then Dasyu will be little else than a general term embracing all the tribes enumerated in verses 43 and 44. The commentator Kullūka understands the word in the latter sense. His words are: Brāhmaṇa-kshattriya-vaiśya-sūdrāṇāṃ kṛiyā-lopādīnā yāḥ jātayo vāhyāḥ jātāḥ mlechha-bhūṣhā-yuktāḥ āryya-bhūṣhopetāḥ vā te dasyavaḥ sarve smṛitāḥ | "All the tribes, which by loss of sacred rites, and so forth, have become outcasts from the pale of the four castes, Brāhmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras; whether they speak the language of the Mlechhas or of the Āryas, are called Dasyus." His view is confirmed by a short passage in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, quoted above (p. 358), where Viśvāmitra, speaking to his sons, says: "Let your descendants possess the furthest ends (of the country)," and the author of the Brāhmaṇa adds: "These are the numerous border-tribes, the Andhras, Puṇḍras, Subaras, Pulindas, Mūtibas. Most of the Dasyus are sprung from Viśvāmitra." Here the writer of this ancient Brāhmaṇa connects together certain tribes named either in Manu, or in the Mahābhārata, as degraded Kshattriyas, with the appellation Dasyu, thus intimating that the latter was a general name embracing all the former. This view is further confirmed by the following lines of the Mahābhārata, book ii. verses 1031-2: Daradāṇ saha Kāmbojair ajayat Pākāśāsaniḥ | prāgut-tarūṇ diśāṇ ye cha vasanty āsṛitya Dasyavaḥ | "The son of Indra conquered the Daradas with the Kāmbojas, and the Dasyus who dwell in the north-east region;" and still more by the annexed verses from the Droṇaparvan, of the same epic poem, 4747: Kāmbojānām sahasraiścha Sakānām cha viśūmpate | S'avarānām Kirātānām Varvarānām tathaiva cha | agamya-rūpām pṛithivīm māṁsa-śoṇita-karddamām | kṛitavāṁs tatra S'aineyaḥ kshapayaṁs tāvakam balam | Dasyūnām sa-śirastrāṇaiḥ śrobhir lūna-mūrdhajāiḥ | dīrgha-kūrchair mahi kīrṇā vivarhair aṇḍa-jair iva | "Saineya, destroying thy host, converted the beautiful earth into a mass of mud with the flesh and blood of thousands of Kāmbojas, Sakas, Sabaras, Kirātas, and Varvaras. The ground was covered with the shorn and hairless but long-bearded heads of the Dasyus, and their helmets, as if with birds bereft of their plumes." Here the word Dasyu is evidently a general term for the tribes named just before. Some of these same tribes had previously been called Mlechhas in verses 4716, 4723, and 4745. See also Sabhāp. 1198 f.

There is a passage in the Sāntiparvan, section 65, lines 2429 ff, which is worth quoting, as it shows that the Brāhmins of that age regarded the Dasyus as owing allegiance to Brahmanical institutions. King Māndhātṛi had performed a sacrifice in the hope of obtaining a vision of Viṣṇu; who accordingly appeared to him in the form of Indra (verse 2399). The following is a part of their conversation. Māndhātṛi asks :

lindas, Ramathas, Kāmbojas, men sprung from Brāhmanas, and from Kshattriyas, persons of the Vaiśya and Sūdra castes—how shall all these people of different countries practise duty, and what rules shall kings like me prescribe for those who are living as Dasyus? Instruct me on these points; for thou art the friend of our Kshattriya race.’ Indra answers: ‘All the Dasyus should obey their parents, their spiritual directors, persons practising the rules of the four orders, and kings. It is also their duty to perform the ceremonies ordained in the Vedas. They should sacrifice to the Pitṛis, construct wells, buildings for the distribution of water, and resting places for travellers, and should on proper occasions bestow gifts on the Brāhmanas. They should practise innocence, veracity, meekness, purity, and inoffensiveness; should maintain their wives and families; and make a just division of their property. Gifts should be distributed at all sacrifices by those who desire to prosper. All the Dasyus should offer costly pāka oblations. Such duties as these, which have been ordained of old, ought to be observed by all people.’ Māndhātṛi observes: ‘In this world of men, Dasyus are to be seen in all castes, living, under other garbs, even among men of the four orders (āśramas).’ Indra replies: ‘When criminal justice has perished, and the duties of government are disregarded, mankind become bewildered through the wickedness of their kings. When this Kṛita age has come to a close, innumerable mendicants and hypocrites shall arise, and the four orders become disorganized. Disregarding the excellent paths of ancient duty, and impelled by passion and by anger, men shall fall into wickedness,’ etc. In these last lines it is implied that the Brahmanical polity of castes and orders was fully developed in the Kṛita [or golden] age. This idea, however, is opposed to the representations which we find in some though not in all other passages. See above, the various texts adduced in the first chapter.

In the Vishṇu Purāṇa, Bhāratavarsha (India) is said to “have its eastern border occupied by the Kirātas; and the western by the Yavanas; while the middle is inhabited by Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, engaged in their several fixed occupations of sacrifice, war, trade, etc.” (Vishṇu Purāṇa, ii. 3, 7. Purve Kirātāḥ yasyānte paśchime Yavanāḥ sthitāḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyāḥ vaiśyāḥ madhye sūdrāḥ cha bhāgaśaḥ | ijjā-yuddha-vanijyādyair varttayanto vyavasthithāḥ |).

Manu's account of the origin of the Yavanas, Sakas, Kāmbojas, etc., corresponds with the tenor of the following story, which we find in the fourth book of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, sect. 3. Bāhu, the seventh king in descent from Hariśchandra (see above, p. 379) was overcome by the Haihāyas and Tālajanghas,³ and compelled to fly with his queens to the forests, where he died. After his death one of his wives gave birth to a son, who received the name of Sagara. When he had grown up, the youth learnt from his mother all that had befallen his father.

Para. 18. Tataḥ pitṛi-rājya-haraṇāmarśhito Haihaya-Tālajanghādibadhāya pratijnām akarot prāyaśāścha Haihayān jaghāna | S'aka-Yavana-Kāmboja-Pārada-Pahlavāḥ hanyamānās tat-kula-guruṁ Vasiṣṭham śaraṇam yayuh | 19. Atha etān Vasiṣṭho jīvan-mṛitakān kṛtvā Sagaram āha "vatsa vatsa alam ebhir ati-jīvan-mṛitakair anusṛitaiḥ | 20. Ete cha mayā eva tvat-pratijnā-paripūlanūya nija-dharma-dvija-sanga-parityāgam kṛitāḥ | 21. Sa "tathā" iti tad guru-vachanam abhinandya teshāṁ veshānyatvam akārayat | Yavanān apamunḍita-śiraśo 'rddhamunḍān Sakān pralamba-keśān Pārādān Pahlavāṁś cha śmaśru-dharān niḥ-svādhyāya-vāśhaṭkārān etān anyāṁś cha kṣhattriyaṁ chakāra | te cha nija-dharma-parityāgād brāhmaṇaiś parityaktāḥ mlechhatām yayuh |

"Being vexed at the loss of his paternal kingdom, he vowed to exterminate the Haihāyas and other enemies who had conquered it. Accordingly he destroyed nearly all the Haihāyas. When the Sakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, and Pahlavas were about to undergo a similar fate, they had recourse to Vasiṣṭha, the king's family-priest, who interposed in their behalf in these words addressed to Sagara, representing them as virtually dead: 'You have done enough, my son, in the way of pursuing these men, who are as good as dead. In order that your vow might be fulfilled, I have compelled them to abandon the duties of their caste, and all association with the twice-born.' Agreeing to his spiritual guide's proposal, Sagara compelled these tribes to alter their costume. He made the Yavanas shave their heads, the Sakas shave half their heads, the Pāradas wear long hair, and the Pahlavas beards. These and other Kshatriyas he deprived of the study of the Vedas, and the vashatkāra. In consequence of their abandonment of their proper duties, and of their desertion by the Brāhmins, they became Mlechhas."

This story is also related in the Harivaṃśa, from which I extract the concluding part of the narrative :

773. Aurvas tu jātakarmādi tasya kṛtvā mahātmanah | adhyāpya vedaṇ akhilān tato 'stram pratyapūdayat | āgneyam tu mahābāhur amarair api dussaham | sa tenāstra-balenājau balena cha samanvitaḥ | Haihayān nijaghānāsu kruddho Rudrah pasūn iva | ājahāra cha lokeshu kīrtīm kīrtimatām varaḥ | tataḥ Sakān sa-yavanān Kāmbojān Pāradāms tathā | Pahlavāms chaiva niśśeshān karttū vyavasitaḥ kila | te badhyamānāḥ vireṇa Sagareṇa mahātmanā | Vasiṣṭhām śaraṇam gatvā pranipetur manīṣiṇam | Vasiṣṭhas tv atha tām dṛṣṭvā samayena mahādutyaiḥ | Sagaram vṛayāmāsa teshām dattvā 'bhyam tadā | Sagarah svām pratijnām cha guror vākyaṁ nīṣāmya cha | dharmam jaghāna teshām vai veśānyatvaṁ chakāra ha | arddham Sakānām śirasō mundaḥkṛtvā vyasarjayat | Yavanānām śiraḥ sarvaṁ Kāmbojānām tathaiva cha | Pāradāḥ mukta-keśāścha Pahlavāḥ śmaśru-dhārīṇaḥ | niṣṣvādhyāya-vashatkārāḥ kṛtās tena mahātmanā | Sakāḥ Yavana-kāmbojāḥ Pāradāḥ Pahlavās tathā | Koli-sarpāḥ sa-Mahishāḥ Dārvas Cholāḥ sa-Keralāḥ | sarve te kṣhattriyaś tātā teshām dharmo nirākṛitaḥ | Vasiṣṭha-vachanād rājan Sagareṇa mahātmanā |

"Aurva having performed Sagara's natal and other rites, and taught him all the Vedas, then provided him with a fiery missile, such as even the gods could not withstand. By the power of this weapon, and accompanied by an army, Sagara, incensed, speedily slew the Haihayas, as Rudra slaughters beasts; and acquired great renown throughout the world. He then set himself to exterminate the Sakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, and Pahlavas. But they, when on the point of being slaughtered by Sagara, had recourse to the sage Vasiṣṭha, and fell down before him. Vasiṣṭha beholding them, by a sign restrained Sagara, giving them assurance of protection. Sagara, after considering his own vow, and listening to what his teacher had to say, destroyed their caste (dharma), and made them change their costumes. He released the Sakas, after causing the half of their heads to be shaven;—and the Yavanas and Kāmbojas, after having had their heads entirely shaved. The Pāradas were made to wear long hair, and the Pahlavas to wear beards. They were all excluded from the study of the Vedas, and from the yashatkāra. The Sakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Kolisarpas, Mahishas, Dārvas, Gholas, and Keralas had all been Kshattriyas; but were deprived of their social and religious position by the great Sagara, according to the advice of Vaśiṣṭha." Other tribes are mentioned in the following line who seem to have undergone the same treatment.

It would appear from this legend, as well as from the quotations which preceded it, that the Epic and Puranic writers believed all the surrounding tribes to belong to the same original stock with themselves; though they, at the same time, erroneously imagined that these tribes had fallen away from the Brahmanical institutions; thus assigning to their own polity an antiquity to which it could in reality lay no claim. Any further explanations on these points, however, must be sought in the second volume of this work.

In the passages quoted above, pp. 391, 393, and 398 from the Mahābhārata and Rāmāyaṇa, it is stated that Sakas, Yavanas, Pahlavas, etc., were created by Vaśiṣṭha's wonder-working cow, in order to repel the aggression of Viśvāmitra. It does not, however, appear that it is the object of that legend to represent this miraculous creation as the origin of those tribes. The narrators, if they had any distinct meaning, may not have intended anything more than that the cow called into existence large armies, of the same stock with particular tribes previously existing.

It is not very easy to say whether it is only the inhabitants of Bhāratavarsha (viz. that portion of Jambudvīpa which answers to India) whom the Puranic writers intend to represent as deriving their origin from the four primeval Indian castes. Perhaps the writers themselves had no very clear ideas. At all events the conditions of life are different in the two cases. The accounts which these writers give us of the other divisions of Jambudvīpa, and of the other Dvīpas, or continents, of which they imagined the earth to be composed, and their respective inhabitants, will be considered in the next chapter.

CHAPTER VI.

EXTERIOR TO BHĀRATAVARSHA, OR INDIA.

It will clearly appear from the contents of the present chapter that the authors or compilers of the Purāṇas in reality knew nothing of any part of the world except that immediately around them. Whenever they wander away beyond their own neighbourhood, they at once lose themselves in a misty region of fiction, and give the most unbridled scope to their fantastic imaginations.

The following is the account given in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa regarding the divisions of the earth, and their inhabitants. Priyavrata, son of Śvāyambhuva, or the first Manu (see above, pp. 65 and 72) who is separated from the present time by an enormous interval (see pp. 43 ff. and 298, above), "distributed the seven dvīpas,¹ of which the earth is composed, among seven of his sons" (ii. 1, 7. Priyavrato dadau teshām saptānām muni-sattama | vibhajya sapta dvīpāni Maitreya sumahāt-manām).

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa gives us the following account, v. 1. 30. Tad anabhinandan sama-javena rathena jyotirmayena rajanīm api dinām kari-shyāmi iti saptakṛtvas taranīm anuparyyakrāmad dvitīyaḥ iva patan-gaḥ | [evaṁ kurvāṇam Priyavratam āgatya Chaturānanas "tavādhikāro 'yaṁ na bhavati" iti nivārayāmāsa] (The words in brackets are not in the Bombay edition, but are taken from Burnouf's.) 31. *Ye vai u ha tad-ratha-charaṇa-nemi-kṛta-parikhātās te sapta sindhavaḥ āsan yataḥ eva kṛitūḥ sapta bhuvo dvīpāḥ |*² "Priyavrata, being dissatisfied that only

² In this passage we find the particles vai, u, ha, occurring all together as they do in the Vedic hymns and Brūhmaṇas. This circumstance might seem to suggest the half the earth was illuminated at one time by the solar rays, "followed the sun seven times round the earth in his own flaming car of equal velocity, like another celestial orb, resolved to turn night into day. [Brahmā, however, came and stopped him, saying this was not his province.] The ruts which were formed by the motion of his chariot wheels were the seven oceans. In this way the seven continents of the earth were made."

The same circumstance is alluded to at the commencement of the 16th section of the same book, where the king says to the rishi: verse 2. Tattrūpi Priyavrata-ratha-charaṇa-parikhātāḥ saptabhiḥ sapta-sindhavaḥ upakṛiptāḥ | yataḥ etasyāḥ sapta-dvīpa-viśeṣa-vikalpas trayā bhagavan khalu sūchitāḥ | "The seven oceans were formed by the seven ruts of the wheels of Priyavrata's chariot; hence, as you have indicated, the earth has become divided into seven different continents."

It is clear that this account given by the Bhāgavata Purāṇa of the manner in which the seven oceans and continents were formed does not agree with the description in the Vishnu Purāṇa as quoted above in p. 51.

These seven continents are called "Jāmbū dvīpa, Plakṣha dvīpa, Sāl-possibility of the passage, or its substance, being derived from some of the Brāhmanas (to which, as we have seen, p. 155 note, the compiler of this Purāṇa was in the habit of resorting for his materials); but the style has otherwise nothing of an archaic caste, and I am not aware that the dvīpas are mentioned in any of the Brāhmanas. It is also remarkable that the words sapta sindhavaḥ are here used for "seven oceans." This phrase occurs several times in the Vedas. For instance, it is to be found in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (of the Yajur-veda), 38, 26, yōvatī dyāvā-prithivī yūvach cha sapta sindhavo vitasthīre | "As wide as are the earth and sky, and as far as the seven oceans extend." The commentator Mahādhara understands the latter in the Puranic sense, as the oceans of milk, etc. (sapta sindhavaḥ sapta samudrāḥ kahīrādīyāḥ). The hemistich I have quoted from the Vāj. Sanhitā occurs somewhat modified, and in a different connexion, in the Atharva-veda, iv. 6, 2. The same phrase, sapta sindhavaḥ, is to be found also in several places in the first Book of the Rīg-veda. (See Benfey's Glossary to Sāma-veda, sub voce saptan.) In Rīg-veda i. 32, 12, it is said to Indra avāṣṛjāḥ sartinave sapta sindhūn | "Thou hast let loose the seven rivers to flow." Sāyaṇa understands this of the Ganges and other rivers, seven in number, mentioned in the Rīg Veda, x. 75, 5: īmam me Gange Yamune Sarasvatī S'utudrī stomaṁ sachatū Parushṇya | "Receive this my hymn with favour, o Gāṅgā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, S'utudrī, with the Parushṇī, etc.;" but in this distich ten rivers in all are mentioned. (See Wilson's note to Rīg-veda, i. 32, 12, vol. i. p. 88, of his translation). See also hymns 34, 8; 35, 8; 71, 7; and 102, 2, of the first, and 58, 12, and 85, 1, of the eighth Books of the Rīg-veda. The "seven rivers" of the Veda are, according to Professor Müller (Chips from a German Workshop, vol. i. p. 63), "the Indus, the five rivers of the Punjab and the Sarasvatī."

nali dvīpa, Kuśa dvīpa, Krauncha dvīpa, Sāka dvīpa, and Pushkara dvīpa. They are surrounded severally by seven great seas, of salt water, sugarcane juice, wine, clarified butter, curds, milk, and fresh water" (V.P. ii. 2, Jambū-plakṣāhwayau dvīpau S'ālmaliś chāparo dvīja | Kuśaḥ Kraunchas tathā S'ākaḥ Pushkaraś chaiva sapta mahā | 5. Ete dvīpāḥ samudraḥ u sapta saptabhir āvṛitāḥ | lavāṇekṣhu-surā-sarpir-dadhi-dugdha-jalāiḥ samam |). Jambu dvīpa is in the centre of all these continents (Wilson, vol. ii. p. 110). It fell to the lot of Agnīdhra, son of Priyavrata, who again divided it among his nine sons (Wilson, ii. 101). In the centre of Jambu dvīpa is the golden mountain Meru, 84,000 yojanas high, and crowned by the great city of Brāhmā (ibid. p. 118). There are in this continent six cross-ranges of boundary-mountains, those of Himavat = Himādri, or Himālaya), Hemakūṭa, and Nishadha lying south of Meru; and those of Nīla, Śrēta, and Śringin, situated to the northward. Of these, Nishadha and Nīla are the nearest to Meru, while Himavat and Śringin are at the south and north extremities. The nine Varshas or divisions of Jambu dvīpa, separated by these and other ranges, are Bhārata (India), south of the Himavat mountains, and the southernmost of all; then (2) Kimpurusha, (3) Harivarsha, (4) Ilāvṛita, (5) Rāmyaka, (6) Hiraṇmaya, and (7) Uttara Kuru, each to the north of the last; while (8) Bhadrāśva and (9) Ketumāla lie respectively to the east and west of Ilāvṛita, the central region. Bhārata Varsha, and Uttara Kuru, as well as Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla, are situated on the exterior of the mountain ranges. (Wilson, ii. pp. 114-116, and 123.) The eight Varshas to the north of Bhārata Varsha (or India) are thus described :

V.P. ii. 1, 11. Yāni Kimpurushādīni varshāṇy ashtau mahāmuno | teshāṃ svābhāviki siddhiḥ sukha-prāyā hy ayatnataḥ | 12. Viparyaya

* The Mahābhārata tells us, Bhīṣmaparvan, verses 227-8, in regard to the Varsha of Ketumāla : āyur daśa sahasrāṇi varshānām tatra Bhārata | suvarṇa-varṇāś cha narāḥ striyaś chāpsarasopamāḥ | anāmayaḥ vīta-śokāḥ nityam mudita-mānasāḥ | āyante minavās tatra nishāpta-kanaka-prabhāḥ | "The people there live ten thousand years. The men are of the colour of gold, and the women fair as celestial nymphs. Men are born there of the colour of burnished gold, live free from sickness and sorrow, and enjoy perpetual happiness." The men by the side of the mountain Bandhamādāna, west of Meru, are said (v. 231) "to be black, of great strength and vigour, while the women are of the colour of blue lotuses, and very beautiful" (tatra rishabhāḥ narāḥ rājās tejo-yuktāḥ mahābalāḥ | striyaś choṭpala-varṇābhāḥ sarvā yunimā-darśanāḥ).

nottamādhama-madhyamāḥ | na teshv asti yugūtassthā kṣhetreshv aśṭasv
sarcadā |*

"In the eight Varshas, called Kimpurusha and the rest (i.e. in all except Bhārata Varsha) the inhabitants enjoy a natural perfection attended with complete happiness obtained without exertion. There is there no vicissitude, nor decrepitude, nor death, nor fear; no distinction of virtue and vice, none of the inequalities denoted by the words best, worst, and intermediate, nor any change resulting from the succession of the four yugas." And again :

ii. 2, 35. *Yāni Kimpurushādyaṇi varshāṇy aśṭau mahāmune | na
teshu śoko nāyāso nodvega-kṣud-bhayādikam | susthāḥ prajāḥ nirātankāḥ
sarva-duḥkha-vivarjitaḥ |* 36. Dāśa-dvādāśa-varshāṇām sahasrāṇi sthirayushaḥ | na teshu varshate devo bhaumyaṇy ambhāmṣi teshu vai | 37.
Kṛita-tretādikā naiva teshu sthāneshu kalpanā |

"In those eight Varshas there is neither grief, nor weariness, nor anxiety, nor hunger, nor fear. The people live in perfect health, free from every suffering, for ten or twelve thousand years. Indra does not rain on those Varshas, for they have abundance of springs. There is there no division of time into the Kṛita, Tretā, and other ages."

The Uttara Kurus, it should be remarked, may have been a real people, as they are mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 14: 4

"Then in the northern region during six days on which the Panchaviṁśa stoma was recited, the Viśve-devas inaugurated him (Indra) for glorious dominion with these three rik-verses, this yajush-verse, and these mystic monosyllables. Wherefore the several nations who dwell in this northern quarter, beyond the Himavat, the Uttara Kurus and the Uttara Madras, are consecrated to glorious dominion (vairājya), and people term them the glorious (virāj)."⁴ See Colebrooke's Misc. Essays,

⁴ Quoted by Weber in Ind. St. i. 218.

In another passage of the same work,⁶ however, the Uttara Kurus are treated as belonging to the domain of mythology :

Ait. Br. viii. 23. Etāṁ ha vai aindram mahābhishekam Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātahavyo'tyarātaye Jānantapaye provācha | tasmād u Atyarātiṛ Jānantapir arājā san vidyayā samantaṁ sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan pariyūya | sa ha uvācha Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātyahavyaḥ "ajaishār vai samantaṁ sarvataḥ prithivīm mahad mā gamaya" iti | sa ha uvācha Atyarātiṛ Jānantapir "yadā brāhmaṇa uttara-kurūn jayeyāṁ tvam u ha eva prithivyaī rājā syāḥ senāpatir eva te 'haṁ syām" iti | sa ha uvācha Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātyahavyo "deva-kshettraṁ vai tad na vai tad marttyo jetum arhaty adrukshe me ū'taḥ idaṁ dade" iti | tato ha Atyarātiṁ Jānantapim ātta-vīryam niśśukram amitra-tapanāḥ Sushmināḥ Sāvīro rājā jaghāna | tasmād evaṁ-vidushe brāhmaṇīya evaṁ-chakrushe kshattriyo na druhyed na id rāshṭrād avapadyeyad (?) na id vāma-prāno jahad itḥ |

"Sātyahavya of the family of Vāsishṭha declared this great inauguration similar to Indra's to Atyarāti, son of Jānantapa; and in consequence Atyarāti, though not a king, by his knowledge, went round the earth on every side to its ends, reducing it to subjection. Sātyahavya then said to him, 'Thou hast subdued the earth in all directions to its limits; exalt me now to greatness.' Atyarāti replied, 'When, o Brāhmaṇ, I conquer the Uttara Kurus, thou shalt be king of the earth, and I will be only thy general.' Sātyahavya rejoined, 'That is the realm of the gods; no mortal may make the conquest of it: Thou hast wronged me; therefore I take all this away from thee.' In consequence Sushmina, king of the Sīvis, vexed of his foes, slew Atyarāti son of Jānantapa who had been bereft of his valour and energy. Wherefore let no Kshattriya wrong a Brāhmaṇ who possesses such knowledge and has so acted, lest he should be expelled from his kingdom, be short-lived, and perish."

The Uttara Kurus are also mentioned in the description of the northern region in the Kishkindhā Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, 43, 38, Uttarāḥ Kuravas tatra kṛita-punya-pratiśrāyaḥ | "There are the Uttara Kurus, the abodes of those who have performed works of merit," ai In v. 57 it is said: na kathanchana gantavyāṁ kurūnām uttarena vaḥ | anyeshām api bhūtānām nānukrāmati vai gatiḥ | "You must not go to the north of the Kurus: other beings also may not proceed further."

In the same way when Arjuna, in his career of conquest, arrives at the country of the Uttara Kurus in Harivarsha, he is thus addressed by the guards at the gate of the city, M. Bh. Sabhāparvan, 1045 :

Pārtha nedaṁ trayā śakyam puraṁ jetuṁ kathanchana | upāvarttasva kalyāṇa paryāptam idam Achyuta | idam puram yaḥ pravīṣed dhruvaṁ na sa bhaved naraḥ | . . . na chāttra kinchij jetaryam Arjunāttra pradriśyate | Uttarāḥ Kuravo hy ete nāttra yuddham pravarttate | pravīṣto 'pi hi Kaunteya neha drakshyasi kinchana | na hi mānusha-dehena śakyam attrābhivīkshitum |

"Thou canst not, son of Prithā, subdue this city. Refrain, fortunate man, for it is completely secure. He who shall enter this city must be certainly more than man. . . . Nor is there anything to be seen here which thou canst conquer. Here are the Uttara Kurus, whom no one attempts to assail. And even if thou shouldst enter, thou couldst behold nothing. For no one can perceive anything here with human senses."⁶

Aho saha śarīreṇa prāpto 'smi paramām gatim | Uttarūn vā Kurūn punyān athavā 'py Amarāvatim |

"I have attained, even in my embodied condition, to the heavenly state; or to the holy Northern Kurus, or to Amarāvati [the city of Indra]!"

"The country to the north of the ocean, and to the south of the Himādri (or snowy range), is Bhārata Varsha, where the descendants of Bharata dwell" (V.P. ii. 3, 1. Uttaram yad samudrasya Himādreśhaiva dakṣiṇam | varṣam tad Bhārataṁ nāma Bhārati yatra santatiḥ). It is divided into nine parts (bhedāḥ), Indradvīpa, Kaśerumat, Tāmarāṇa, Gābhāstimāt, Nāgadvīpa, Saumya, Gāndharva, Vāruṇa; and 'this ninth dvīpa,' which is not named, is said to be "surrounded by the ocean" ayaṁ tu navamas teshām dvīpaḥ sūgara-saṁvṛitaḥ), and to be a thousand yojanas long from north to south. "On the east side of it are the Kirātas, on the west the Yavanas, and in the centre are the Brāhmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras, following their respective occupations of sacrifice, arms, trade, etc." (The text of this passago, V.P. ii. 3, 7, has been already quoted in p. 485).

The Vishṇu Purāṇa contains a very short list of the tribes inhabiting Bhārata Varsha. (See Wilson, vol. ii. pp. 132 f.) It specifies, as the principal, only the Kurus, Pāṇchālas, the people of Kāmarūpa, the Puṇḍras, Kalingas, Magadhas, Saurāshṭras, Sūras, Bhīras, Arbudas, Kārūshas, Mālavas, Sauvīras, Saindhavas, Hūṇas, Śālvas, Śākālas, Madras, Rāmas, Ambashṭhas, and Pārasīkas.⁷ These tribes seem to be all confined to India and its vicinity.

The praises of Bhārata Varsha are celebrated as follows:

V.P. ii. 3, 11. *Chatvāri Bhārata varshe yugūny atra mahāmune | kṛitām tretā dvāparaś cha kaliś chānyatra na kvachit | 12. Tapas tapyanti yatayo juhvate chāttra yajvinah | dānāni chāttra diyante paralokārtham ādarāt | purushair yajna-purusho Jambu-dvīpe sadejyate | yajnair yajna-mayo Viṣṇur anyā-dvīpeṣhu chānyathā | 13. "In Bhārata Varsha and nowhere else, do the four Yugas, Kṛita, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali exist. 12. Here devotees perform austerities, and priests sacrifice; here gifts are bestowed, to testify honour, for the sake of the future world. In Jambudvīpa Viṣṇu, the sacrificial Man, whose essence is sacrifice, is continually worshipped by men with sacrifices; and in other ways in the other dvīpas.⁸ 13. In this respect Bhārata is the most excellent division of Jambudvīpa; for this is the land of works, while the others are places of enjoyment. Perhaps in a thousand thousand births, a living being obtains here that most excellent condition, humanity, the receptacle of virtue. The gods sing, 'Happy are those beings, who, when the rewards of their merits have been exhausted in heaven, are, after being gods, again born as men in Bhārata Varsha; (14) who, when born in that land of works, resign to the supreme and eternal Vishṇu their works, without regard to their fruits, and attain by purity to absorption in him. 15. We know not where we shall next attain a corporeal condition, when the merit of our works shall have become exhausted; but happy are those men who exist in Bhārata Varsha with perfect senses.' ”

⁸ "In other ways,' i.e. in the form of Soma, Vāyu, Śrīya, etc." (Anyathā Soma-vāyu-sūryyūdi-rūpaḥ |). Commentator.

Tattrāpi Bhāratam eva varshaṁ karma-kṣhetram anyāny aṣṭa-varshāni svargiṇām punya-śeshopabhoga-sthānāni bhaumāni svarga-padāni vyapadiśanti | 12. Eshu purushāṇām ayuta-purushāyur-varshāṇām deva-kalpāṇām nūgāyuta-prāṇānām rāja-saṁhanana-vayo-moda-pramudita-mahāsurata-mithuna-vyavāyūpararga-varsha-dhṛitaika-garbha-kalatrūṇām tretā-yuga-samāḥ kālo varttate |

“Of these, Bhāratavarsha alone is the land of works: the other eight Varshas are places where the celestials enjoy the remaining rewards of their works; they are called terrestrial paradises. 12. In them men pass an existence equal to that of the Tretā age, living for the space of ten thousand ordinary lives, on an equality with gods, having the vitality of ten thousand elephants, and possessed of wives who bear one child after a year's conception following upon sexual intercourse attended by all the gratification arising from adamantine bodies and from vigorous youth.”

The commentator remarks on verse 11 : Dirya-bhauma-bila-bhedāt trividhaḥ svargaḥ | tatra bhauma-svargasya padāni sthānāni vyapadiśanti | “Heaven is of three kinds, in the sky, on earth, and in the abyss. Here the other Varshas are called terrestrial heavens.”

It is curious to remark that in the panegyric on Bhārata Varsha it is mentioned as one of the distinguishing advantages of that division of Jambudvīpa that sacrifice is performed there, though, a little further on, it is said to be practised in Sūlmali dvīpa also.

It would at first sight appear from the preceding passage (ii. 3, 11) of the Vishṇu Purāṇa (as well as from others which we shall encounter below), to be the intention of the writer to represent the inhabitants of Bhārata Varsha as a different race, or, at least as living under quite different conditions, from the inhabitants of the other dvīpas, and even of the other divisions (varshas) of Jambu dvīpa itself. From the use of the word mānushya (humanity) here applied to the inhabitants of Bhārata Varsha, viewed in reference to the context, it would seem to be a natural inference that all the people exterior to it were beings of a different race. Yet in the descriptions of Kuśa dvīpa and Pushkara dvīpa (see below) the words manujāḥ and mānavāḥ "descendants of Manu," or "men," are applied to the dwellers in those continents. In the passage of the Jātimālā, moreover, translated by Mr. Colebrooke (Misc. Essays, ii. 179), we are told that "a chief of the twice-born tribe was brought by Vishṇu's eagle from Sāka dvīpa; thus have Sāka dvīpa Brāhmans become known in Jambu dvīpa." According to this verse, too, there should be an affinity of race between the people of these two dvīpas. It is also to be noted that the descendants of Priyavrata became kings of all the dvīpas, as well as of all the varshas of Jambu dvīpa (see above, pp. 489, 491). And in the passage quoted above, p. 478, from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 11, 3, it is said of Arjuna, son of Kṛitavīrya, that he was "lord of the seven dvīpas," "that he ruled over the earth with all its dvīpas." If, however, the kings were of the human race, it is natural to infer the same of the people.

But, in a subject of this sort, where the writers were following the suggestions of imagination only, it is to be expected that we should find inconsistencies.

Jambu dvīpa is surrounded by a sea of salt water (Wilson, V.P. ii. 109); and that sea again is bounded on its outer side by the dvīpa or continent of Plaksha running all round it. (V.P. ii. 4, 1. Kṣhārodena yathā dvīpo Jambu-sanjño 'bhiveshṭitaḥ | sañveshṭya kṣhāram udadhim Plaksha-dvīpas tathā sthitaḥ). According to this scheme the several continents and seas form concentric circles, Jambu dvīpa being a circular island occupying the centre of the system.

Plaksha dvīpa is of twice the extent of Jambu dvīpa. The character and condition of its inhabitants are described as follows:

V. P. ii. 4, 5. Nā chaivāsti yugāvasthā teshu sthāneshu saptasu | 6. Tretā-yuga-samāḥ kālāḥ sarvadaiva mahāmato | Plaksha-dvīpādīshu brahman Sākadvīpāntāḍkeshu vai | 7. Pancha-varsha-sahasrāṇi janāḥ jīvanty anāmayaḥ | dharmāḥ panchasv athaiteshu varnāśrama-vibhāga-jāḥ |

* Purāṇavas is said to have possessed thirteen islands (dvīpas) of the ocean (above p. 307).

chaiva Tivāsāḥ Bhāvinaś cha ye | vipra-kshattriya-vaiśyās te sūdrās cha
muni-sattama |*

“In those seven provinces [which compose Plaksha dvīpa] the division of time into Yugas does not exist: but the character of existence is always that of the Tretā age. In the [five] dvīpas, beginning with Plaksha and ending with Sāka, the people live 5000 years, free from sickness. In those five dvīpas duties arise from the divisions of castes and orders. There are there also four castes, Āryyakas, Kurus, Vivāsas, and Bhāvins, who are the Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras,” and whose worship is thus described :

9. *Ijyate tatra bhagavāns tair varṇair Aryyakādibhiḥ | soma-rūpī
jagat-sraśṭā sarvaḥ sarveśvaro Hariḥ |* “Hari who is All, and the lord of all, and the creator of the world, is adored in the form of Soma by these classes, the Āryyakas, etc.”

The inhabitants of this dvīpa receive different names in the Bhāga-vata Purāṇa, being there called (v. 20, 4) “Hansas, Patangas, Ūrdhvāyanas, and Satyāngas, four castes, who, purified from passion and darkness by the touch of the waters of these rivers, live a thousand years, resemble the gods in their appearance and in their manner of procreation, and worship with the triple Veda the divine Soul, the Sun, who is the gate of heaven, and who is co-essential with the Vedas” (Yāsūṁ jalopasparśana-vidhūta-rajasa-tamaso Hāmśa-patangorddhvāyana-satyānga-sanjñās chatvāra varṇāḥ sahasrāyusho vibudhopama-sandarśana-prajananāḥ svarga-dvāraṁ trayyā vidyayā bhagavantaṁ trayīmayaṁ sūryam ātmānaṁ yajante).

In regard to Plaksha and the other four following dvīpas, the Bhāga-vata Purāṇa says, ibid. para. 6, that “their men are all alike in respect of natural perfection as shewn in length of life, senses, vigour, force, strength, intelligence, and courage” (Plakshādishu panchasu puruṣhāṇām āyur intriyam ojaḥ saho balam buddhir vikramaḥ iti cha sarveśhām outpattikī siddhir aviśeshena varttate |).

Plaksha dvīpa is surrounded by a sea of sugar-cane juice of the same compass as itself. ii. 4, 9, Plaksha - dvīpa - pramāṇena Plaksha - dvīpaḥ samāvṛitaḥ | tathāivekeshu-rasodena pariveśānukāriṇā | Round the outer margin of this sea, and twice as extensive, runs Sālmala dvīpa (verse 11. S'ālmalena samudro 'sau dvīpenekshu-rasodakaḥ | vistara- dviguṇenātha sarvataḥ saṃvṛitaḥ sthitaḥ |). It is divided into seven Varshas, or divisions. Of their inhabitants it is said :

V. P. ii. 4, 12. Saptaitāni tu varshāṇi chāturvarnya-yutāni cha | Sālmale ye tu varnās cha vasanti te mahāmune | kapilās chāruṇāḥ pītūḥ kṛishnās chaiva prīthak prīthak | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyāḥ vaiśyāḥ śūdrās chaiva yajanti te | bhagavantaṃ samastasya Viṣṇum ātmānam avyayam | Vāyubhūtam makha-śreṣṭhāir yajvino yajna-saṃsthitam | 13. Devānām atra sānnidhyam atīva sumanoharam |

“These seven Varshas have a system of four castes. The castes which dwell there are severally the Kapilas, Aruṇas, Pitas, and Kṛishṇas (or the Tawny, the Purple, the Yellow, and the Black). These, the Brāhmanas, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, worship with excellent sacrifices Viṣṇu, the divine and imperishable Soul of all things, in the form of Vāyu, and abiding in sacrifice. Here the vicinity of the gods is very delightful to the soul.”

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa says of this dvīpa, v. 20, 11 : Tad-varsha-purushāḥ Śrutadhara-vīryadhara-vasundharaśhundhara-saṃjñāḥ bhagavantaṃ vedamayaṃ somam ātmānaṃ vedena yajante | “The men of the different divisions of this dvīpa, called Śrutadharas, Vīryadharas, Vasundharas, and Ishundharas, worship with the Veda the divine Soul Soma, who is co-essential with the Veda.”

This dvīpa is surrounded by a sea of wine of the same compass as itself (v. 13. Esha dvīpaḥ samudreṇa surodene saṃvṛitaḥ | vistārāc chhālmalasyaiva samena tu samantataḥ). The exterior shore of this sea is encompassed by Kuśa dvīpa, which is twice as extensive as Sālmala dvīpa (v. 13. Surodakaḥ parivṛitaḥ Kuśadvīpena sarvataḥ | Sālmalasya tu vistārād dviguṇena samantataḥ). The inhabitants of Kuśa dvīpa are thus described, V.P. ii 4, 14 :

Tasyāṃ vasanti manuḥjāḥ saha Daiteya-dānavaiḥ | tathaiva deva-gandharva - yaksha - kimpurushādayaḥ | varnās tattrāpi chatvāro nijānushṭhāna-tatparāḥ | Dāmīnāḥ S'ushmīnāḥ Snehāḥ Mandehās cha mahāmune | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyāḥ vaiśyāḥ śūdrās chānukramoditāḥ | 15. Yathokta-karma-kartṛitvāt svādhikāra-kṣayāya te | tatra te tu Kuśa-dvīpe Brahma-rūpaṃ Janārddanam | yajantaḥ kṣapayanty ugram adhikāram phala-pradam |

“In this set of Varshas (of Kuśa dvīpa) dwell men with Daityas, Dānavas, Devas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Kimpurushas, and other beings.

There, too, there are four castes, pursuing their proper observances, Damins, Sushmins, Snehas, and Mandhas, who in the order specified are Brāhmana, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras. In order to destroy their right [to reward] derived from the performance of these works, they worship Janārdana in the form of Brahma, and so neutralize this direful merit which brings rewards."

Of Kuśa dvīpa the Mahābhārata tells us, Bhīshmaparvan, verses 455-7: Eteshu deva-gandharvāḥ prajāścha jagatīśvara | viharante ramante cha na teshu mriyate janaḥ | na teshu dasyarah santi mlechha-jātyo 'pi vā nṛipa | gaura-prāyo janaḥ sarraḥ sukumāras cha pārthiva | "In these (Varshas of Kuśa dvīpa), gods, Gandharvas, and living creatures, amuse and enjoy themselves. No one dies there. There are no Dasyus or Mlechhas there. The people are fair, and of very delicate forms." The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, v. 20, 16, says, "The people of this dvīpa are called Kuśalas, Kovidas, Abhiyuktas, and Kulakas" (Kuśa-dvīpaukasah Kuśala-kovidābhiyukta-kulaka-sanjnāḥ |).

Around this sea runs Krauncha dvīpa which is twice as large as Kuśa dvīpa. The V. P. says, ii. 4, 19: Sarveshv eteshu ramyeshu varsha-saila-vareshu cha | nivasanti nirātankūḥ saha deva-gaṇaiḥ prajāḥ | Pushkarāḥ Pushkalāḥ Dhanyās Tishmās chāttra mahāmune | brāhmaṇāḥ kshattriyāḥ vaiśyāḥ sūdrās chānukramoditāḥ | "In all these pleasant division-mountains of this dvīpa the people dwell, free from fear, in the society of the gods. [These people are] the Pushkaras, Pushkulas, Dhanyas, and Tishmas, who, as enumerated in order, are the Brāhmana, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras." The inhabitants of this dvīpa are called in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, v. 20, 22, " . . . Purushas, Rishabhas, Dravinas, and Devakas" (Purusharshabha-dravina-devaka-sanjnāḥ). This dvīpa is encompassed by the sea of curds, which is of the same circumference as itself. The sea again, on its exterior edge, is surrounded by Sāka dvīpa,¹⁰ a continent twice the size of Krauncha dvīpa.

Of Sāka dvīpa it is said in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, ii. 4, 23 ff. :

Tattra punyāḥ janapadās chāturvarṇya-samanvitāḥ | nadyas chāttra mahāpunyāḥ sarva-pāpa-bhayāpahāḥ | . . . tāḥ pibanti mudā yuktāḥ Jaladādishu ye sthitāḥ | varsheshu te janapadāḥ svargād abhyetya me-

¹⁰ In the M. Dh. (Bhīshmap. v. 408 ff.) Sākadvīpa comes next after Jambudvīpa.

dinim | 24. Dharma-hānir na teshv asti na sangharshaḥ parasparam | maryādā-vyutikramo nāpi teshu deśeshu saptaśu | 25. Magās cha Māga-dhās chaiva Mānasāḥ Mandagās tathā | Magāḥ brāhmaṇa-bhūyishṭhāḥ Māgadhāḥ kshattriyās tu te | Vaiśyās tu Mānasāḥ jneyāḥ śūdrās teshāṃ tu Mandagāḥ | 26. Sākadvīpe tu tair Viṣṇuḥ sūrya-rūpa-dhara mune | yathoktair iḡyate samyak karmabhir niyatātmaabhiḥ |

"There there are holy countries, peopled by persons belonging to the four castes; and holy rivers which remove all sin and fear. . . . The people who dwell in these divisions, Jalada, etc. [of Sāka dvīpa], drink these rivers with pleasure, even when they have come to earth from Svarga. There is among them no defect of virtue; nor any mutual rivalry; nor any transgression of rectitude in those seven countries. [There dwell] Magas, Māgadhas, Mānasas, and Mandagas, of whom the first are principally Brāhmans; the second are Kshattriyas; the third are Vaiśyas, and the fourth are Śūdras. By them Viṣṇu, in the form of the Sun, is worshipped with the prescribed ceremonies, and with intent minds." ८१, २१, २२, २३, २४, २५, २६

Of this dvīpa the Mahābhārata tells us, Bhīṣmaparvan, verse 410, that the "people there are holy, and no one dies" (tattra punyāḥ janapadāḥ na tattra mriyate naraḥ). One of the mountains there is called Śyāma (black), "whence men have got this black colour" (verse 420. Tataḥ śyāmatvam āpannāḥ janāḥ janapadeśvara). Dhṛitarāshṭra then says to his informant Sanjaya that he has great doubts as to "how living creatures have become black." Sanjaya promises in the following lines, the sense of which is not very clear, to explain the mystery: 422. Sarveshṇ eva mahārāja dvīpeṣhu Kuru-nandana | gaurāḥ kṛishṇās cha pātango yato varṇāntare dvijāḥ | śyāmo yasmāt pravṛitto vai tat te vakshyāmi Bhārata | But as he proceeds no further, we lose the benefit of his solution of this interesting physiological problem. The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, v. 20, 28, gives the four classes of men in this dvīpa the names of Rītavratas, Satyavratas, Dānavratas, and Anuvratas (tad-varsha-purushāḥ Rītavrata-Satyavrata-Dānavratānuvrata-nāmānaḥ).

This Sāka dvīpa is surrounded by the ocean of milk as by an armlet. This ocean again is encompassed on its outer side by Pushkara dvīpa, which is twice as extensive as Sāka dvīpa.

Of Pushkara dvīpa it is said, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, ii. 4, 28 ff.:

Daśa-varsha-sahasrāṇi tattra jivanti mānavāḥ | nirāmayāḥ viśokāścha

"In this dvīpa men live ten thousand years, free from sickness and sorrow, from affection and hatred. There is no distinction among them of highest and lowest, of killer and slain; there is no envy, nor ill-will, nor fear, nor anger, nor defect, nor covetousness, nor other fault; there is there neither truth nor falsehood. Men there are all of the same appearance, of one form with the gods. The two divisions of this dvīpa have no rules of caste or orders, nor any observances of duty; the three Vedas, the Purāṇas (or, trade), the rules of criminal law and service do not exist. This [dvīpa] is a most excellent terrestrial heaven; where time brings happiness to all, and is exempt from decay, sickness, and all other evils." ¹¹

Etāṁ dvīpeshu sarveshu prajānāṁ Kuru-nandana | brahmacharyyeṇa
satyena prajānāṁ hi damena cha | ārogyāyuhpramāṇābhyāṁ dviguṇāṁ
dviguṇāṁ tataḥ | eko janapado rājan dvīpeshv eteshu Bhūrata | uktāḥ

¹¹ In the same way as Pushkara, the remotest dvīpa, is here described to be the scene of the greatest perfection, we find Homer placing the Elysian plains on the furthest verge of the earth :

ἀλλὰ σ' ἐς Ἑλύσιον πεδῖον καὶ πείρατα γαίης ἀθάνατοι πέμψουσιν, ὅθι ξανθὸς Ῥαδάμανθους, τῇ περ ῥηίστη βιοτῇ πέλει ἀνθρώποισιν.
 οὐ νικητὸς, οὐτ' ἄρ' χειμῶν πολὺς οὔτε ποτ' ὕμβρος, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ Ζεφύροιο λυγρὸ πνέοντασ' αἴητας Ὠκεανὸς ἀνίησιν ἀναψύχειν ἀνθρώπους. Odyssey Δ. 563-568.

"Thee, favoured man, to earth's remotest end,
 The Elysian plain, the immortal gods shall send,—
 That realm which fair-haired Rhadamanthys sways,
 Where, free from toil, men pass their tranquil days.
 No tempests vex that land, no rain, nor snow;
 But ceaseless Zephyrs from the ocean blow,
 Which sweetly breathe and gently stir the air,

*janapadāḥ yeshu karma chaikam pradṛśyate | īśvaro daṇḍam udyamya

“Thus in all these dvīpas each country doubly exceeds the former one in the abstinence, veracity, and self-restraint, in the health and the length of life of its inhabitants. In these dvīpas the people is one, and one sort of action is perceivable. Prajāpati, the lord, wielding his sceptre, himself governs these dvīpas. He, the king, the auspicious one (śīva), the father, along with the patriarchs, protects all creatures, ignorant as well as learned.” (So there are differences of intellectual condition in these dvīpas after all!) “All these people eat prepared food, which comes to them of itself.”

Pushkara is surrounded by a sea of fresh water equal to itself in compass. What is beyond is afterwards described :

V.P. ii. 4, 37. Svādūdakasya parato dṛśyate loka-saṁsthitiḥ | dviguṇā, kāncanā bhūmiḥ sarva-jantu-vivarjita | 38. Lokāloka tataḥ śailo yojanāyuta-vistṛitaḥ | uchchrāyēnāpi tāvanti sahasrāṇy achalo hi saḥ | tatas tamaḥ samāvṛitya taṃ sailaṃ sarvataḥ sthitam | tamaś chāṇḍa-kaṭāhena samantāt parisveshitaḥ |

“On the other side of the sea is beheld a golden land of twice its extent, but without inhabitants. Beyond that is the Lokāloka mountain, which is ten thousand yojanas in breadth, and as many thousands in height. It is on all sides invested with darkness. This darkness is encompassed by the shell of the mundane egg.”¹²

shell of the mundane egg is said to be outside of the seven spheres of which this system is composed :

V.P. ii. 7, 19: Ēṭe sapta mayā lokāḥ Maittreya kathitās tava | pātālāni cha saptaiva brahmāṇḍasyaiṣha vistaraḥ | etad aṇḍa-kaṭūhena tiryak chorddhvam adhas tathā | kapitthasya yathā vījaṁ sarvato vai samāvṛitam |

“These seven spheres have been described by me ; and there are also seven Pātālas : this is the extent of Brahmā’s egg. The whole is surrounded by the shell of the egg at the sides, above, and below, just as the seed of the wood-apple (is covered by the rind).”

This system, however, it appears, is but a very small part of the whole of the universe :

“There are thousands and ten thousands of thousands of such mundane eggs ; nay hundreds of millions of millions.”

Indian mythology, when striving after sublimity, and seeking to excite astonishment, often displays an extravagant and puerile facility in the fabrication of large numbers. But, in the sentence last quoted, its conjectures are substantially in unison with the discoveries of modern astronomy ; or rather, they are inadequate representations of the simple truth, as no figures can express the contents of infinite space.

The representations of the Kṛita yuga are not always consistent. In the Dronaparvan, verses 2023 ff. a story is told of King Akampana, who lived in that age, and who was yet so far from enjoying the tranquillity generally predicated of that happy time that he was overcome by his enemies in a battle, in which he lost his son, and suffered in consequence severe affliction.

It is similarly said in the Dronaparvan, verse 2395 : Kshatād naś trāyate sarvān ity evaṃ kshattriyo 'bhavat | "He (Prithu) became a Kshattriya by delivering us all from injuries." See also Sāntiparvan, verse 1031.

The Śāntiparvan of the M. Bh., verses 6130 ff., gives a similar description of the original state of all things, and of the birth of Brahmā. Bhishma is the speaker : *Salilaikārnavaṁ tāta purā sarvaṁ abhūd idam | nishprakampam anākāśam anirdēśya-mahitalam | tamasā vṛitam asparśam api gambhīra-darśanam | niśabdam vā 'prameyaṁ cha tatra jajne Pitā-mahaḥ | so 'sṛjad vātam agniṁ cha bhāskaraṁ chāpi vīryavān | ākāśam asṛjadh choddhvaṁ adho bhūmiṁ cha nairṛitīm | nabhaḥ sa-chandra-tāraṁ cha nakshatrāṇi grahāṁs tathā | saṁvatsarān ṛitūn māsān pak-shān atha lavān kṣaṇān | tataḥ śarīraṁ loka-sthāṁ sthāpayitvā Pitā-mahaḥ | janayāmāsa bhagavān puttrān uttama-tejasaḥ | 6135. There Pitāmaha (Brahmā) was born. That mighty god created wind, fire, and the sun, the æther¹ above, and under it the earth belonging to Nirṛiti, the sky, with the moon, stars, constellations, and planets, the years, seasons, months, half-months, and the minute sub-divisions of time. Having established the frame of the universe, the divine Pitāmaha begot sons of eminent splendour, (6135) Marīchi, the rishi Attri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Vasiṣṭha, Angiras, and the mighty lord • Rudra. Daksha, the son of Prachetas, also begot sixty daughters, all of whom were taken by the Brahmarshis² for the purpose of propagating offspring. From these females, all beings, gods, pitṛis, gandharvas, apsarasas, and various kinds of rūkshases, . . . (6149) this entire world, moving and stationary, was produced. 6150. Having formed this creation of living beings, the parent of all worlds established the eternal rule of duty as read in the Veda. To this rule of duty the gods, with their teachers and domestic priests, the Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras, Sādhyas, Maruts, and Aśvins conformed."

Another account of the creation is given in the same book of the M. Bh., verses 7518 ff., where it is ascribed to Vishṇu in the form of Govinda, or Keśava (Kṛishṇa), who is identified with the supreme and universal Purusha. Resting on the waters (7527) he created by his thought Sankarshana, the first-born of all beings. Then (7529) a lotus sprang from his (either Sankarshana's or Vishṇu's) navel, from which again (7530) Brahmā was produced. Brahmā afterwards created his seven mind-born sons, Marichi, Attri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, and Daksha (7534).

In another place also, verses 6208 f., the Anuśāsanaparvan ranks purohitas with Śūdras: Śūdra-karma tu yaḥ kuryād avahāya śva-karma cha | sa vijñeyo yathā śūdro na cha bhojyaḥ kathanchana | chikitsakaḥ kāṇḍapriṣṭhaḥ purādhyaḥkṣaḥ purohitaḥ | sāmvaśaro vṛithādhyāyī sarve te śūdra-sammitāḥ | "He, who, abandoning his own work, does the work of a Śūdra, is to be regarded as a Śūdra, and not to be invited to a feast. I am indebted to Professor Max Müller for pointing out to me two passages in Indian commentators in which Manu is spoken of as a Kshattriya. The first is from Madhusūdana Sarasvatī's Commentary on the Bhagavad-gītā, iv. 1. The words of the text are these: Srī-Bhagavān uvācha | imaṁ Vivasvate yogam proktavān aham avyayam | Vivasvān Manave prāha Manur Ikshvākave 'bravīt | evam paramparā-prāptam imaṁ rājārshayo viduḥ | sa kāleneha mahatā yogo naśṭhaḥ parantapa | sa evāyam mayū te 'dya yogam proktaḥ purātanaḥ | bhakto 'si me sakhā cheti rahasyam etad uttamam | “The divine Being (Kṛishṇa) said: I declared to Vivasvat (the Sun) this imperishable Yoga-doctrine. Vivasvat told it to (his son) Manu; and Manu to (his son) Ikshvāku. Thus do royal rishis know it as handed down by tradition. Through lapse of time however it was lost. I have to day therefore revealed to thee (anew) this ancient system, this most excellent mystery; for thou art devoted to me and my friend.”

On this Madhusūdana remarks: “Vivasvate” sarva-kshattriya-vaṁśa-vija-bhūtāya Ādityāya proktavān | “‘I declared it to Vivasvat’ i.e. to Āditya (the Sun) who was the source of the whole Kshattriya race.”

The second passage is from Someśvara's ṭīkā on Kumārila Bhaṭṭa's Mimāṃsa-vārttika. I must, however, first adduce a portion of the text of the latter work which forms the subject of Someśvara's annotation. For a copy of this passage, which is otherwise of interest, I am indebted to Professor Goldstücker, who has been kind enough to copy it for me.² The first extract refers to Jaimini's Sūtra, i. 3, 3; where the question under discussion is, in what circumstances authority can be assigned to the Smṛiti when the Śruti, or Veda, is silent. After some other remarks Kumāṛila proceeds: S'ākyādi-vachanāni tu katipaya-dama-dānādi vachana-varjjaṁ sarvāny eva samasta-chaturdaśa-vidyā-sthāna-viruddhāni trayī-mārga-vyutthita-viruddhācharanaiḥ cha Buddhādidhiḥ prañitāni trāyī-bāhyebhyaś chaturtha-varṇa-niravasita-prāyebhyo vyāmūḍhebhyaḥ samarthitāni iti na veda-mūlatvena sambhāvyanṭe | svadharmātikramena cha yena kshattriyena satū pravakṛitva-pratigrahaḥ pratipannau sa dharmam ariplutam upadekshyati iti kaḥ samāśvāsaḥ | uktaṁ cha "para-loka-viruddhāni kurvāṇāṁ dūratas tyajet | ātmānaṁ yo viśāmdhatte so 'nyasmai syāt kathaṁ hitaḥ" iti | Buddhādeḥ punar ayam evātikramo 'lan-kāra-buddhaḥ sthito yena evam āha "kali-kalusha-kṛitāni yāni loke mayi nipatantu | vimuchyātām tu lokāḥ" iti | sa kila loka-hitārtha-kshattriya-dharmam atikramya brāhmaṇa-vṛttim pravakṛitvam pratipadya prati-shedhātikramāsamarthair brāhmaṇair ananūśiṣṭāṁ dharmam bāhyajanān anusāsad dharma-pīḍam apy ātmano 'ngikṛitya parānugrahaṁ kṛitavān ity evaṁvidhair eva guṇaiḥ stūyate | tad-anuśiṣṭānusārīnaś cha sarve eva śruti-smṛiti-vihita-dharmātikramena vyavaharanto viruddhācharatvena jñāyanṭe | tena pratyakṣayā śrūtyā virodhe grantha-kārināṁ grahātrācharitṛiṇāṁ grantha-prāmāṇya-bādhanam | na hy eṣhām pūrvoktena nyāyena śruti-pratibaddhānāṁ sva-mūla-śruty-anumāna-samarthyam asti | "But the precepts of Śākya and others, with the exception of a few enjoining dispassion, liberality, etc., are all contrary to the fourteen classes of scientific treatises, and composed by Buddha and others whose practice was opposed to the law of the three Vedas, as well as calculated for men belonging mostly to the fourth caste who are excluded from the Vedas, debarred from pure observances, and deluded:—consequently, they cannot be presumed to be founded on the Veda. And what confidence can we have that one (i.e. Buddha) who being a Kshattriya,³ transgressed the obligations of his own order, and assumed the function of teaching and the right to receive presents, would inculcate a pure system of duty? For it has been said: 'Let everyone avoid a man who practises acts destructive to future happiness.' How can he who ruins himself be of any benefit to others?' And yet this very transgression of Buddha and his followers is conceived as being a feather in his cap; since he spoke thus, 'Let all the evils resulting from the sin of the Kali age fall upon me; and let the world be redeemed.' Thus, abandoning the duties of a Kshattriya, which are beneficial to the world, assuming the function of a teacher which belongs only to the Brāhmana, and instructing men who were out of the pale in duty which was not taught by the Brāhmana who could not transgress the prohibition (to give such instruction), he sought to do a kindness to others, while consenting to violate his own obligations; and for such merits as these he is praised! And all who follow his instructions, acting in contravention of the prescriptions of the Sruti and Smṛiti, are notorious for their erroneous practices. Hence from the opposition in which the authors of these books, as well as those who receive and act according to them, stand to manifest injunctions of the Veda, the authority of these works is destroyed.⁴ For since they are by the above reasoning opposed by the Veda, the inference that they rest upon independent Vedic authority of their own possesses no force."

The next passage is from Kumārila's Vārttika on Jaimini's Sūtra, i. 3, 7: *Vedenaiṣābhyanyujnātā yeshām eva pravaktritū | nityānāmabhidheyānām manvantara-yugādishu | teshām riparivartteshu kurratūm dharmasamhitāḥ | vachanāni pramāṇāni nānyeshām iti niśchayaḥ | tathā cha Manur ṛichāḥ sāmīdhenyo bhavanti ity asya vidher vākyaśeṣe śrūyate "Manur vai yat kinchid avadat tad bheshajam bheshajatāyai"*⁵ iti prāyaścittādyupadeśa-vachanam pāpa-vyādher bheshajam | "It is certain that the precepts of those persons only whose right to expound the eternal meanings of scripture in the different manvantaras and yugas has been recognized by the Veda, are to be regarded as authoritative, when in the revolutions (of those great mundane periods) they compose codes of law. Accordingly by way of complement to the Vedic passage containing the precept (vidhi) beginning 'there are these sāmīdheni verses of Manu' it is declared, 'whatever Manu said is a healing remedy;' i.e. his prescriptions in regard to expiatory rites, etc., are remedies for the malady of sin."

From Someśvara's elaborate comment on the former of these two passages I need only extract the following sentences: Etad abhiyuktavachanena draḍhayati "uktaṁ cha" | Manos tu kshattriyyasyāpi pravakṛitvam "yad vai kinchid Manur avadat tad bheshajam" iti vedānujñātātīvā aviruddham ity āśayaḥ | "This he confirms by the words of a learned man which he introduces by the phrase 'for it has been said.' But although Manu was a Kshattriya, his assumption of the office of teacher was not opposed to the Veda, because it is sanctioned by the Vedic text 'whatever Manu said was a remedy:' Such is the purport."

Yas tityāja sachi-vidam, etc. This verse is quoted in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (pp. 159 f. of Cal. edit.), which, however, reads sakhi-vidam instead of sachi-vidam. An explanation of the passage is there given by the Commentator.

Professor Weber considers (Indische Studien, i. 52) that "the yaudhāḥ and the arhantah were the forerunners of the Rājanyas and the Brāhmanas." See the whole passage below in the note on p. 366.

Compare Āśvalāyana's Śrauta-Sūtras, i. 3, 3 and 4, and commentary (p. 22 of Cal. edit.). Prithī Vainya is, as I find from Böhlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v., referred to also in the Atharva-veda, viii. 10, 24. The words are these: Sā udakrāmat sā manushyān āgachhat | tām manushyāḥ upāhvayanta "irāvaty ehi" iti | tasyāḥ Manur Vaivasvato vatsaḥ āsit prithivī pātram | tām Prithī Vainyo 'dhok tām kṛishīm cha sasyaṁ cha adhok | te kṛishīm cha sasyaṁ cha manushyāḥ upajīvanti ityādi | "She (i.e. Virūj) ascended: she came to men. Men called her to them, saying, 'Come, Irāvati.' Manu Vaivasvata was her calf, and the earth her vessel. Prithī Vainya milked her; he milked from her agriculture and grain. Men subsist on agriculture and grain."

See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i. pp. 183 ff., where Prithu's (this is the Puranic form of the word) reign is described. It is there stated that this king, "taking the lord Manu Svāyambhuva for his calf, milked from the earth into his own hand all kinds of grain from a desire to benefit his subjects" (V.P. i. 13, 54. Sa kalpayitvā vatsaṁ tu Manuñ Scāyambhuvam prabhum | sve pānau prithivī-nātho dudoha prithivīm Prithuḥ | 55. Sasya-jātāni sarvāni prajānām hita-kāmyayā). See also the passage quoted from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa by the editor Dr. Hall in pp. 189 ff. The original germ of these accounts is evidently to be found in the passage of the Atharva-veda, from which the short text I have cited is taken.

The Srinjayas are mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xii. 9, 3, 1 ff. and 13 (see Weber's Indische Studien, i. 207), as opposing without effect the celebration of a sacrifice which was proposed to be offered for the restoration of Duṣṭaritu Paunsāyana to his ancestral kingdom.

Professor Aufrecht has pointed out to me a short passage in the Taittirīya Saṁhitā, iii. 1, 7, 2, in which Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni are mentioned together as contending with Vasishṭha: Viśvāmitra-Jamadagni Vasishṭhena asparddhetām | sa etaj Jamadagnir viḥavyam apaśyat | tena vai sa Vasishṭhasya indriyaṁ vīryam arinkta | yad viḥavyaṁ śasyate indriyam eva tad vīryaṁ yajamāno bhrātrīryasya vṛinkte | yasya bhūyāṁso yajna-kratavaḥ ity āhuḥ sa deratāḥ vṛinkte | "Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni were contending with Vasishṭha. Jamadagni beheld this viḥavya text, and with it he destroyed the vigour and energy of Vasishṭha. When the viḥavya is recited, then the sacrificer destroys the vigour and energy of his enemy. He whose oblations and all attendant ceremonies are superior destroys the gods (of his opponent)."

In a notice of Lāṭyāyana's Sūtras, in Indische Studien, i. 50, Professor Weber observes: "At the same time I remark here that the presence of Sūdras at the ceremonies, although on the outside of the sacrificial ground, was permitted—a point which results from the fact that during the dīkshā they were not to be addressed (iii. 3). Here and there a Sūdra appears as acting, although in a degraded position. Compare iv. 3, 5: āryo (i.e. vaiśyaḥ, according to the commentator Agnisvāmin) antarvedi . . . bahirvedi sūdraḥ | āryābhāve yaḥ kaś

oḥa āryyo varṇaḥ (brāhmaṇo vā kṣhattriyo vā, Agnisvāmin). Thus their position, like that of the Nishādas, was not so wretched as it became afterwards. Toleration was still necessary; indeed the strict Brahmanical principle was not yet generally recognized among the nearest Arian races. This is shown by the following fact. Before entering on the Vrātya-stomas, Lāṭyāyana treats, viii. 5, of an imprecatory rite called Syena (the falcon), which is not taught in the Panchaviṃśa, but in the Shaḍviṃśa (iv. 2). The tribes mentioned by Pāṇini, v. 3, 112 ff., are there described: Vrāṭinānām⁶ yaudhānām puttrān anūchānān ṛitviḥ vṛiṇāta syenasya | “arhatām eva” *iti Sāṇḍilyaḥ*⁷ | (“Let the learned sons of warriors, who live by the profession of Vrātas, be chosen as priests for the Syena. ‘The sons of arhats only’ [should be chosen] says Sāṇḍilya”). “Whilst,” proceeds Prof. W., “in the beginning of the Sūtra nine things are required for a ṛitvij (priest), viz. that he should be (1) ārsheyaḥ (ā dasamāt purushād aryavachhinnam ārshaṁ yasya, ‘able to trace his unbroken descent for ten generations in the family of a rishi’); (2) anūchānaḥ (śishyebhyo vidyā-sampradānaṁ yaḥ kṛitavān, “one who has imparted knowledge to pupils’); (3) sādhu-charaṇaḥ (shaṭsu brāhmaṇa-karmasv avasthitaḥ praśasta-karmā, ‘one who has practised the six duties of a Brāhmaṇa, a man of approved conduct’); (4) vāgmī (eloquent); (5) anyūnāngaḥ (without deficiency in his members); (6) anātiriktāngaḥ (without superfluous members); (7) dvesataḥ (equal in length above and below the navel); (8) anātikṛishṇaḥ; (9) anātiśvetaḥ (na atibālo na ativridhhaḥ, ‘neither too young nor too old’),—Lāṭyāyana here contents himself with putting forward one only of these requirements, the second (i.e. that the priest should be ‘learned’), as essential. The title Arhat for teacher, which was at a later period used exclusively by the Buddhists, is found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, (iii. 4, 3, 6) and the Taittirīya Aranyaka,⁸ and is known in the Gaṇa Brāhmaṇa (Pāṇini, v. 1, 124). The Yaudhāḥ and Arhantaḥ are the forerunners of the Rājanyas and the Brāhmins. According to Professor Weber, Ind. St. i. 207, note, a Sthapati "means, according to Kātyāyana's Srauta Sūtras, xxii. 11, 11, a Vaiśya, or any other person (according to Kātyāyana, i. 1, 12, he may even be a Nishāda) who has celebrated the Gosava sacrifice, after being chosen by his subjects to be their ruler."

If further proof of this sense of brahmarshi be wanted, it may be found in the words viprarshi and dvijarshi, which must be regarded as its synonymes, and which can only mean "Brāhman-rishi."

The same verse with some variations is repeated in the Anuśāsana-parvan, verse 6262 : Rājā Mitrasahaś chaiva Vaśishṭhāya mahātmane | Madayantīm priyām bhāryyām datvā cha tridivām gataḥ | "And king Mitrasaha, having bestowed his dear wife Madayanti on the great Vaśishṭha, went to heaven." Here, it will be observed, the name Madayanti is correctly given.

well known, chiefly to the students of Buddhism. Sūyana explains it by "a great Brāhman, or a Brāhman (in general)." In reference to another part of the sentence in which this word occurs, Dr. Haug adds : "That cows were killed at the time of receiving a most distinguished guest is stated in the Smṛitis. But as Sūyana observes (which entirely agrees with opinions held now-a-days), this custom belongs to former yugas (periods of the world). Thence the word goghna, i.e. 'cowkiller,' means in the more ancient Sanskrit books 'a guest' (see the commentators on Pāṇini, 3, 4, 73) for the reception of a high guest was the death of the cow of the house."

The first is recorded in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 6, 1, 2 ff.; where it is stated that six Brāhmans, who were at issue with one another regarding Vaiśvānara (Agni), and were aware that king Aśvapati the Kaikeya was well informed on the subject, repaired to him for instruction and requested that he would treat them as his pupils. He first asked them 'if they were not themselves learned in the Veda as well as the sons of learned men, and how they could in that case come to consult him' ("Yan nu bhagavanto'nūchānāḥ anūchāna-putrāḥ | kim idam" iti). They, however, persisted in their request, when he asked them severally what they considered Vaiśvānara to be, expressed his concurrence in their replies, though all different, as partial solutions of the question, and ended by giving them some further insight into the subject of their enquiry. The second instance is taken from the Chhāndogya Upanishad, i. 8, 1, which commences thus: Trayo ha udgīthe kuśalāḥ bābhūvaḥ S'ilakaḥ S'ālāvatyas Chaikitāyano Dālbhyaḥ Pravāhaṇo Jaivalir iti | te ha ūchur "udgīthe kathām vadāma" iti | 2. "Tathā" iti ha samupaviśuḥ | sa ha Pravāhaṇo Jaivalir uvācha "bhagavantū agre vadatām | brāhmaṇayor vadator vāchaṁ śrośhyāmi" iti | "Three men were skilled in the Udgītha, S'ilaka Sālāvatyā, Chaikitāyana Dālbhya, and Pravāhaṇa Jaivali. They said, 'We are skilled in the Udgītha; come let us discuss it.' (Saying) 'so be it,' they sat down. Pravāhaṇa Jaivali said, 'Let your reverences speak first; I will listen to the discourse of Brāhmans discussing the question.'" S'ilaka Sālāvatyā then asked Chaikitāyana Dālbhya a series of questions; but was dissatisfied with his final reply. Being interrogated in his turn by Chaikitāyana, S'ilaka answered; but his answer was disapproved by Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, who finally proceeded to supply the proper solution.

In two other passages the same Upanishad, as quoted above in p. 195, and explained by the commentator, recognizes the fact of sacred science being possessed, and handed down, by Kshattriyas. See also the note on p. 220, above, p. 508. The doctrines held by Rājanyas are not, however, always treated with such respect. In the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, viii. 1, 4, 10, an opinion in regard to breath (prāṇa) is attributed to Svārijit Nāgnajita, or Nagnajit the Gāndhāra, of which the writer contemptuously remarks that "he said this like a Rājanya" (Yat sa tad uvācha rājanyabandhur iva tv eva tad uvācha); and he then proceeds to refute it (see Weber's Indische Studien, i. 218). It appears that the Smṛiti recognizes the possibility of a Brāhman becoming in certain circumstances the pupil of a Rājanya or a Vaiśya. Thus Manu says, ii. 241 : Abrahmaṇād adhyayanam āpat-kāle vidhīyate | anuvrajyā cha śuśrūṣhā yāvad adhyayanam guroḥ | 242. Nābrāhmaṇe gurau śiṣhyo vāsam ātyantikaṁ vaset | brāhmaṇe chānanūchāne kāṅkṣan gatim anuttamām | 241. "In a time of calamity it is permitted to receive instruction from one who is not a Brāhman; and to wait upon and obey such a teacher during the period of study. 242. But let not a pupil, who aims at the highest future destiny, reside for an excessive period with such a teacher who is not a Brāhman, or with a Brāhman who is not learned in the Veda." Kullūka explains this to mean that when a Brāhman instructor cannot be had a Kshattriya may be resorted to, and in the absence of a Kshattriya, a Vaiśya.

When I wrote this note, I did not advert to the difficulty presented by the word didāsithā, which has at once the form of a desiderative verb, and of the second person of the perfect tense. Būhtlingk and Roth, s.v. dā, on a comparison of the two parallel passages, suppose that the present reading of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is corrupt as regards this word, which, as they quote it, is didāsithā. May not the correct reading be dādāsithā from the root dās?

The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2, 4, 4 f., says of Prajāpati : So 'surān aśrijata | tad asya apriyam āsit | 5. Tad durvarṇaṁ hiranyam abhavat | tad durvarṇasya hiranyasya janma | . . . sa devān aśrijata tad asya priyam āsit | tat suvarṇasya hiranyasya janma | "He created Asuras. That was displeasing to him. 5. That became the precious metal with the bad colour (silver). This was the origin of silver. . . . He created gods. That was pleasing to him. That became the precious metal with the good colour. (gold). That was the origin of gold."

TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES.

"A knowledge of the commonplace, at least, of Oriental literature, philosophy, and religion is as necessary to the general reader of the present day as an acquaintance with the Latin and Greek classics was a generation or so ago. Immense strides have been made within the present century in these branches of learning; Sanskrit has been brought within the range of accurate philology, and its invaluable ancient literature thoroughly investigated; the language and sacred books of the Zoroastrians have been laid bare; Egyptian, Assyrian, and other records of the remote past have been deciphered, and a group of scholars speak of still more recondite Accadian and Hittite monuments; but the results of all the scholarship that has been devoted to these subjects have been almost inaccessible to the public because they were contained for the most part in learned or expensive works, or scattered throughout the numbers of scientific periodicals. Messrs. TRÜBNER & Co., in a spirit of enterprise which does them infinite credit, have determined to supply the constantly-increasing want, and to give in a popular, or, at least, a comprehensive form, all this mass of knowledge to the world."—Times.

THE INDIAN EMPIRE : ITS PEOPLE, HISTORY, AND PRODUCTS.

By the HON. SIR W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D.,

Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Being a Revised Edition, brought up to date, and incorporating the general results of the Census of 1881.

"It forms a volume of more than 700 pages, and is a marvellous combination of literary condensation and research. It gives a complete account of the Indian Empire, its history, peoples, and products, and forms the worthy outcome of seventeen years of labour with exceptional opportunities for rendering that labour fruitful. Nothing could be more lucid than Sir William Hunter's expositions of the economic and political condition of India at the present time, or more interesting than his scholarly history of the India of the past."—The Times.

ESSAYS ON THE SACRED LANGUAGE, WRITINGS, AND RELIGION OF THE PARSIS.

By MARTIN HAUG, PH.D.,

Late of the Universities of Tübingen, Göttingen, and Bonn; Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies, and Professor of Sanskrit in the Poona College.

EDITED AND ENLARGED BY DR. E. W. WEST.

To which is added a Biographical Memoir of the late Dr. HAUG by Prof. E. P. EVANS.

- I. History of the Researches into the Sacred Writings and Religion of the Parsis, from the Earliest Times down to the Present.
- II. Languages of the Parsi Scriptures.
- III. The Zend-Avesta, or the Scripture of the Parsis.
- IV. The Zoroastrian Religion, as to its Origin and Development.

“ ‘Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis,’ by the late Dr. Martin Haug, edited by Dr. E. W. West. The author intended, on his return from India, to expand the materials contained in this work into a comprehensive account of the Zoroastrian religion, but the design was frustrated by his untimely death. We have, however, in a concise and readable form, a history of the researches into the sacred writings and religion of the Parsis from the earliest times down to the present—a dissertation on the languages of the Parsi Scriptures, a translation of the Zend-Avesta, or the Scripture of the Parsis, and a dissertation on the Zoroastrian religion, with especial reference to its origin and development.”—Times.

TEXTS FROM THE BUDDHIST CANON

With Accompanying Narratives.

Translated from the Chinese by S. BEAL, B.A., Professor of Chinese, University College, London.

The Dhammapada, as hitherto known by the Pali Text Edition, as edited by Fausböll, by Max Müller's English, and Albrecht Weber's German translations, consists only of twenty-six chapters or sections, whilst the Chinese version, or rather recension, as now translated by Mr. Beal, consists of thirty-nine sections. The students of Pali who possess Fausböll's text, or either of the above-named translations, will therefore needs want Mr. Beal's English rendering of the Chinese version; the thirteen above-named additional sections not being accessible to them in any other form; for, even if they understand Chinese, the Chinese original would be unobtainable by them.

“Mr. Beal's rendering of the Chinese translation is a most valuable aid to the critical study of the work. It contains authentic texts gathered from ancient canonical books, and generally connected with some incident in the history of Buddha. Their great interest, however, consists in the light which they throw upon everyday life in India at the remote period at which they were written, and upon the method of teaching adopted by the founder of the religion. The method employed was principally parable, and the simplicity of the tales and the excellence of the morals inculcated, as well as the strange hold which they have retained upon the minds of millions of people, make them a very remarkable study.”—Times.

“Mr. Beal, by making it accessible in an English dress, has added to the great services he has already rendered to the comparative study of religious history.”—Academy.

“Valuable as exhibiting the doctrine of the Buddhists in its purest, least adulterated form, it brings the modern reader face to face with that simple creed and rule of conduct which won its way over the minds of myriads, and which is now nominally professed by 145 millions, who have overlaid its austere simplicity with innumerable ceremonies, forgotten its maxims, perverted its teaching, and so inverted its leading that a religion whose founder denied a God, now worships that founder as

THE HISTORY OF INDIAN LITERATURE.

By ALBRECHT WEBER.

Translated from the Second German Edition by JOHN MANN, M.A., and THÉODOR ZACHARIAE, Ph.D., with the sanction of the Author.

Dr. BUHLER, Inspector of Schools in India, writes:—"When I was Professor of Oriental Languages in Elphinstone College, I frequently felt the want of such a work to which I could refer the students."

Professor COWELL, of Cambridge, writes:—"It will be especially useful to the students in our Indian colleges and universities. I used to long for such a book when I was teaching in Calcutta. Hindu students are intensely interested in the history of Sanskrit literature, and this volume will supply them with all they want on the subject."

Professor WHITNEY, Yale College, Newhaven, Conn., U.S.A., writes:—"I was one of the class to whom the work was originally given in the form of academic lectures. At their first appearance they were by far the most learned and able treatment of their subject; and with their recent additions they still maintain decidedly the same rank."

"Is perhaps the most comprehensive and lucid survey of Sanskrit literature extant. The essays contained in the volume were originally delivered as academic lectures, and at the time of their first publication were acknowledged to be by far the most learned and able treatment of the subject. They have now been brought up to date by the addition of all the most important results of recent research."—Times.

A SKETCH OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES OF THE EAST INDIES.

By ROBERT N. CUST.

The Author has attempted to fill up a vacuum, the inconvenience of which pressed itself on his notice. Much had been written about the languages of the East Indies, but the extent of our present knowledge had not even been brought to a focus. It occurred to him that it might be of use to others to publish in an arranged form the notes which he had collected for his own edification.

"Supplies a deficiency which has long been felt."—Times.

"The book before us is then a valuable contribution to philological science. It passes under review a vast number of languages, and it gives, or professes to give, in every case the sum and substance of the opinions and judgments of the best-informed writers."—Saturday Review.

THE BIRTH OF THE WAR-GOD.

A Poem. By KALIDASA.

RALPH T. H. GRIFFITH, M.A.

"A very spirited rendering of the Kumdrasambhava, which was first published twenty-six years ago, and which we are glad to see made once more accessible."—Times.

"Mr. Griffith's very spirited rendering is well known to most who are at all interested in Indian literature, or enjoy the tenderness of feeling and rich creative imagination of its author."—Indian Antiquary.

"We are very glad to welcome a second edition of Professor Griffith's admirable translation. Few translations deserve a second edition better."—Asiatic Researches.

A CLASSICAL DICTIONARY OF HINDU MYTHOLOGY AND RELIGION, GEOGRAPHY, HISTORY, AND

By JOHN DOWSON, M.R.A.S., Late Professor of Hindustani, Staff College.

"This not only forms an indispensable book of reference to students of Indian literature, but is also of great general interest, as it gives in a concise and easily accessible form all that need be known about the personages of Hindu mythology whose names are so familiar, but of whom so little is known outside the limited circle of savants."—Times.

"It is no slight gain when such subjects are treated fairly and fully in a moderate space; and we need only add that the few wants which we may hope to see supplied in new editions detract but little from the general excellence of Mr. Dowson's work."—Saturday Review.

SELECTIONS FROM THE KORAN.

By EDWARD WILLIAM LANE,
Translator of "The Thousand and One Nights;" &c., &c.
A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with an Introduction by STANLEY LANE POOLE.

"... Has been long esteemed in this country as the compilation of one of the greatest Arabic scholars of the time, the late Mr. Lane, the well-known translator of the 'Arabian Nights.' ... The present editor has enhanced the value of his relative's work by divesting the text of a great deal of extraneous matter introduced by way of comment, and prefixing an introduction."—Times.

"Mr. Poole is both a generous and a learned biographer. ... Mr. Poole tells us the facts ... so far as it is possible for industry and criticism to ascertain them, and for literary skill to present them in a condensed and readable form."—Englishman, Calcutta.

Post 8vo, pp. vi.—368, cloth, price 14s.

BEING A SERIES OF IMPRESSIONS, NOTES, AND ESSAYS.

By MONIER WILLIAMS, D.C.L.,
Hon. LL.D. of the University of Calcutta, Hon. Member of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford.

Third Edition, revised and augmented by considerable Additions, with Illustrations and a Map.

"In this volume we have the thoughtful impressions of a thoughtful man on some of the most important questions connected with our Indian Empire. ... An enlightened observant man, travelling among an enlightened observant people, Professor Monier Williams has brought before the public in a pleasant form more of the manners and customs of the Queen's Indian subjects than we ever remember to have seen in any one work. He not only deserves the thanks of every Englishman for this able contribution to the study of Modern India—a subject with which we should be specially familiar—but he deserves the thanks of every Indian, Parsee or Hindu, Buddhist and Moslem, for his clear exposition of their manners, their creeds, and their necessities."—Times.

THE GULISTAN;

OR, ROSE GARDEN OF SHEKH MUSHLIU'D-DIN SADI OF SHIRAZ.

Translated for the First Time into Prose and Verse, with an Introductory Preface, and a Life of the Author, from the Atish Kadah,

By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, C.B., M.A., F.R.S., M.R.A.S.

"It is a very fair rendering of the original."—Times.

"The new edition has long been desired, and will be welcomed by all who take any interest in Oriental poetry. The Gulistan is a typical Persian verse-book of the highest order. Mr. Eastwick's rhymed translation . . . has long established itself in a secure position as the best version of Sadi's finest work."—Academy.

"It is both faithfully and gracefully executed."—Tablet.

A VOLUME OF SKETCHES, HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL.

By J. EDKINS, D.D.

Author of "China's Place in Philology," "Religion in China," &c., &c.

"It contains a vast deal of important information on the subject, such as is only to be gained by long-continued study on the spot."—Athenæum.

"Upon the whole, we know of no work comparable to it for the extent of its original research, and the simplicity with which this complicated system of philosophy, religion, literature, and ritual is set forth."—British Quarterly Review.

"The whole volume is replete with learning. . . . It deserves most careful study from all interested in the history of the religions of the world, and expressly of those who are concerned in the propagation of Christianity. Dr. Edkins notices in terms of just condemnation the exaggerated praise bestowed upon Buddhism by recent English writers."—Record.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; or, Jataka Tales.

The Oldest Collection of Folk-lore Extant :

BEING THE JATAKATTHAVANNANA,

For the first time Edited in the original Pali.

By V. FAUSBOLL;

And Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.

Translation. Volume I.

"These are tales supposed to have been told by the Buddha of what he had seen and heard in his previous births. They are probably the nearest representatives of the original Aryan stories from which sprang the folk-lore of Europe as well as India. The introduction contains a most interesting disquisition on the migrations of these fables, tracing their reappearance in the various groups of folk-lore legends. Among other old friends, we meet with a version of the Judgment of Solomon."—Times.

"It is now some years since Mr. Rhys Davids asserted his right to be heard on this subject by his able article on Buddhism in the new edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'"—Leeds Mercury.

"All who are interested in Buddhist literature ought to feel deeply indebted to Mr. Rhys Davids. His well-established reputation as a Pali scholar is a sufficient guarantee for the fidelity of his version, and the style of his translations is deserving of high praise."—Academy.

"No more competent expositor of Buddhism could be found than Mr. Rhys Davids. In the Jataka book we have, then, a priceless record of the earliest imaginative literature of our race; and . . . it presents to us a nearly complete picture of the social life and customs and popular beliefs of the common people of Aryan tribes, closely related to ourselves, just as they were passing through the first stages of civilisation."—St. James's Gazette.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY;

OR, A THOUSAND AND ONE EXTRACTS FROM THE TALMUD, THE MIDRASHIM, AND THE KABBALAH.

Compiled and Translated by PAUL ISAAC HERSHON,

Author of "Genesis According to the Talmud," &c.

With Notes and Copious Indexes.

"To obtain in so concise and handy a form as this volume a general idea of the Talmud is a boon to Christians at least."—Times.

"Its peculiar and popular character will make it attractive to general readers. Mr. Hershon is a very competent scholar. . . . Contains samples of the good, bad, and indifferent, and especially extracts that throw light upon the Scriptures."—British Quarterly Review.

"Will convey to English readers a more complete and truthful notion of the Talmud than any other work that has yet appeared."—Daily News.

"Without overlooking in the slightest the several attractions of the previous volumes of the 'Oriental Series,' we have no hesitation in saying that this surpasses them all in interest."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

"Mr. Hershon has . . . thus given English readers what is, we believe, a fair set of specimens which they can test for themselves."—The Record.

"This book is by far the best fitted in the present state of knowledge to enable the general reader to gain a fair and unbiassed conception of the multifarious contents of the wonderful miscellany which can only be truly understood—so Jewish pride asserts—by the life-long devotion of scholars of the Chosen People."—Inquirer.

"The value and importance of this volume consist in the fact that scarcely a single extract is given in its pages but throws some light, direct or refracted, upon those Scriptures which are the common heritage of Jew and Christian alike."—John Bull.

"It is a capital specimen of Hebrew scholarship; a monument of learned, loving, light-giving labour."—Jewish Herald.

By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN,

Author of "Yeigo Heikaku Shirashi."

"A very curious volume. The author has manifestly devoted much labour to the task of studying the poetical literature of the Japanese, and rendering characteristic specimens into English verse."—Daily News.

"Mr. Chamberlain's volume is, so far as we are aware, the first attempt which has been made to interpret the literature of the Japanese to the Western world. It is to the classical poetry of Old Japan that we must turn for indigenous Japanese thought, and in the volume before us we have a selection from that poetry rendered into graceful English verse."—Tablet.

"It is undoubtedly one of the best translations of lyric literature which has appeared during the close of the last year."—Celestial Empire.

"Mr. Chamberlain set himself a difficult task when he undertook to reproduce Japanese poetry in an English form. But he has evidently laboured con amore, and his efforts are successful to a degree."—London and China Express.

THE HISTORY OF ESARHADDON (Son of Sennacherib), KING OF ASSYRIA, B.C. 681-668.

Translated from the Cuneiform Inscriptions upon Cylinders and Tablets in the British Museum Collection; together with a Grammatical Analysis of each Word, Explanations of the Ideographs by Extracts from the Bi-Lingual Syllabaries, and List of Eponyms, &c.

By ERNEST A. BUDGE, B.A., M.R.A.S.

Assyrian Exhibitioner, Christ's College, Cambridge.

"Students of scriptural archaeology will also appreciate the 'History of Esarhaddon.'"—Times.

"There is much to attract the scholar in this volume. It does not pretend to popularise studies which are yet in their infancy. Its primary object is to translate, but it does not assume to be more than tentative, and it offers both to the professed Assyriologist and to the ordinary non-Assyriological Semitic scholar the means of controlling its results."—Academy.

"Mr. Budge's book is, of course, mainly addressed to Assyrian scholars and students. They are not, it is to be feared, a very numerous class. But the more thanks are due to him on that account for the way in which he has acquitted himself in his laborious task."—Tablet.

INDIAN POETRY;

Containing a New Edition of the "Indian Song of Songs," from the Sanscrit of the "Gita Govinda" of Jayadeva; Two Books from "The Iliad of India" (Mahabharata), "Proverbial Wisdom" from the Shlokas of the Hitopadesa, and other Oriental Poems.

BY EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Light of Asia."

"In this new volume of Messrs. Trübner's Oriental Series, Mr. Edwin Arnold does good service by illustrating, through the medium of his musical English melodies, the power of Indian poetry to stir European emotions. The 'Indian Song of Songs' is not unknown to scholars. Mr. Arnold will have introduced it among popular English poems. Nothing could be more graceful and delicate than the shades by which Krishna is portrayed in the gradual process of being weaned by the love of from the allurements of the forest nymphs, in whom the five senses are typified."—Times.

"No other English poet has ever thrown his genius and his art so thoroughly into the work of translating Eastern ideas as Mr. Arnold has done in his splendid paraphrases of language contained in these mighty epics."—Daily Telegraph.

"The poem abounds with imagery of Eastern luxuriosity and sensuousness; the air seems laden with the spicy odours of the tropics, and the verse has a richness and a melody sufficient to captivate the senses of the dullest."—Standard.

"The translator, while producing a very enjoyable poem, has adhered with tolerable fidelity to the original text."—Overland Mail.

THE MIND OF MENCIUS;

PHILOSOPHY.

A SYSTEMATIC DIGEST OF THE DOCTRINES OF THE CHINESE PHILOSOPHER MENCIUS.

Translated from the Original Text and Classified, with Comments and Explanations,

By the REV. ERNST FABER, Rhenish Mission Society.

Translated from the German, with Additional Notes,

By the REV. A. B. HUTCHINSON, O.M.S., Church Mission, Hong Kong.

"Mr. Faber is already well known in the field of Chinese studies by his digest of the doctrines of Confucius. The value of this work will be perceived when it is remembered that at no time since relations commenced between China and the West has the former been so powerful—we had almost said aggressive—as now. For those who will give it careful study, Mr. Faber's work is one of the most valuable of the excellent series to which it belongs."—Nature.

THE RELIGIONS OF INDIA.

By A. BARTH.

Translated from the French with the authority and assistance of the Author.

The author has, at the request of the publishers, considerably enlarged the work for the translator, and has added the literature of the subject to date; the translation may, therefore, be looked upon as an equivalent of a new and improved edition of the original.

"Is not only a valuable manual of the religions of India, which marks a distinct step in the treatment of the subject, but also a useful work of reference."—Academy.

"This volume is a reproduction, with corrections and additions, of an article contributed by the learned author two years ago to the 'Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses.' It attracted much notice when it first appeared, and is generally admitted to present the best summary extant of the vast subject with which it deals."—Tablet.

"This is not only on the whole the best but the only manual of the religions of India, apart from Buddhism, which we have in English. The present work . . . shows not only great knowledge of the facts and power of clear exposition, but also great insight into the inner history and the deeper meaning of the great religion, for it is in reality only one, which it proposes to describe."—Modern Review.

"The merit of the work has been emphatically recognised by the most authoritative Orientalists, both in this country and on the continent of Europe. But probably there are few Indianists (if we may use the word) who would not derive a good deal of information from it, and especially from the extensive bibliography provided in the notes."—Dublin Review.

"Such a sketch M. Barth has drawn with a master-hand."—Critic (New York).

THE SĀNKHYA KĀRIKA OF IS'WARA KRISHNA.

An Exposition of the System of Kapila, with an Appendix on the Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika Systems.

By JOHN DAVIES, M.A. (Cantab.), M.R.A.S.

The system of Kapila contains nearly all that India has produced in the department of pure philosophy.

"The non-Orientalist . . . finds in Mr. Davies a patient and learned guide who leads him into the intricacies of the philosophy of India, and supplies him with a clue, that he may not be lost in them. In the preface he states that the system of Kapila is the 'earliest attempt on record to give an answer, from reason alone, to the mysterious questions which arise in every thoughtful mind about the origin of the world, the nature and relations of man and his future destiny,' and in his learned and able notes he exhibits 'the connection of the Sankhya system with the philosophy of Spinoza,' and 'the connection of the system of Kapila with that of Schopenhauer and Von Hartmann.'"—Foreign Church Chronicle.

"Mr. Davies's volume on Hindu Philosophy is an undoubted gain to all students of the development of thought. The system of Kapila, which is here given in a translation from the Sāṅkhya Kārikā, is the only contribution of India to pure philosophy. . . . Presents many points of deep interest to the student of comparative philosophy, and without Mr. Davies's lucid interpretation it would be difficult to appreciate these points in any adequate manner."—Saturday Review.

"We welcome Mr. Davies's book as a valuable addition to our philosophical library."—Notes and Queries.

A MANUAL OF HINDU PANTHEISM. VEDÂNTASÂRA.

Translated, with copious Annotations,

By MAJOR G. A. JACOB,

Bombay Staff Corps; Inspector of Army Schools.

The design of this little work is to provide for missionaries, and for others who, like them, have little leisure for original research, an accurate summary of the doctrines of the Vedânta.

"The modest title of Major Jacob's work conveys but an inadequate idea of the vast amount of research embodied in his notes to the text of the Vedântasâra. So copious, indeed, are these, and so much collateral matter do they bring to bear on the subject, that the diligent student will rise from their perusal with a fairly adequate view of Hindû philosophy generally. His work . . . is one of the best of its kind that we have seen."—Calcutta Review.

"The first instalment of Dr. Hahn's labours will be of interest, not at the Cape only, but in every University of Europe. It is, in fact, a most valuable contribution to the comparative study of religion and mythology. Accounts of their religion and mythology were scattered about in various books; these have been carefully collected by Dr. Hahn and printed in his second chapter, enriched and improved by what he has been able to collect himself."—Prof. Max Müller in the Nineteenth Century.

"Mr. Whinfield has executed a difficult task with considerable success, and his version contains much that will be new to those who only know Mr. Fitzgerald's delightful selection."—Academy.

By JAMES BALLINGAL.

"It places in the hands of the English readers a history of Egyptian Religion which is very complete, which is based on the best materials, and which has been illustrated by the latest results of research. In this volume there is a great deal of information, as well as independent investigation, for the trustworthiness of which Dr. Tiele's name is in itself a guarantee; and the description of the successive religions under the Old Kingdom, the Middle Kingdom, and the New Kingdom, is given in a manner which is scholarly and minute."—Scottishman

YUSUF AND ZULAIKHA.

A POEM BY JAMI.

By RALPH T. H. GRIFFITH.

"Mr. Griffith, who has done already good service as translator into verse from the Sanskrit, has done further good work in this translation from the Persian, and he has evidently shown not a little skill in his rendering the quaint and very oriental style of his author into our more prosaic, less figurative, language. . . . The work, besides its intrinsic merits, is of importance as being one of the most popular and famous poems of Persia, and that which is read in all the independent native schools of India where Persian is taught."—Scotsman.

"An entirely novel method of dealing with philosophical questions and impart a real human interest to the otherwise dry technicalities of the science."—Standard.

THE SARVA-DARSANA - SAMGRAHA ;

OR, REVIEW OF THE DIFFERENT SYSTEMS OF HINDU PHILOSOPHY.

By MADHAVA ACHARYA.

Translated by E. B. COWELL, M.A., Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge, and A. E. GOUGH, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in the Presidency College, Calcutta.

This work is an interesting specimen of Hindu critical ability. The author successively passes in review the sixteen philosophical systems current in the fourteenth century in the South of India; and he gives what appears to him to be their most important tenets.

"The translation is trustworthy throughout. A protracted sojourn in India, where there is a living tradition, has familiarised the translators with Indian thought."—Athenæum.

TIBETAN TALES DERIVED FROM INDIAN SOURCES.

Translated from the Tibetan of the KAH-GYUR.

By F. ANTON VON SCHIEFNER.

Done into English from the German, with an Introduction,

By W. R. S. RALSTON, M.A.

"Mr. Ralston, whose name is so familiar to all lovers of Russian folk-lore, has supplied some interesting Western analogies and parallels, drawn, for the most part, from Slavonic sources, to the Eastern folk-tales, culled from the Kabgyur, one of the divisions of the Tibetan sacred books."—Academy.

"The translation . . . could scarcely have fallen into better hands. An Introduction . . . gives the leading facts in the lives of those scholars who have given their attention to gaining a knowledge of the Tibetan literature and language."—Calcutta Review.

"Ought to interest all who care for the East, for amusing stories, or for comparative folk-lore."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A COLLECTION OF VERSES FROM THE BUDDHIST CANON.

BEING THE NORTHERN BUDDHIST VERSION OF DHAMMAPADA.

Translated from the Tibetan of Bkah-hgyur, with Notes, and Extracts from the Commentary of Pradjuavarman,

By W. WOODVILLE ROCKHILL.

"Mr. Rockhill's present work is the first from which assistance will be gained for a more accurate understanding of the Pali text; it is, in fact, as yet the only term of comparison available to us. The 'Udanavarga,' the Thibetan version, was originally discovered by the late M. Schiefner, who published the Tibetan text, and had intended adding a translation, an intention frustrated by his death, but which has been carried out by Mr. Rockhill. . . . Mr. Rockhill may be congratulated for having well accomplished a difficult task."—Saturday Review.

OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGION TO THE SPREAD OF THE UNIVERSAL RELIGIONS.

By C. P. TIELE.

Doctor of Theology, Professor of the History of Religions in the University of Leyden.

Translated from the Dutch by J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

"Few books of its size contain the result of so much wide thinking, able and laborious study, or enable the reader to gain a better bird's-eye view of the latest results of investigations into the religious history of nations. As Professor Tiele modestly says, 'In this little book are outlines—pencil sketches, I might say—nothing more.' But there are some men whose sketches from a thumb-nail are of far more worth than an enormous canvas covered with the crude painting of others, and it is easy to see that these pages, full of information, these sentences, cut and perhaps also dry, short and clear, condense the fruits of long and thorough research."—Scotsman.

Membre Correspondant de la Société Académique Indo-Chinoise

"As a missionary, it has been part of Dr. Edkins' duty to study the existing religions in China, and his long residence in the country has enabled him to acquire an intimate knowledge of them as they at present exist."—Saturday Review.

"Dr. Edkins' valuable work, of which this is a second and revised edition, has, from the time that it was published, been the standard authority upon the subject of which it treats."—Nonconformist.

Translated by W. W. ROCKHILL, Second Secretary U.S. Legation in China.

"The volume bears testimony to the diligence and fullness with which the author has consulted and tested the ancient documents bearing upon his remarkable subject."—Times.

"Will be appreciated by those who devote themselves to those Buddhist studies which have of late years taken in these Western regions so remarkable a development. Its matter possesses a special interest as being derived from ancient Tibetan works, some portions of which, here analysed and translated, have not yet attracted the attention of scholars. The volume is rich in ancient stories bearing upon the world's renovation and the origin of castes, as recorded in these venerable authorities."—Daily News.

BUDDHIST RECORDS OF THE WESTERN WORLD,

By SAMUEL BEAL, B.A.,

(Trin. Coll., Camb.); R.N. (Retired Chaplain and N.I.); Professor of Chinese, University College, London; Rector of Wark, Northumberland, &c.

An eminent Indian authority writes respecting this work:—"Nothing more can be done in elucidating the History of India until Mr. Beal's translation of the 'Si-yu-ki' appears."

"It is a strange freak of historical preservation that the best account of the condition of India at that ancient period has come down to us in the books of travel written by the Chinese pilgrims, of whom Hwen Tsaang is the best known."—Times.

Post 8vo, pp. xlviii.-398, cloth, price 12s.

THE ORDINANCES OF MANU.

By the late A. C. BURNELL, Ph.D., C.I.E.

Completed and Edited by E. W. HOPKINS, Ph.D., of Columbia College, N.Y.

"This work is full of interest; while for the student of sociology and the science of religion it is full of importance. It is a great boon to get so notable a work in so accessible a form, admirably edited, and competently translated."—Scotsman.

"Few men were more competent than Burnell to give us a really good translation of this well-known law book, first rendered into English by Sir William Jones. Burnell was not only an independent Sanskrit scholar, but an experienced lawyer, and he joined to these two important qualifications the rare faculty of being able to express his thoughts in clear and trenchant English. . . . We ought to feel very grateful to Dr. Hopkins for having given us all that could be published of the translation left by Burnell."—F. MAX MÜLLER in the Academy.

ANCIENT PROVERBS AND MAXIMS FROM BURMESE SOURCES ;

OR, THE NITI LITERATURE OF BURMA.

By JAMES GRAY,

Author of "Elements of Pali Grammar," "Translation of the Dhammapada," &c.

The Sanscrit-Pāli word Niti is equivalent to "conduct" in its abstract, and "guide" in its concrete signification. As applied to books, it is a general term for a treatise which includes maxims, pithy sayings, and didactic stories, intended as a guide to such matters of every-day life as form the character of an individual and influence him in his relations to his fellow-men. Treatises of this kind have been popular in all ages, and have served as a most effective medium of instruction.

Post 8vo, pp. viii. and 346, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE CODE OF MANU.

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXT, WITH CRITICAL NOTES.

By J. JOLLY, Ph.D.,

Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Wurzburg ; late Tagore Professor of Law in the University of Calcutta.

The date assigned by Sir William Jones to this Code—the well-known Great Law Book of the Hindus—is 1250–500 B.C., although the rules and precepts contained in it had probably existed as tradition for countless ages before. There has been no reliable edition of the Text for Students for many years past, and it is believed, therefore, that Prof. Jolly's work will supply a want long felt.
